The Farm Mother to Her Son at College

This Farm Mother's Letters to her boy have set people talking and thinking all over the land. She is a college graduate; he is in college now; those who read her Letters last winter are calling for more of them. So they are continuing this winter, exclusively in the Times. They are real, wholesome, Christian; the topics are practical.

CAN WE TRUST THE OLD TESTAMENT?

Scholarly critics have torn the Old Testament to pieces. They say its history is fable, its God immoral. A brilliant Bible teacher faces these criticisms, answers them with true scholarship, and shows why all the Old Testament is as miraculously infallible as the New.

ARE INFANTS SAVED?

Mere opinion is not of much value or comfort when considering the salvation of those dying in infancy. Only the sure Rock of the Word of God can give assurance here. What does the Bible teach? A remarkable series of satisfying answers is appearing exclusively in the Times by Dr. Lewis Sperry Chafer, President of the Evangelical Theological Colelge; Professor Caspar Wistar Hodge, Princeton Theological Seminary; Dr. James M. Gray, Moody Bible Institute; Dr. A. C. Gaebelein; W. W. Rugh, Bible Institute of Pennsylvania; Dr. William L. Pettingill.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Yokes are made for two—Christ and you."

"If you are a lighthouse you will not need a whistle."

Christian character is a living thing. Everything that is Christian is alive. And the indispensable sign of life is growth.

The best translation of the Bible is its translation into life.

How we use the Lord's Day and how we relate ourselves to His Church are searching questions concerning our loyalty to Jesus Christ.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard
The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,
Are music sent up to God by the lover and the bard;
Enough that he heard it once: we shall hear it by and by.
—Browning.

"Once let God be set forth as He is in Christ, and the life with Him in Christ pictured in its fullness, no man can fail to hear the good news for himself, and for every group to which he belongs. God seen in Christ must in a world like ours be a struggler battling and toiling for His heart's desire; a sufferer pained and thwarted by the selfishness and wrong of His children; a comrade who needs friends and gives Himself to them that in fellowship they may rear the city of His and their hope and faith."

Do not look forward to the changes and chances of this life in fear; rather look to them with full hope that, as they arise, God, whose you are, will deliver you out of them. He has kept you hitherto. Do you but hold fast to his dear hand, and He will lead you safely through all things; and, when you cannot stand, He will bear you in His arms. Do not look forward to what may happen tomorrow. Our Father will either shield you from suffering or He will give you strength to bear it.—Francis de Sales.

Dr. MacInnis says: "When we succeed in changing men's thoughts they soon find a way to change their world. That is why Christ began His work by challenging men to repent which literally means 'change your mind'. He could never start His great kingdom program until He could find men that were willing to change their philosophy."

Do your work—not just your work and no more, but a little more for the lavishing's sake; that little more which is worth all the rest. And if you suffer as you must, and if you doubt as you must, do your work. Put your heart into it and the sky will clear. Then out of your very doubt and suffering will be born the supreme joy of life.—Dean Briggs.

ONWARD!

"Onward, Christian soldier,
Marching as to war,
With the Cross of Jesus
Going on before."
—The Rev. Sabine Baring-Gould, 1864.

"Soldiers of Christ, arise
And put your armour on,
Strong in the strength that God supplies Through His Eternal Son."
—Charles Wesley, 1749.

"Come Holy Spirit, heavenly dove,
With all thy quickening powers;
Kindle a flame of sacred love
In these cold hearts of our's."
—Isaac Watts, 1707.

"I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—St. Paul, to the Philippians.

"So fight the good fight of faith."—St. Paul, Epistle to Timothy.

The parable of the talents—Sweetest, dearest, highest, of all rewards, "Well done, good and faithful servant"; and the slothful and timid cast into outer darkness.

"Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord;
Curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof;
Because they came not to the help of the Lord,
To the help of the Lord against the mighty."
—Deborah's song.

"The children of Ephraim, being armed and carrying bows, Turned back in the day of battle."
—78th psalm of King David.

"'Tis man's bold task the generous strife to try,
But in the hands of God is victory."
—Pope's translation of the Iliad.

"Awake, arise! Or be forever fallen."
—Milton, Paradise Lost.

"Wha would be a traitor knave,
Wha would fill a coward's grave,
Let him turn and flee."
—Robert Bruce before Bannockburn, 1314.

"The king has come to marshall us."—Battle of Ivry, 1590.

"In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress I demand your surrender."—Mad Anthony Wayne at Stoney Point, 1779.

"Be sure you're right. Then, go ahead!"—Davy Crockett, War of 1812.

"Do sign him with the sign of the Cross in token that hereafter he shall not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified and manfully to fight under His Banner."
—Baptismal Service, Episcopal Church.

"And here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee."—Invocation of the Holy Communion.

Favorite order of Stonewall Jackson—"Charge!"

Across the ages and the years the voices of valiant warrior men and women tell us their scorn of cowards and shirkers and traitors, of their own splendid eagerness to fight for God and right and righteousness, for those causes to press onward always, confidently trusting the Almighty Power for victory. Each Sunday the hymns we hear and sing and the services of our Church tell us of the solemn oath of allegiance we have taken and the dedications we have solemnly offered. The Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, recently adjourned at Washington, heard the calling of the mighty and ever-living voices from in the day of battle and skulk to shameful and slothful palians make. Thrilled and fired and inspired, it proclaimed purpose to go onward. If Church and people do not, while armed and with bows in their hands, turn back the past, was aroused to the meaning of the vows Episcoabandonment of the eternal cause for the pleasures and gain and ease of the moment, next year will make a glorious epoch in the history of Christianity, the Church and the world.

War has developed the noblest qualities of humanity—courage, devotion to country, loyalty to comrades, patient endurance of toil and pain. In the service of God these qualities are exalted to the majesty and beauty of divinity. Soldiers of Christ serve a King unseen, follow a Leader who went from this earth more than nineteen centuries ago, their banner, the Cross, long the instrument of hideous cruelty and token of crime and degradation, made by one agony the symbol of Supreme Majesty and glory and deliverance from sin and its miseries and penalties. These soldiers serve not to take life, but to give it; not to destroy, but to build and bless. Their reward is to be betterment here of their fellow men, to continue long after they themselves have gone hence—as their Master left an enduring inheritance of hope and comfort and purification—welcome hereafter into a kingdom of which they may know but dimly, happiness and peace they may foresee only by the faith given them. They carry with them the light and strength and vitalizing influence of the spiritual, to awaken in the material growth and fruiting and blossoming as the sunshine and the kindly rain from above bring fruit and foliage and flower and sustenance from arid earth—wooing and drawing the hidden and dormant seeds to bountiful yielding.

The Convention pledged the Church to a great crusade for Christian unity and revival and for extension of the Christian spirit and purpose in the coming year. All conditions tell us the time for such a crusade is here. The conscience of the world is in revolt against war and slaughter and destruction for determination of quarrels. The world is weary of strifes and hates of nations, races, factions, religions, classes, is craving, as never before, peace and rest and universal brotherhood, the purpose and promise of Christ and Christianity. Statesmen and spokesmen for governments labor, or pretend to labor, to answer that craving and by crafty attempts to obtain selfish advantages, by foolish, crude and shallow tricks of trading and shopworn diplomacy arrive at abject failure and deserve the derision and distrust they incur. Intellectual statesmanship and diplomacy, neglecting recognition of God and obedience to the teachings of His Son, have not brought security nor satisfied the universal longing. The way is wide for soldiers of Christ to rise and march forward.

In our own country prosperity and world dominance are accompanied by their penalties and responsibilities, as it was in Rome, Babylon, Egypt. With increasing wealth and luxury and incitement to self-indulgence come new temptations to laxity in performance of all duties, to irreligion, vanity, vice, disregard of sacred obligations, internal dissensions and feud, contempt for all that merits honor and honor for much that merits contempt, for worship of folly, following after religious and social quackeries and heresies, for acceptance of filth, obscenity and coarseness and scorn of purity and faith. Yielding to these temptations, the ruling nations of the olden times rotted, and in rottenness fell to nothing, with but ruins and sand dunes and desolation to mark where they were. "Judge of the nations, spare us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget."

Never before has any nation or any church known such opportunity and responsibility as this nation and the Episcopal Church face now. Changes in conditions, inventions, discoveries, have changed relations of peoples, classes and individuals to each other. We are in a time of unprecedented confusion, and readjustment, moral, mental, social, political. Mankind everywhere needs and, consciously or unconsciously, seeks spiritual leadership and guidance.

The Episcopal Church, because of its background, its history and long established organization and the intellectual, social and financial power it represents, is especially fitted to lead in the battle for revival of religion and for extension of Christianity to which its General Convention has pledged it. Therefore, it is especially charged with the duty of leading.

Shall we begin to look forward and to prepare now to make the next year beautifully memorable in history? When we consider the development and progress of the last century and the acceleration of both in the last twenty years, we must realize that each year of the near future will bring new amazements. With awed souls, we must comprehend that we may be at the threshold of a dazzling era of spiritual growth and human advancement beyond our dreams and range of thought. If the forward movement is begun, there will be need and call for every soldier of Christ, man and woman. It will be no time for mere lip service. Those who content themselves with that and the perfunctory observance of religious forms and respectabilities will be deserters from the army of the Lord, shirkers turning back in the day of battle. Rectors and pastors will require all the help that can be given them. The help must be active, earnest, faithful, in maintaining constant personal contact with the fallen, the weak, the wavering and straying, holding the flock within the fold, gathering recruits, combatting allurements to evil, saving young and old from constantly besetting snares.

Will the membership of the Church answer the call of the Convention, illustrate in action the pentecostal spirit of the Convention, make the Church the vanguard of the onward sweep for the glory and service of God, the salvation of men, the unification of the divided army of the Cross? The Southern Churchman, speaking for the old-fashioned Episcopalians of the Bible Belt, believes they are ready to fall in at the word, to march forward steadily and sturdily, as their men always have done, forgetting all differences, joining with all brethren who will march with them, going to magnificent achievement for the noblest and highest and most beautiful and sacred of all causes.

Onward!

"One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all and thro' all and in you all."

"Fight the good fight with all thy might,
Christ is Thy strength, and Christ Thy right;
Lay hold on life, and it shall be Thy joy and crown eternally.

"Faint not nor fear, His arms are near;
He changeth not, and thou art dear;
Only believe, and thou shalt see
That Christ is all in all to thee."

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA

Alfred B. Williams

CRUSHED BY THE REVOLUTION.

The Revolution brought new and heavy trouble. The Church of England shared the unpopularity of everything English, although Washington and many of the ablest and most faithful of the patriots were firm in allegiance to it. A large proportion of the clergy and lay membership held to the side of the crown and, consequently, were objects of detestation and persecution, when opportunity offered. Perhaps the majority of the clergy returned to England and some of those who remained resigned their charges. A number of those who joined with the Americans found themselves without congregations or means of support.

In Maryland eighteen Church of England clergymen remained in service. The Church there was in better condition toward the close of the war than it was in Virginia, where the losses by defection to the royal cause had been very heavy and many church buildings were destroyed or dismantled and congregations were scattered.

HOW THE NEW NAME WAS GIVEN.

It was in these conditions that the first Church Convention of which there is record after the disastrous attempts of 1657-58 was called and held, at Chestertown, Kent County, Maryland, November 9, 1780. The result of the war was yet doubtful, Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown coming five months later and final peace being three years away. The body called itself a "conference" and consisted of three of the eighteen clergymen with twenty-four laymen. The purpose was to put the temporal affairs of the Church in order. Under the declaration of rights of 1776 all the real property of the Church was secured to it and by an act of the Maryland Legislature of 1779 the vestries were given control of this property. The conference was suggested by the Rev. Dr. William Smith, recently removed to Maryland from Pennsylvania, a man of remarkable business capacity and fine common sense, who presided. It was realized that the name "Church of England" could not be retained. It is said Dr. Smith suggested the name "Protestant Episcopal", but that it was offered from the floor by the Rev. James Jones Wilmer, rector of Shrewsbury Parish, Kent County. The Church was given its new name and started on its new life.

The next official Church gathering recorded in the histories, like the first, was composed of Maryland Churchmen and was held at Annapolis August 13, 1783, after the peace between the United States and Great Britain. At that time, it is said, there was but one ordained clergyman of the Church in all Pennsylvania. The one sign of Church vitality there now discernible is not indicated by the historians, but is found in a modest notice of a meeting at Christ Church, Philadelphia, March 12, 1783, "for encouragement of Church music". Nothing was printed of the proceedings. In Virginia, where in 1776 there were ninety-five parishes, one hundred and sixty-four churches and chapels and ninety-one ordained clergymen, 1782, end of the Revolutionary War, found twenty-three parishes extinguished, thirty-four others without rectors, but twenty-eight clergymen surviving. The Church there, where it had been strongest, seemed even more thoroughly wrecked and desolate than eighty-two years later at the end of the Civil War.

PROMPT AND FIERCE HOSTILITY.

The Annapolis meeting was the result of the first commencement of Washington College, in May, which drew together most of the remaining clergy and many of the laity of the State. In informal talks at the commencement it was decided to prepare a memorial to be presented to Governor Paca, staunch Churchman, and the Legislature. The Governor, in an address three weeks before, had urged measures for reorganization and restoration of religion. This memorial is quoted in a communication signed "Verus", criticising and assailing it, published in the Maryland Journal and Baltimore Advertiser of December 25, 1784. It was a diplomatic document, evidently prepared with sagacious deference to public sentiment and political conditions. Newspapers of the time were crowded with ferocious demands from the "Sons of Liberty" in New York and elsewhere for persecution of the Tories and all identified with or supposed to be in sympathy with the former British government, in which list the Church of England was included. The fact that many of the Tories and Churchmen were yet in prosperous circumstances, while many of the Whigs, soldiers of the Continental armies among them, were in poverty was a special cause of exasperation and was cited continually as reason for expulsion of everybody and everything English or British and confiscation of their property for patriotic use. New York and Maryland were especially embittered because New Jersey, New Hampshire and Vermont were hospitably and thriftily inviting expelled Tories to become citizens, bringing their personal possessions with them.

The memorial to the Maryland legislature was signed by the Rev. William Smith and Thomas Gates "in behalf of the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church". It said "the happy termination of the war and final recognition of the sovereignty and independence of the United States among the Empires of the world yield probable occasion (which this State hath long desired) of making a present provision, agreeable to the Constitution, for the necessities of religion and advancement of useful knowledge and literature in this rising American empire". It continued by asking that the clergy of the Church be permitted to organize and act "in respect to the Protestant Episcopal Church in this State (to the communion of which so large a proportion of the good people of Maryland belong) to make alterations in the liturgy and services in order to adapt the same to the Revolution and for the purpose of uniformity and concord and to adapt the same to the service of the State; to set a mode, or plan, for keeping up and ordaining a succession of fit and able pastors and ministers for the service of said Church, agreeable to the ancient practice and their professed principles, as well as that universal toleration foreshadowed by the Constitution, to be speedily fixed and determined under the public authority of the State and with the advice and concurrence of the clergy of the said Church".

The petitioners therefore prayed for leave to consult and prepare and offer to the General Assembly a bill "for the good purpose aforesaid". The General Assembly granted the petition and authorized the action suggested. Thereupon the meeting was held at Annapolis. It adopted and promulgated "A declaration of certain fundamental rights and liberties of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Maryland, adopted at a meeting of the clergy of said Church, assembled at Annapolis August 13, 1783, agreeable to a vote of the General Assembly".

This action brought fierce controversy, through the newspapers and in pamphlets. The more intense anti-British elements, members of other denominations and foes of all religions—rapidly becoming more numerous under French atheistic influences—united in fighting the reorganization of the Church of England. One clerical defender of the Annapolis Convention, Dr. Smith, had written that the purposes were to make certain changes in the Book of Common Prayer, to remove doubts regarding the property of the Church and to raise and manage a fund for the relief of widows and children of the clergy and to "establish some exhibitions to assist poor youths preparing for university education". This particularly aroused the ire of "Verus". He quoted and derided declarations and statements and said they were cunningly devised to hide from the public a plot to establish a State Church, with taxation for its support and new oppressions and harrassments for the people.

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

IV.

THE commendation of the author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus is worthy of our consideration at this juncture of the study of our Lord's return, "He that giveth his mind to the law of the Most High, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will seek out the wisdom of the ancients, and be occupied in prophecy". In our swing from the traditions, which some of us have come to almost despise, these words are a condemnation. We have grown not only suspicious of the prophetical, but at times, antagonistic. Our modern movement has deprived us of this precious heritage, which our fathers were charmed to contemplate. If we are moved to this state of mind by the variety of interpretations which clamor for our attention, let us be calmed by the assurance that all our God asks of us is that we shall seek His mind. That we may do, and be safe. We may be certified that no one willingly open-minded to the leading of the Holy Spirit can go far astray. It is not the comprehension of details that God asks, but unity with Himself. And this is beautifully displayed when an Israelite becomes a born-again Christian. Instantly, the Old Testament glows with the light of prophecy fulfilled in the person of our Lord; and what is said in the New Testament of His purpose for the coming age, is cordially accepted without query.

Perhaps our indifference to the acceptance of this truth, lies in our failure to comprehend the meaning of an ancient axiom, promulgated in the third century:

"Distinguish the periods and the Scriptures will harmonize." If we regard the Word of God as one would a flat country, devoid of perspective, barren of lights and shadows, we may not be much impressed with prophetical outlines. But this axiom not only opens to us the possible comprehension of our Lord's plan for the coming ages, but as well, it may quicken our zest in the pursuit of it. We may illustrate: When our Lord stood in the synagogue at Nazareth and read the sixty-first of Isaiah, He divided the prophecy without any comment, stopping at the sentence, "to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord" (Isa. 61:1-3; Luke 4:16-21). Why did He not go on? Because "the day of vengeance" had not yet arrived; nor has it. We are in the age of the acceptance of the Lord (2 Cor. 6:2). The period of judgment (vengeance) cannot be until the King returns, who was once rejected. Terrible are the words of the apostle of grace and love, "When he shall come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel" (2 Thess. 1:7-10). But in this the servant of the Lord is but following his Master's pattern. We may note another instance in our Lord's teaching. He announces that there shall be a resurrection of those who do well and those who do evil (John 5:28, 29). But it is not a synchronous event. He, Himself speaks of the resurrection of the just (Luke 14:14) and of the resurrection, as though it were a special honor to some (Luke 20:35, 36). There is a first resurrection according to Rev. 20:5. It seems to have been this that St. Paul had in mind when he wrote, "If I may by any means attain to the out-resurrection from amongst the dead" (Phil. 3:10, 11). So these two instances in Jesus' teachings afford us an example of what we may call dispensational truth. Surely none of us will repudiate the clear distinction expressed by St. John (John 1:17):

"The Law was given by Moses, but Grace and Truth came by Jesus Christ."

Here are two dispensations clearly defined. They are distinctly marked by characteristics peculiarly adaptive to the age and people to whom they applied. We believers are not under law, but grace (Rom. 6:14). The Old Testament believers were under a law they could not keep (Gal. 3:21-28). Only of the New Testament believer can it be said, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation" (2 Cor. 5:17).

This much conceded, we are prepared to appraise the doctrine of our Lord's promise to come again in the light of the different features of the ages in which He deals with mankind. The day of grace in which we live will not always last. There must come a time when "The door is shut" (Matt. 25:10; Luke 13:24, 25); there is the deep grief of forfeited opportunities (Matt. 25:28-30; Luke 19:24-26). There is the fire of scrutiny which will try every man's work (1 Cor. 3:11-15) while his salvation may barely hold him from destruction.

So, accepting this profoundly sacred truth, that God is both good and just, the New Testament Christians framed their lives to the model of preparing for the august event that should usher the coming of their King to sit upon the throne of His glory (Matt. 25:31). They not only found in this the incentive to the highest and best of which they were capable; but it illumined the darkness, assuaged the pain, gave wings to prayer and steadfastness to faith in the palpitating hope of His promised presence in majestic power. Those were not idle words of St. Peter (1 Peter 1:7), "That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, may be found unto praise and glory and honor at the appearing of Jesus Christ". Numerous passages might be quoted indicative of a similar mind. And most acutely unctuous are the warnings of our Lord, "Watch" (Mark 13:45-47); "Be ye also ready" (Matt. 24:44).

But we are admonished by our modern teachers that the New Testament Christians were mistaken in this preparedness. There must be some answer to that challenge. They did not follow "cunningly devised fables" (2 Peter 1:16); they were deeply submerged in the evident will of God as transmitted to them by revelation and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit; they were assured that the Word of God in which they trusted was an ever-abiding truth (1 Peter 1:25); they were urged not to be defrauded of their confidence by the wilful deceptions of false teachers (Eph. 4: 14-16); they confessed they were but strangers in an alien age, for the hope they had of that better day of visitation (1 Peter 2:11, 12). Every thread of the warp and woof of their testimony and life was indissolubly united to this expectation of the coming of the King.

Why Did He Not Come?

In the first place, He had indicated a delay (Matt. 25: 19); then St. Paul warns the Thessalonian Christians that eager as they should be for the advent of the Lord, the manifestation of the "man of sin" should precede the event (2 Thess. 2:3, 4); and St. Peter knew that he should not live to greet the day (John 21:18, 19; 2 Peter 1:13-15). What then is

The Evident Intention of the New Testament?

First, to supply every generation of believers who should survive the early Christians with a motive of life and a center of hope. We may be assured that they who accept this postulate will more readily dedicate their service to the Lord. Whether or not, the Lord should come, the attitude will be according to the New Testament pattern. And if this vital expectation of His appearing, such as animated the first disciples, shall become a dominant factor in our daily thought and act, we shall not be found lacking as is predicated of the evil servant whom the Lord condemned (Matt. 24:44).

Then, to be daily looking for Him, transfigures all the humble and prosy things which we have to meet. To be so disengaged from the things of this world, as to welcome the thought of His coming, is to be always fitted for the sweetest fellowship with Him, the most effective ministry for Him. What we fear is the scornful position of those who have repudiated the "blessed hope", and find no substitute for the evident state of mind which our Lord would have us possess. It will be acceptable to us if He does not come today. That is with Him. Our concern is to be found looking for Him. His benediction is unqualified, "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh, shall find so doing" (Matt. 24:46). How doing? Not only serving but watching (Matt. 24:42-44). We make this appeal to all who have been unconcerned as to this challenge of our Lord. And whatever may flow from the studies to which our thought is to be directed, this one aim must be preeminent: Obedience to the will of the Lord.

We need hardly note that to be looking for the Lord is infinitely more winsome than preparing for death. If He should tarry, the latter will be our estate; but if He should come, that motive would not be altogether fitting; for our translation to meet Him in the air (1 Thess. 4:13-18) is superlatively more exalted than to get ready for the grim reaper. Therefore, may we come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall confirm us unto the end, blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 1:7, 8).

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart", Psalm 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by H. W. Stock:

> "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof." Romans 13:14.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

EVENING IV.

O LORD GOD, our Heavenly Father, our Protector, and and our Guide, our Counsellor and never-failing friend: we humbly acknowledge Thy goodness and loving kindness to us during the past day, and our entire dependence on Thee for life and breath and all things. Accept, we pray Thee, our humble thanks. Forgive us all that we have done or left undone contrary to Thy righteous will. Put into our hearts pure and perfect love to Thee. Make us to grow daily more and more desirous of Thy love, and more and more afraid of Thy displeasure. Make us continually more devoted to Thy commandments and statutes and judgments and more earnestly desirous of Thy promises. Through Thy blessed Son our Saviour, who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, let us draw near to Thee in lowly, devout, and loving service. Help us, with all our souls, to seek Thy truth and righteousness, and by all Thy visitations and tender mercies confirm us as Thine own. Make us habitually to humble and deny ourselves: to be kind and considerate to the poor, the neglected, and the suffering, and tenderly to care for all the brethren of our Lord: to do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with our God. Help us to stop our ears from hearing of blood, and shut our eyes from seeing evil. Let us turn away our minds from vanity and folly, and steadfastly resist all gifts and enticements that may blind our eyes or destroy our hearts, or lead us into sin. Let us love the place where Thine honor dwelleth, and delight in Thy holy Sabbaths.

Heavenly Father, let the mind of our Lord Jesus Christ be in us. Make us to be poor in spirit, that Thy kingdom may be ours: deeply sorry for our sins and for the misery of our race, that we may be comforted in Thee. Make us gentle and meek, that we may pass our days in godly quietness. May we hunger and thirst for Thy righteousness, that we may be filled. Make us merciful and forgiving, that we may have Thy mercy and pity; make us pure in heart, that we may see and know Thee, and peacemakers, that we may be Thy children and so strengthen us by Thy grace and wisdom, that we may gladly make all sacrifices, meet all dangers and bear all sufferings and hardships, that may befall us, looking to Him who for us endured the Cross, despising the shame, and is now set down at Thy right hand.

Guard and bless Thy servants everywhere. Pity and relieve the poor, the sick and suffering.

We humbly commit ourselves and all our dear ones, and all our interests, to Thy protection for the night that is before us. Keep us from all anxieties and cares. Comfort us in our waking moments; watch over us in our sleep, refresh us and make us ready for the duties of the coming day.

We ask all for Jesus' sake.

Our Father, etc.

"THE TINKER OF BEDFORD JAIL"

By Bishop Warren A. Candler

IN November there will be celebrated around the world the birth of John Bunyan, who was born in 1628, some twelve years after the death of Shakespeare.

Beginning his life as a tinker, and serving twelve years imprisonment in Bedford Jail, he has been called "The Tinker of Bedford Jail"; but the world knows him as the author of that greatest allegory, "The Pilgrim's Progress", which he wrote during his twelve years' imprisonment.

It is well that the three hundredth anniversary of his birth should be celebrated, and the lessons of his life laid to heart. And while we celebrate the life and labors of this immortal allegorist, we need to remember the warning of the Master to the Scribes and Pharisees that they builded the tombs of the prophets and garnished the sepulchres of the righteous while despising the lives and teachings of the heroes of faith whom they thus seemed to honor.

It is quite easy to celebrate ancient virtues as they are embodied in the lives of deceased heroes while rejecting all the high truths to establish which they toiled and suffered.

We may thus pay mock tribute to Bunyan's memory while denying all for which he endured imprisonment, and all that he set forth in his glorious vision of his pilgrim saint in his pilgrimage from "the wicket gate of repentance" into the city where they who "walked in white and bore palms in their hands" met him and welcomed him to their heavenly company.

It has been said that "The Pilgrim's Progress" has had a wider circulation in all lands than any other book but the Bible. Certainly one can find versions of it in the language of almost every land in the world where evangelical Christians are found. And this vivid allegory deserves the estimation which has been thus put upon it by mankind.

Most books die quickly after they are born. Very few survive one year after their publication, and they probably live as long as they deserve.

But when the world keeps a book through century after century, we may well be sure that the work has merits which rightly command its enduring recognition.

Some have objected to "The Pilgrim's Progress", charging that its implication is to the effect that the sole object of one's life should be the saving of one's own soul. This is a hypocritical objection. The Scriptures do teach us, as they ought to teach us, that the saving of one's soul is of supreme importance. So our Master said when speaking to His disciples He asked, "What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Matthew 16:26). In truth, no man can do anything to save others until he himself has known the saving grace of Christ. Men must be blessed in order that they may bless.

There is nothing of a selfish sort in "The Pilgrim's Progress", although it agrees with the exhortation of St. Peter to the primitive Christians that they give diligence "to make their calling and election sure" (2 Peter 1:10).

This generation needs to learn afresh, and heed, the call of God to repentance and faith and personal salvation. It is full of that Pharisaic disposition which talks much of "serving others" and cares little for being saved itself. It makes much of what it calls "character building", as if by its own strength and efforts it could mechanically construct spiritual life. But life is not a matter of building, it is a matter of birth and growth.

The style of "The Pilgrim's Progress" is as wonderful as the matter which it expresses. Lord McCaulay said of this:

> "The style of Bunyan is delightful to every reader, and invaluable as a study to every person who wishes to obtain a wide command over the English language. The vocabulary is the vocabulary of the common people. There is not an expression, if we except a few technical terms of theology, which would puzzle the rudest peasant. . . . Yet no writer has said more exactly what he meant to say. For magnificence, for pathos, for vehement exhortation, for subtle disquisition, for every purpose of the poet, the orator, and the divine, this homely dialect, the dialect of plain working men, was perfectly sufficient."

Bunyan himself informs us concerning the source from which he drew his style. He says, "I prefer the Bible to all other books, and having that still with me, I count myself far better furnished than if I had without it all the libraries of the two Universities". Herein is a great lesson for preachers, or rather two great lessons, which they will do well to consider carefully. The first is to maintain in their public discourses simplicity of style. About this Mr. John Wesley, the great English evangelist of the eighteenth century, said, "I dare no more write in a fine style than wear a fine coat. Only let a preacher's language be plain, proper, and clear and it is enough. God Himself has told us how to speak both as to the matter and the manner: 'If any man speak let him speak as the oracles of God,' and if he would imitate any part of those above the rest, let it be the First Epistle of John. This is the style, the most excellent style, for every gospel preacher. And let him aim at no more ornament than he finds in that sentence which is the sum of the whole gospel: 'We love him who first loved us.'"

Martin Luther held the same view, and said: "No one can be a good preacher to the people who is not willing to preach in a manner that seems childish and vulgar to some." To the same effect spoke St. Augustine: "A wooden key is not so beautiful as a gold one; but if it can open the door when a golden one can not, it is far more useful." A higher authority than Wesley or Luther or St. Augustine was St. Paul, who said, "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God" (1 Corinthians 2:4-5).

The truth is, some men, although preaching in English, as really preach in an unknown tongue as if they spoke in Latin or Greek. They use a style of speech which their audiences can not possibly understand; and thereby they exhibit far more vanity than wisdom or spiritual character. A preacher with bookish habits and scholarly tastes is in great danger of using language of the meaning of which the average man is utterly and hopelessly ignorant. Bunyan was not such a man when he preached his sermons at Bedford, or when he wrote "The Pilgrim's Progress" in the jail.

Another lesson to be learned from Bunyan's style is that it was acquired from the English Bible, than which there is no book with a finer style. None of the modern versions, with all their pretenses of superior learning, approach it in accuracy or elegance.

One of the dangers besetting the preachers of today is the unbibilical character of their sermons, and the more unbiblical type of their style. Hence, they do not speak with the authority with which they would preach, if their minds were more perfectly permeated with the Scriptures.

Bunyan was a great believer, and in all his writings there is not a line of liberalistic and unscriptural teaching. No liberalist could have written "The Pilgrim's Progress", or "Grace Abounding", the two most notable productions of Bunyan's pen. Indeed, the liberalist will not find much joy in the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of Bunyan's birth, as they have never found any pleasure in his writings.

To be a great preacher one must be a great believer. Wavering and uncertain faith is never a source of power in the pulpit. Mr. Thomas Nelson Page in one of his most wholesome stories, "The Old Gentleman of the Black Stock", makes one of his characters speak these wise words: "When I want preaching, I go to church. At least I do when I can find it. That is not so often these days. The pulpit has lost its power, sir; thrown away its best prerogative—the gift of preaching. The clergy no longer preach with power, because they no longer believe with strength."

It is to be hoped that in celebrating the birth of Bunyan many thousands will absorb anew his spirit and his teachings. His faith should rekindle faith in multiplied millions of hearts, and his fervor should inspire a kindred flame of zeal in the hearts of all evangelical preachers.

It is worthy of especial note that Bunyan is remembered because of his religion. More people read what he wrote than read the plays of Shakespeare or the philosophy of Bacon. This is in accord with a manifestly sound principle, namely, that the supreme interest of the human heart is its religion, and that it clings longest and most tenderly to that which concerns its religious faith. Abraham is remembered while the Hittite invaders of Egypt are forgotten. The teachings of Moses survive while the tombs of the Pharaohs are decayed and all their glory passed away. The psalms of David are sung by millions while the lines of Homer and Virgil are remembered by a few thousands of scholars and antiquarians. The teachings of St. Paul have a hold upon the hearts of men far beyond the power of Seneca or Tacitus to grip the souls now living on the earth. Religion is the supreme and most lasting thing in the history of mankind.

"The Tinker of Bedford Jail" outranks and outlasts some who were called thinkers in his day; and his "Pilgrim's Progress" will be read when many in our day who imagine they are thinkers will have been forgotten.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION DAY BY DAY

By Alfred B. Williams

TENTH DAY—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20.

WHILE the Convention, by overwhelming majorities of both houses, refused participation with the Pacifist meetings, appointed, apparently by design, to be held in the same city and at the same time with the great gathering of Episcopalians, it was unanimous in endorsement of the Kellogg peace pact among nations. The resolution of endorsement was offered by Paul Little, a deputy from California, in the House of Deputies, enthusiastically approved there and accepted by the House of Bishops.

In both houses approval was given to reports urging diligence in work so that final adjournment might be taken by Thursday morning, twenty-fourth.

In the House of Bishops tentative agreement was reached that the Convention of 1934, six years hence, shall be held at Minneapolis.

A committee report urging greater effort to restrain communicants from lapsing in their Church duties was received and ordered to be circulated among the clergy. A resolution recommending that parents who are members of the Church send their children to Church Schools whenever possible, was adopted.

The election of the Rev. Albert Sydney Thomas as Bishop of South Carolina was approved.

Presiding Bishop Murray appointed Bishop Brent, of Western New York, and the Rev. Remsen B. Ogilby, President of Trinity College, Hartford, the committee of two, on behalf of the bishops, to send letters of felicitation, in the name of the Church in America, to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, of the Church of England.

A message from Bishop Winchester, of Arkansas, announced his partial recovery from very serious illness and attributed the improvement to the prayers offered in his behalf in the Convention.

In the House of Deputies a very intricate and complicated question was presented by resolutions, offered by the Rev. H. J. Lee, of Anking, China, demanding such revision of the immigration laws as to admit Chinese to this country on the same terms as other nationalities. The deputies do not hesitate to express their feelings and cries of "No!" from all parts of the hall indicated strong dissent from this suggestion. The resolutions say the existing discriminations against Chinese hamper the work of all Christian Churches in China, being cited as exactly contradictory to the announced principles of Christianity. On the other side, deputies pointed to probably disastrous results of large influx of Chinese, offering cheap labor and willing to live as Americans will not. The resolutions were referred to committee.

The House of Deputies unanimously adopted resolutions, by the Rev. Dr. Caleb R. Stetson, of New York, thanking the four members who had presented the work of the commission on revision of the Book of Common Prayer for having done their work "with singular skill, patience and in a spirit of Christian broadmindedness". These members are Bishops Slattery, of Massachusetts, and Parsons, of California; the Rev. John W. Suter and the Rev. Howard B. St. George.

Both Houses adjourned early Saturday and many members went to Arlington National Cemetery, where a wreath was laid on the tomb of the unknown soldier of the World War in behalf of the Convention, by a committee appointed for the purpose.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 21.

Bishops and clergymen attending the Convention filled the pulpits of all Episcopal Churches in Washington, Baltimore and nearby Virginia and Maryland parishes.

Sunday afternoon open-air services were conducted in the Cathedral Close and were attended by 15,000 persons, the weather being ideal. Bishop Freeman read a letter from Secretary of State Kellogg, in response to the resolutions of the Convention endorsing his peace treaty with other nations. The Secretary said the best safeguard against war was training the minds of the people to thoughts of peace and love for it and that this was special work for the Churches. Bishop Freeman, in an address, urged that this country has not the right to hold aloof from other nations and by its wealth and power has imposed on it the solemn and high duty of laboring always for promotion of world peace. Bishop Oldham, of Albany, one of the most eloquent men in the Church, made a fervid plea for leadership by the American Church and people in establishment of world-wide, permanent peace and warmly approved the Kellogg treaty.

Sunday forenoon a Communion service was conducted on the main floor of the Cathedral, 2,500 persons participating. Bishop Stires, of Long Island, officiated.

At a mass meeting on ecclesiastical art, held Saturday night, it was announced that Lawrence B. Staint, authority on medieval glass, has established for the Washington Cathedral authorities a plant near Philadelphia, where stained glass windows for the Cathedral will be made precisely by the formula used in the thirteenth century, ascertained by recent chemical analyses. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes said there will be in the Cathedral one hundred and eighty-three many panelled stained glass windows, varying in size from twenty-three feet, six inches by fourteen feet to eight feet, six inches by four feet. The windows will follow a definite system of symbolism, setting forth pictorial chronology of the growth and spread of Christianity.

ELEVENTH DAY—MONDAY, OCTOBER 22.

This day may be long memorable in the Church. One newspaper said the joint session was a modern Pentecost. It was held in Memorial Continental Hall. The dominant notes were Christian unity through the world and evangelism. Expressions of fervid belief that the Protestant Episcopal Church will, in 1929, lead a world-wide crusade for Christianity, peace and good will among men and betterment of social conditions and a world-wide revival of religion were many. The Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, Jr., rector of Calvary Church, New York, was one of the most impressive speakers. He said the Church was trusting too much to organization to do what nothing but prayer and personal contact could do and bluntly charged the Church with "rather thinly disguised worldliness and self-complacency". A resolution declaring evangelism one of the most vital needs of the Church, offered by former Senator Pepper, of Pennsylvania, was adopted unanimously.

Bishop Manning, of New York, read the report of the joint committee on Faith and Order on the Lausanne Conference, where eighty churches of forty nations were represented, and said it was the most serious gathering ever held in the world. From it came the general agreement that the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed should be accepted by all as expressing the faith of all.

Lay Deputy H. C. Wyckhoff, of California, read to the House of Bishops the report on Christian healing, on which the committee has worked six years. The report does not endorse any of the organizations formed within the Church for practice of healing, but, in a general way, expresses belief in its efficacy, especially when in close conjunction with approved medical science. A much-commented on fact in connection with this report is that it is signed by Dr. Charles H. Mayo, of Rochester, Minn., probably the most famous surgeon in the world, and by Drs. Sinclair Bowen, of Washington City, and Howard Johnson, of California. It says: "While faith in any supposed remedy has some good effect, vital faith in God, as revealed in Christ, is followed by results which are more sure, most lasting and of a more eminently spiritual character."

Captain Mountford, of the British Church Army, which works along the lines of the Salvation Army, but with less machinery, addressed the joint assembly and, like Mr. Shoemaker, talked "with the bark off". He said religion must be carried to the man in the street and that "the Church is in danger of being an ecclesiastical ice box". The indications of approval of his fiery utterance by bishops, priests and laity were evident. Adoption of Senator Pepper's resolutions was preceded by periods of intense and silent solemnity as one man after another arose and told briefly of his own conversion. It was much like an old time Methodist experience meeting. Bishop Freeman, of Washington, said he felt the Church was at the dawn of the greatest awakening in its history. Bishop Darst, of Eastern Carolina, deepened and further stirred the solemn enthusiasm by calling the entire Convention to rise and unite in repeating the invocation for the Holy Communion —"And here we offer and present to Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice."

The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, a Secretary of the National Council, urged special work among and for students in the colleges and universities.

The House of Bishops, in separate meeting, adopted an amendment to the Constitution striking out the requirement that the Presiding Bishop shall be one with jurisdiction in the United States. There was some debate, in course of which Bishop Burleson, South Dakota, said that some time the Church might wish as its head some distinguished international statesman.

Bishop Anderson, Chicago, presented the report of a special committee on loss of communicants and members which contains suggestion of laxity by rectors of churches, especially in the larger cities, in taking care that members of their congregations removing to other parishes be provided with and use letters of transfer. He estimated that the Church loses 20,000 to 40,000 members every year from the migratory habits of the American people, removing constantly from one community to another and to new parts of cities. Some rectors, it was stated, pad their lists of communicants by adding to them persons unfit or inadequately prepared, seeking membership for social or business reasons or because of personal liking for rectors, without real allegiance to the Church or understanding of its principles. Increase of pastoral diligence and cultivation of personal contacts are the remedies proposed.

"EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA."

Mr. Editor:

Mr. Alfred B. Williams, in his article "Earliest of Church Assemblages in America", in your issue of October 20, is utterly wrong in his statement that the first Convention of the Virginia clergy of the Established Church was held in 1757. There was a Convention of the clergy in 1754 at which our still existent Widows' and Orphans' Fund was established for the benefit of widows and orphans of deceased clergy. There was also a Convention of the clergy in 1719. The journals of both of these Conventions, and also report of another Convention held in 1705 appear in Bishop Perry's "Papers Relating to the History of the Church in Virginia".

There were probably a good many other Conventions of the clergy of which we have no specific record. When Dr. James Blair was appointed Bishop's Commissary in Virginia in 1689, he was authorized to hold such meetings of the clergy, and there are indications that a number of Conventions were held during his fifty-four years' tenure of that office.

It is, I think, a great pity in this day when we are trying to correct the old mis-statements and misconceptions about the Colonial Church and clergy, and to present both in a fairer and truer light, that Mr. Williams should have singled out one incident alone in a history of one hundred and sixty-eight years, and in that incident emphasized what he terms the "not creditable" action of the clergy. Unwise the clergy certainly were in view of the temper of the times; but there is much difference between "not wise" and "not creditable".

Mr. Williams might with greater fairness to a group of men doing a great work under difficult frontier conditions, have called attention to the fact that the clergy of the Established Church constituted a body of trained and educated men coming to Virginia year after year from the Universities of England and Scotland, and later from the College of William and Mary, who by their influence (and by their school-teaching in very many cases), kept alive in Virginia love of education and the finer things of life.

Or, most important of all, he might have called attention to the fact that the Established Church was the spiritual mother of the great bulk of the Virginia people. The ideals of justice and righteousness which flowered in the Virginia life of the Revolutionary period had been instilled into the people by their Church and its clergy. We have always looked upon the Revolutionary period as a great flowering time of Virginia's life. But we too frequently lose sight of the fact that the Virginia character in its spiritual ideals was what the Established Church has made it. What other Church could have had a sufficiently general and widespread influence to affect the character of the people as a whole? The Presbyterians, while the strongest religious body west of the mountains, were established in very few places east of the Blue Ridge; the "separate" Baptists, who during and after the Revolution, spread all over Vriginia, did not come into the Colony until between 1755 and 1760, and were exceedingly weak at first; the Methodists did not organize until after the Revolution. The Established Church was the only one that ministered over the whole colony; that had held up the light of Christian faith and moral life throughout all the years from the beginning in 1607.

Is it not about time that we should recognize the great value and service of the Established Church throughout all the formative years of Virginia's life, rather than continue the method of carping criticism or general condemnation of a larger body of worthy and faithful ministers because of the misconduct of a comparatively few unworthy ministers who wished themselves on the Virginia Church? The Colonial vestries found a way of getting rid of the unworthy ones. Why cannot we leave them to oblivion and recognize the really great service that the true and worthy ministers, the great majority, rendered to their Colony and its people?

It is really not quite fair of Mr. Williams to give one side of the action of the ministers in resisting the Two-Penny Act without giving the ministers' side also. They had a good deal on their side even though their action in appealing to the King against what they believed to be injustice was exceedingly unwise at a time when resentment against the King and Parliament was growing steadily stronger. The case is too long to discuss with fairness in such a letter as this. But I would like to remind Mr. Williams of a fact which he did not mention: that in the famous "Parsons' Cause" in 1763 in which Patrick Henry made the speech which brought him into prominence, the Hanover County Court had declared the Two-Penny Act invalid, and had called a jury to decide upon the amount of damages due to Rev. James Maury, the plaintiff. Mr. Maury proved by evidence that the value of his 16,000 pounds of tobacco salary was about two hundred and sixty-eight pounds English money greater than the amount he had actually received in cash. And then Patrick Henry by his marvelous power of oratory so played upon the emotions of his auditors that the jury rendered a verdict of one penny damages to Mr. Maury. Perhaps in spite of their action there was more of abstract justice in the action of the ministers than Mr. Williams gives them credit for.

And further let me say that whatever the disapproval on the part of the majority of the people of the Colony might have been at the appeal of the clergy to the king in this case, the people certainly trusted the clergy at the time of the Revolution itself. We know definitely the attitude of seventy-four of the clergy toward the Revolution. Sixty-five of them sided with the American cause; nine of them were Tories. Two clergymen were elected by their counties as representatives in the Virginia Convention of 1775; twenty, in different Counties, were appointed members of the County Committees of Safety; thirteen were chaplains in the American forces; one became a surgeon, because they need surgeons, and was killed by Indians; two became officers of high rank in Washington's army and another served in the local militia.

Surely we have ample reason to be proud of the record of our clergy at that time.

(Mr. Brydon's corrections and suggestions are welcomed gratefully. It is intended that when publication of the outline of the history and progress of the Church in America as told in the acts of its successive General Conventions has been completed in The Southern Churchman, the series of articles shall be published as a pamphlet. Therefore, I am anxious to be accurate.

Mr. Brydon doubtless has access to sources of information regarding the early history of the Church not accessible to the general reader and unavailable for or overlooked by the historians whose works I have consulted. His corrections, as given above, will be used in the pamphlet and his invaluable aid in further assuring accuracy in the first parts of the little narrative will be hopefully invoked.

For proceedings of the General Conventions of the last hundred years I depend on accounts published in the contemporary newspapers, found in old files, of the cities in which the Convention met.

COLLECT.

Lord, we beseech Thee to keep Thy household, the Church, in continual godliness; that through Thy protection it may be free from all adversities, and devoutly given to serve Thee in good works to the glory of Thy name; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THIS collect is a prayer for "Thy household the Church", and would seem to be suggested by the conclusion of the Epistle, which is a very earnest prayer of Paul for his beloved Philippians, the dast of its four petitions being a prayer that they may be "filled with the fruits of righteousness", which is the chief burden of the collect, where the last of the three petitions is that "Thy household the Church" may be "devoutly given to serve in good works".

There are fifteen prayers in the Prayer Book, given us by the Church, in which we pray for the Church, as a Church.

What is this Church, so precious in God's sight. The nineteenth article of religion (in P. B.) says: "The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men, in which the pure word of God is preached and the sacraments be duly ministered, according to Christ's ordinance, in all these things that of necessity are requisite to the same." This definition of the Church is, you see, quite broad enough to include both extremes, high and low; "the sacraments duly administered according to Christ's ordinance", it says; but high and low differ much as to what Christ ordained. It is difficult to give in due proportion our homage to Christ and to His Church. Some exalt the Church too much; the bride in her loveliness obscures the Bridegroom; while some take the other extreme, failing to recognize that vision "of true beauty", "the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband" (Rev. 21:2). The former should remember that "The Church's one foundation is Jesus Christ our Lord"; the latter should not forget that "She is His new creation, by water and the word; From heaven He came and sought her, To be His holy bride; With His own blood He bought her, and for her life He died". And this Church of Christ, though not an inerrant guide, is, as the Church holds, a nursing mother, able and willing, through the means of grace she gives us to assist all her children in the lessons of holy living and dying. It is a little singular that we find in the Breviary of the Roman Church these same prayers for the Church, that were given above; our Book of Common Prayer takes these prayers from the Breviary; they are almost literal translations. It would seem useless and superfluous for the Roman Christian to pray (as we do on the Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity, and as he does in the Latin form of it on the Fifteenth Sunday after Pentecost): "O Lord, we beseech Thee, let Thy continual pity cleanse and defend Thy Church," if that, guided by an infallible Pope, cannot err in any matter of doctrine or discipline. Of course, such a prayer for the members of such a Church would be entirely appropriate, but not for the Church as a Church. Herein lies, in the last analysis, the essential difference between Protestantism and Romanism. In a matter of faith of doctrine the former, the Protestant, in the last resort relies upon the Bible; the latter, the Roman Catholic, upon the Church to interpret the Bible to him. The one believes that God the Holy Ghost can and will open the Scriptures to the willing soul, as God the Son did to "two of them", that first Easter Day, on the way to Emmaus; the other believes that this opening must come at second hand, so to speak, through the Church, and its infallible head, the Pope. The Church can do much for us, but it takes too much on itself, when it undertakes this. She is the guardian and interpreter of the Bible, but not the sole or final one.

THE Epistle for the Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity is Phil. 1:3-11. This Epistle begins with a thanksgiving of St. Paul to God for the fellowship in the Gospel of his beloved Philippians, meaning the share they had with him in spreading the Gospel of Christ. In this Epistle also after the thanksgiving for their fellowship in the Gospel, Paul gives expression in the strongest terms to his love for them. The Epistle for this Sunday concludes with an earnest prayer for these dear ones. There are four petitions: First, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment"; second, That ye may approve things that are excellent". The Twentieth Century New Testament puts these two petitions in one sentence, making the meaning more clear, thus: "That your love may grow stronger and stronger, with increasing knowledge and all discernment, until you are able to appreciate all moral distinctions." The Greek original justifies this translation, making the second clause a consequence of the first, and not a separate petition. Observe the love that Paul prays for; not love of him (he had that in large abundance already, and he was not selfish), but that wide-embracing and earnest love, the charity so beautifully pictured in the thirteenth of 1rst Corinthians, that "never faileth", because of its abundance and intensity. And the knowledge that he asks of God for them, and "all discernment, until they are able to appreciate all moral distinctions", is a choice gift of God indeed, and one to be sought at all times: so much harm is done by well-meaning persons; "the evil", as Thomas Hood says, "that is wrought by want of thought, as well as want of heart". The third petition is that the Philippians may be "pure and without offence till the day of Christ". That "day of Christ" was thought to be imminent in those early times of the Church on earth. It was natural for them to think so, for He had left them for only three days after His death, had stayed with them forty days, and then ascended to heaven, promising them that He would come again "in like manner as they had seen Him go into heaven". What more natural than that they should think that this second separation should not be long? and so, "till the day of Christ", might mean to any one of them a period less than their natural term of life. And their trials and persecutions rested heavily on these early Christians, and they, knowing how He loved them, must have expected Him to come quickly to their deliverance, instead of their having to pass to Him through the same grave and gate of death (which He had passed through) to their joyful resurrection.

The last petition of Paul's Prayer for his dear people is that they may be "filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus, unto the glory and praise of God". Not simply with righteousness, but with the fruits of righteousness; for there are many truly righteous persons who have the faith of Christ and sincere repentance, yet have not some of the fruits of righteousness, viz.: the joy and peace of the true believer, which is theirs by inheritance of His saints. They have added, as St. Peter bids us (1 Peter 1:5-7): "To faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge, and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness, charity . . ." and are "neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus"; and they made their calling and election sure (verse 10); yet for lack of some of the precious fruits of righteousness, with which Paul prays that they may be filled, they cannot do as he bids the Philippians do, several times in this epistle: "Rejoice in the Lord alway; and again I say, rejoice" (Chap. 4, v. 4). It is surely possible for us to have this gracious and crowning gift of our Lord, if we seek it earnestly at the throne of grace, whence cometh "every good and every perfect gift".

THE Gospel for this Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity is St. Matthew 18:21-35. The story of this parable is that of a merciless creditor, a Shylock in character, and worse than that poor Jew; for he had just been forgiven a very great debt, and should have had a softened heart, which the persecuted and down-trodden Jews of those day in Venice, embittered by centuries of exclusion and cruel treatment, could not have. The lesson taught by the parable illustrates the fifth petition of the Lord's Prayer: "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors" Matt. 6:13). Jesus had been telling His disciples how they should behave towards an unrepentant brother who had trespassed against a brother. "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: and if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother; but if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the Church; but if he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, or a publican (Matt. 18:15-17). So the Christian should treat the unrepentant brother. Then Peter naturally asks the question as to a repentant brother, how often he should be forgiven, "till seven times?" Observe that only a repentant brother can be forgiven, forgiveness being a mutual act and impossible to complete except by consent of both parties; as plainly appears from Jesus' words at another time. (Luke 17:3 and 4): "If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him, and if he repent forgive him. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn to thee, saying, 'I repent', thou shalt forgive him." This teaching came after that to Peter in our Gospel for this Sunday; so there is no limitation of the times to seven, or any number of times. There is much comfort in our Lord's explanation to Peter here, to us who so often offend against God's holy laws; for evidently it teaches us that, however often we offend against Him, and under His rebuke turn to Him, saying "I repent", He forgives, even though it be the seventy times seven; upon the one condition, a hard one, I grant, but entirely possible with His help, viz., that we from our hearts forgive every one his brother their trespasses. We might well say of this teaching of our Lord what many of His disciples said (John 6:60), when He told them: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood, ye have no life in you." "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" And the Apostles seem to have recognized the great difficulty of such wide-reaching forgiveness and long-suffering toward an offender; for they said unto Him, "Lord, increase our faith" (Luke 17:5). And He comforts them with the assurance that genuine faith will accomplish this forgiveness, and all things, even faith like a grain of mustard seed, wherewith the sycamine-tree might be plucked up by the root and planted in the sea.

Bishop Kinsolving of Texas Dies

The Rt. Rev. George Herbert Kinsolving, D. D., passed on to life eternal the night of October 23, in Austin, Texas. The funeral was held October 27.

Bishop Kinsolving was born in Bedford County, Virginia, on the twenty-eighth of April, 1849, the son of the Rev. Ovid A. and Julia Heiskell Krauth Kinsolving. His youth was spent in Virginia. He graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1873. In 1893 the University of the South awarded him his Doctor of Divinity degree. He was ordained deacon in 1874 by Bishop Johns, and priest in 1875 by Bishop Whittingham. He served at St. Mark's Church, Baltimore; St. John's Church, Cincinnati, and the Church of the Epiphany, Philadelphia. For thirty-six years he has devoted his life in the service of the Diocese of Texas, having been consecrated bishop in 1892 by Bishops R. H. Wilmer, Quintard, Whitaker, Wingfield, Dudley, Jaggar, Randolph, Johnston, Kendrick, Davies, Nichols, Hale and Jones (of Newfoundland).

In 1879 Bishop Kinsolving was married to Miss Grace Jaggar, a sister of Bishop T. A. Jaggar. Mrs. Kinsolving died three years ago. Bishop Kinsolving was of a family distinguished by its devotion to the service of the Lord in the ministry. His brother, the Rt. Rev. Lucien Lee Kinsolving, has just resigned as Bishop of Brazil, where he went many years ago as a pioneer missionary of the Episcopal Church. Bishop Kinsolving is also survived by two other brothers, the Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, and the Rev. Wythe Leigh Kinsolving, and by a son, the Rev. Walter Ovid Kinsolving, of Summit, N. J.

Bishop Kinsolving was many times a delegate to our General Conventions, and three times a delegate to the Lambeth Conference of the Anglican Communion in England. Always at these Conventions Bishop Kinsolving was noted for his keen sense of humor and for his warm human interest and sympathy.

Bishop Kinsolving is succeeded by his former Coadjutor, Bishop Clinton Quin.

Bishop LaMothe of Honolulu Dies

The death of two beloved bishops of our Church occurred just two days apart. The Rt. Rev. John Dominique LaMothe, Missionary Bishop of Honolulu, died October 25 in the Church Home and Infirmary in Baltimore, Maryland, where he had been ill for some weeks past. Mrs. LaMothe and his daughter, Mrs. Thomas R. Aaron, were with him when he died.

Bishop LaMothe was born at Ramsey, on the Isle of Man, June 8, 1868, the son of John Corlet LaMothe and Sarah (Banks). He was educated at King William College, Isle of Man, and the Virginia Theological Seminary. He was seventeen when he came to America and went to farm in the West. It was due to the influence of Bishop John Poyntz Tyler that he became interested in the ministry. He was ordained deacon in 1894 by Bishop Whittle and priest in 1895 by Bishop Newton.

On August 30, 1894, he was married to Miss Margaret Meade Walker, of the Virginia Theological Seminary.

Bishop LaMothe served at Shelbourne Parish, Hamilton, Virginia, the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C.; Christ Church, St. Joseph, Missouri; St. Paul's Church, New Orleans, Louisiana, and the Church of the Ascension, Baltimore, Maryland.

In 1921, he was elected Missionary Bishop of Honolulu, and was consecrated by Bishops Tuttle, Tucker, Murray, George H. Kinsolving, Thomson, Jett, Davenport and Cook. This same year Bishop LaMothe was awarded the Doctor of Divinity degree, both by St. John's College, Annapolis, and the Virginia Theological Seminary.

Funeral services were held at 2:30 P. M., on October 26, from the Church of the Ascension, Baltimore, Maryland, and interment was at Ivy Hill Cemetery, Alexandria, Virginia.

Besides his wife and daughter, Bishop LaMothe is survived by his son, Mr. J. D. LaMothe, of Buffalo, N. Y.; one sister in this country, Mrs. Harry Woodgates, of California, and several sisters and brothers in England.

THE PASTORAL LETTER

The Pastoral Letter of the House of Bishops was read in the Church of the Epiphany on the afternoon of October 25, and with it the forty-ninth General Convention came to a close.

"The Christian Church is a society to which has been intrusted the preservation and propagation of the Gospel and through which normally men find salvation in union with God. But it is more than that. The Church is the body of Christ and Christ is the representative of all humanity. The Church, His Body, is indeed and ought to be in fact the prophecy of human destiny. It foreshadows the right relations of men to God and one another. When we speak of it as the family of God we can rightly do so only in this prophetic sense. It is the inner group of the great family of all mankind, the group which is conscious of the sonship that belongs to all. Its function is not to draw men out from the human family, but to make that family conscious of its real relation to God. The Kingdom for which the Church works and prays comes when men live like brothers in loving obedience to their Heavenly Father.

"Civilization depends upon control of those divisive forces which prevent a family life. Progress as the Christian sees it is the overcoming of these same divisive forces by the power of God. Unity is the goal. Love, brotherhood, fellowship are only varying names for the spiritual means and motive by which men reach this goal. The Kingdom of God is the society in which the divisive forces are overcome and the goal is reached.

"If the unity of society is the goal of men's striving, it is obvious that for the Church which foreshadows that goal and has to lead society to it unity is no subsidiary or chance idea. It is essential. If the Kingdom of God is to come among men the unity of the Church must be won. The forces which by setting men against one another continually threaten society obviously cannot be conquered by a Church which has not conquered them itself. A divided Church implies a yet unconquered world. Yes, admits it, accepts it.

"In playing our part, then, as loyal Christians and Church people in the great and moving drama of life, we cannot escape the call to unity. One family of God, one world, one Church. By example, by service, by prayer, we must seek unity.

"We must begin with our own Church. No communion in Christendom has in respect to unity a more complete task than ours. Catholic in our unbroken continuity with the Christian age and in the fullness of our Christian heritage, Protestant in our participation in the great sixteenth century movement of reformation and freedom, we have in the good providence of God succeeded during four hundred years in holding together in some fashion those two fundamental types of religious experience and expression. But the extremes are far apart and often seem impossible to reconcile. The tension is at times severe.

"Here in America, as throughout our whole communion, there is today a sense of strain. One group seeks a fuller measure of what it counts Catholic. Another group is sick at heart lest some of those great values which we gained at the reformation may be lost. One prays hopefully for reunion with the Church of Rome; the other seeks continually closer relations with Protestantism. In all this and much more which, on the surface, indicate irreconcilable differences we would see rather the working of forces which are alive, the evidence of the Church's attempt to meet the continually new conditions of a world which moves forward with terrifying rapidity.

"We see witnessed the great truth that Christianity is not a narrow, one-sided, carefully codified section of life, but a divine creative force sweeping into human history, seizing upon human souls with immeasurable power, resistless in its grip upon every aspect of life, making partisans as well as statesmen, prophets as well as priests. A Church which did not have new movements continually stirring its depths; in which there were no old hearts in despair and no young hearts aflame with indignation or kindled by visions of the City of God, would we venture to believe, be a dead Church.

"The divisions among us are not to be mourned over. They are to be conquered. They are not causes for despair. They are challenges to the width of our vision, the depth of our love, the soberness of our wisdom, and the steadfastness of our loyalty. If Catholic and Protestant cannot find a way to live together and to worship together the one Lord whom both adore, "then is our faith vain. We are yet in our sins".

"Two practical considerations are important. One concerns especially the clergy. There is little or no excuse for individualistic extremes such as often disturb the peace of the Church and its normal life. Let us have prophets, let us have life and initiative, but let us remember that there is a form of teaching and of worship in the Prayer Book. The ordination vows of the clergy pledge them to loyalty to 'the doctrine, discipline and worship' of this Church. These great words are nowhere accurately defined, but for a loyal priest desirous of doing his work honestly, not obscure in meaning. Loyalty does not consist in meticulous obedience to the letter of rubrics and canons. Such obedience may be rendered, accompanied by real disloyalty to the spirit of the Church.

"Loyalty means the honest attempt to understand, to enter into and to express in one's ministry that spirit. It means the use of Prayer Book language, and the careful distinction between what is Church law or doctrine and what is merely the individual's wish or opinion. It does not forbid reaching out to the best in Christian experience wherever found. It does forbid the submerging of established usage in alien rites. It does not forbid freedom of criticism. It does forbid subversive conduct. Honest loyalty among the clergy breeds confidence and sense of security among the laity. It is one great contribution to the task of unity.

"But the responsibility for unity rests upon laity as well as upon clergy; and for all there is, to use St. Paul's phrase, a 'still more excellent way', the old way of love. We have no right to distrust one another. No group of men is trying by insidious propaganda to wreck the Church. There is and ought to be the frank effort upon the part of clergy and laity to further truth as they see it. But we are all Christian brothers. We have the same Heavenly Father and the same Master Christ. Instead of setting ourselves in opposite camps and labeling ourselves with partisan names we need to worship and work, to study and confer together.

"Our differences can be overcome not by the victory of one side over another, not by driving out the Catholics or defeating the Protestants, but by the readjustment of the relation of truths and the discovery of new perspectives. We must seek the conscious and intelligent reconciliation of apparently irreconcilable views. Hitherto we have made an insecure reconciliation through our instinctive desire to hold together, but in many parts of the Church were in earnest fellowship our Christian talks have been undertaken as common tasks, the goal we are seeking has come appreciably nearer. Let us move on and with the guidance of the Spirit of Truth making unity secure by clearness of thinking warmed by the power of love, and complete trust in one another.

"Next to our responsibility as Christians for the strengthening and deepening of the unity of our own Church lies our responsibility for advancing the unity of the Church of Christ throughout the world. Of all the great movements which have stirred men's imagination and captured their allegiance during the last generation none has gained more rapidly than that of reunion. Thirty years ago men spoke of it as a mere dream. It has become a matter of practical and immediate concern. The Edinburgh Conference in 1910, the Lambeth Appeal of 1920,, the Stockholm Conference of 1925, the Lausanne Conference of 1927, the Jerusalem meeting of the International Missionary Council in 1928, all witness the fact that Christians are beginning to understand that a divided Church is by the very nature of Christianity an indefensible—yes, an impossible thing. To the extent that division exists Christ is absent. If we tolerate division (again let us say it), 'we are yet in our sins'.

"This is not the place to discuss in detail the various problems which must be met and overcome in the difficult search for unity. But three principles should be borne constantly in mind by every loyal Churchman. The first is that every baptized Christian belongs to the Catholic Church. Whatever his ecclesiastical name, he belongs to the great company of the elect; he knows something of the love of God in the Person of Jesus Christ. Saintship is the monopoly of no communion. The unnamed saints of some obscure group of Christians may know as much of God as those whose names adorn our calendars. Such a truth must drive from our hearts arrogance and exclusiveness. It must make us hospitable to all truth, charitable, of comprehensive thought, with a vision of the Catholic Church big enough to include the full range of Christian life and experience. Where Christ dwells there must we be content to be found.

"But as we move toward unity in this spirit of Christian love we must move in practical ways. And we must move. We cannot wait for a day when through some miraculous divine intervention unity will drop upon us like a new Jerusalem from the heavens. We must seek for unity where the response is likely.

"In some directions the doors are for the present closed. But others are open. We must try these doors. We must be ready to go forward, to do something. We have heard it said that in America the Episcopal Church has led in the movement toward unity until now other Christians are ready to go forward, but that facing such a practical possibility, the Episcopal Church holds back. That must not be.

"But that brings us to our last point in reference to Church unity. No work of the leaders can bring unity without the cooperation of the people. Although unity cannot come without the careful scholarship of theologians and the wise statesmanship of responsible officials; neither can it come without the warm and vital interest, the loyal prayers, the sacrificial purpose of the rank and file of Christian people. Our Lord Jesus Christ summons us to unity. We must obey the summons.

"The summons to unity is no less clear when we look upon our task in the world. The mission of the Church, as we have already said, is the discovery to men of their relation of sonship to God, and therefore of the unity which must be achieved if that sonship is to be made a living thing. The forces which divide men, selfishness, greed, lust, must be overcome by the power of God's love in Jesus Christ. The Kingdom of God is come when human society has achieved its unity in Christ.

"This mission is no mere voluntarily chosen policy. It is the very life of the Church. The Body of Christ has no other mission than to make all men part of Christ. Whether the Church works in New York or in Hankow; whether it preaches social justice or teaches little children, its aim is the same. Whether it concerns itself with the great problem of peace among the nations, or the lesser problem of peace in a New England mill strike, or in the intricate personal problem of peace in a quarreling family its aim is the same. The love of God in Christ must bring unity. Divisive forces must be overcome.

"The most momentous task which faces the world of today is the warfare against war. Again and again the voices of prophets and statesmen have been raised to tell us that if war is not destroyed, Christian civilization must be. That we believe is exaggeration. Christ is too strongly intrenched in human society to be conquered by war, no matter how world-wide. God's purposes are too stable to be made mock of in the end by man's ignorance and wickedness. But war is destructive of what Christ stands for. War is degrading, brutal, bestial, like the devil the father of lies and hatred. It assaults all that dignifies and beautifies human life. It violates the sanctities of the soul. It hurls defiance at the Christian faith that men are the family of God. It challenges the Church of Christ to action.

"Now, it is not the business of the Christian Church to control governments. It cannot lay down in detail these plans and projects which it is the business of governments to formulate and carry out. But it is the business of the Church to speak in no uncertain way concerning the Christian view of life and the relations of men and nations to one another. It is its business to guide the Christian conscience in its approach to all such matters. It cannot therefore look on indifferently at war or what makes for war. It must put moral force behind the efforts for peace and a law-governed world. Christ summons us to world unity as He does to Church unity. Such efforts we would have you see is but part of the great mission of the Church.

"In contrast with the vast reaches of the task of ending war or of restoring the unity of Christ's Church our own Church's mission as expressed in what we call its program seems small. It is as measured in numbers, be they of persons or of dollars. It is not if measured in eternal values. It is the same task of bringing unity in God's great family.

"The money which we contribute for carrying out the Church's program in Nation, diocese and parish is our part in that task. The missionary whom we thus send out is preaching everywhere as he preaches the Gospel, the message of the unity of men in God. The teacher in the parish school at home is helping the children of the Church to grow up in full knowledge of what their sonship really means. The social service worker is revealing the unity as well as the dignity of human life. The evangelist on the city streets is stirring the sleeping sense of kinship which lies hidden in all men's souls.

"Varied messages and varied efforts they are, which through support of its program, we make possible for the Church, but all are guided by the same great ideal. All spring from the love of God which we His children know in Jesus Christ. All aim to transform this world of hating, covetuous, warring men, dishonoring in their strife the Heavenly Father—all aim, we say, to put love for hate, peace and law for strife and chaos. All would create out of this bitter competitive struggle the cooperative life of the family of God.

"These efforts are our efforts, dear brethren of the clergy and laity. This is all our task. In private life and public life, in the support of the Church's program and in our influence upon the wider life of Christian people throughout the world Christ calls us to release the power of love that men may be gathered into the unity of the sons of God. Only thus can God have His way among us. Only thus can He answer our daily prayer, Thy kingdom come. Only thus can the Christ who died for us see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied."

THE DIVINE ANTIDOTE TO SIN, SICKNESS AND DEATH: By the Rev. Frank N. Riale, Ph. D., D. D., Williams Fellow, Harvard. Cloth, Pp. 372, price $2.25, postpaid. The Christian Literature Publishing Company, 76 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dear Dr. Riale! We love him for his great-heartedness, his clear vision, his wide sympathies and his fervent appeal. His soul is on fire for the transmission of the truth as he so sincerely feels it throbbing through his entire being. And he wins us to his viewpoint by this comprehensive treatise. He cannot divorce the physical from the spiritual. For he finds the same redemption in both. And so he is pleading for the consistent recognition of spiritual forces in the body of the child of God, as well as in the spiritual realm.

Of course, a general opposition to this truth exists where evidences of fanaticism have turned thinking people away from the entire subject. But Dr. Riale is a thinker and he invites us to enter with him in the pursuit of the real truth of this all absorbing problem. Confessedly, the Church has failed to substantiate her confession and her lack of clarity has befogged the evident intention of the framers of our liturgy. Why do we exhort the people to recognize the need of prayer as balanced in the union of the two parts of our being, "and to ask those things which are requisite and necessary as well for the body as the soul", if we do not mean it?

We cannot avoid the challenge that spiritual health is in the air to be believed or denied just as we may elect. Indifference, ridicule, contempt, open antagonism will not answer it. It will assert its right to grow. And if it is met by the sweet reasonableness of seasoned thought, it will be a benison of peace to the believer. If our great God is able, why not give Him right of way in this realm of our earthly experience? Why limit Him by our self-imposed restrictions? If the Lord Jesus did His Father's will in His healing ministry, by what law of consistency should He be excluded now? Can any one doubt that from the resurrected and glorified Person of our Lord there flow streams of life for the strengthening of the members of the Church which is His Body, who will to accept that provision by faith? In our fear of fanaticism, we have been all too prone to strangle the normal impulses of the new life into which we have been inducted by our regeneration. And we may thank God that our Protestant Episcopal Church has at last recognized the truth in its recent enactment to restore what the entire Church had lost, the prayer of faith for the sick (James 5:14), with anointing and the laying on of hands of the presbytery.

So, we do stand with Dr. Riale in his eloquent and masterly contention that we have been guilty of crowding out the Lord from the very phase of our experience, our physical being, which He loved to occupy in His earth-life. In this treasurable book, our author unfolds to us the instinctive search for the quickening of our mortal bodies which has ben the quest of longing hearts. A few of us, in the face of strong opposition, have maintained that the teaching of Romans 8:11 is obviously with reference to the work of the Holy Spirit in our "death-doomed" bodies.

Our author believes that as those who watch and wait for their Lord, every one of us should expect to be preserved unto His appearing. By the law of Nature, it is "appointed unto man once to die" (Heb. 9:27, 28); but according to the promise of our Lord anticipating His resurrection, His words are to be literally received, "He that eateth of this bread shall live forever" (John 6:58) Certainly this was in the Apostle's mind when he prayed for the Thessalonian Christians, "That your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. 5:23).

Every reader of this book will enter into a new comprehension of the royal rights of those who are members of the heavenly family. We may be sure it will charm by its winsome appeal; it will convince by its thoughtful discussion; it will arouse by its enthusiastic spirit; it will inspire whole-hearted dedication by its incontrovertible logic.

AN EVENING PRAYER.

The Rev. Percy T. Fenn, D. D.

Almighty Father, by whose care
We have been kept from perils free;
We offer now our evening prayer,
With full, and thankful hearts to Thee.

The day has passed, and we have found
Thy grace sufficient for our strength;
With chains of love we have been bound
To Thee whose mercy knows no rest.

Pardon our sins of thought, and deed;
The remembrance of them wounds our pride;
We feel because we would not heed;
We feel regret our shame would hide.

Thou knowst all—the aching heart,
The hidden fear, the fruitless quest,
The unbidden tears that freely start,
The sigh, the longing to be blest.

And weary now we sigh for rest,
And rest can find in Thee alone;
Have mercy on the heart distressed,
Make Thy forgiving pity known.

For friends, for health, for love's sweet bliss,
We render thanks with joyful voice;
The sting of pain we would not wish
Removed, if we had the choice.

May angels succour and defend
Through slumber fitful or profound;
No foes can harm whilst we depend
On Thy swift couriers that surround.

Religion in Russia.

Much has been said about religious conditions in Russia. The statements made vary very much. Some have said that the Soviet Government had abolished religion entirely. Others have said that there is more religious liberty in Russia today than there has ever been in the past.

Under these circumstances it is interesting to read what may be considered an official pronouncement on the subject.

The official organ of the Moscow Committee of the All-Russian Soviet Party is called "Bezbigenik u Stanka", which, being translated, means, "The Atheist at His Bench". From this publication the following article is taken:

"The Soviet Government has no need of any religion; it is against any religion. In its policy toward any religion it is led by the Constitution of our party, which always considered religion as a form of spiritual oppression of the masses. The Soviet Government actively cooperates with the process of freeing the masses from religious poison, carrying on anti-religious propaganda through the Soviet governmental machinery (the People's Commissariat of Education and the Department of General Political Education). The Soviet school, the reading rooms, clubs and the like, are the important centers in the work of propaganda of atheism.

"On the other hand, the governing bodies of the Soviet Government control and regulate the activities of the Church and Sectarian organizations, not permitting them to trespass the limits designated by law. In our country the activities of religious organizations are allowed, but there is not and there cannot be even a shadow of any 'favoring' their work.

Sometimes it is asked: Would it not be better to close the churches altogether and to prohibit the priests and sectarians from carrying on work? It would be wrong, wrong at the very root. Religion is a masked, latent form of spiritual oppression from which the masses are unable to liberate themselves all at once. It is necessary to resort to the systematic unmasking of the class role of religion; a mass anti-religious propaganda is necessary.

"The Soviet Government has done all that was necessary and reasonable in order to deprive religious organizations of their rights and privileges. Then the Soviet Government decreed religion to be the private affairs of every citizen. Now it is for the toilers themselves to find out whether they need religion or not, this bourgeois poison which was injected by the exploiters during centuries into the conscience of the masses. Masses of the working class and peasantry organized into the ranks of the Atheists' Union, and helping with its work, must come to the aid of the party and to the aid of the Soviet's machinery, in the matter of combatting religion. During the ten years the Soviets have been and still are a powerful lever in building up the new socialistic society. Gigantic masses come together around them, and under their leadership a great construction work is being carried on. The Soviet Government took out from our land the roots of the land owners and the capitalistic system opened the way to the full liberty of the toilers of our land. The Soviet Government took away the foundation from the religious organizations, their economic basis; separated the Church from the State; broke the backbone of the ecclesiastical counter-revolution; and cooperates toward complete recovery from religious poison among the toilers of the Union.

"The sympathy and support of the multi-millions of the masses, the growth of class consciousness, activities and social initiative, will insure the success of the cause of atheism in our land."—The Presbyterian of the South.

Opportunity.

When Jesus wept on beholding the city in which He was rejected and condemned, His grief was due to the refusal of its people to choose the right thing at the time it was offered them. Theirs was the neglect of an opportunity as fraught with consequence as any of which humanity has knowledge since the days of Noah. No greater penalty for non-acceptance of an obligation is on the records of humanity.

It is the distinctive feature of the life of creatures in possession of intelligence and will power that daily life is for them not a routine of action exactly level and interlocked like the links of a chain. Our existence is spent in the midst of varying forces, issues, courses of action, and times suitable and unsuitable for our choices. If God were a despot and mankind His slaves, or if people were without the faculty of will, if they were only clods or automatons, we could blame luck or destiny for what we are and what we do. The fact that we are divinely endowed with choice, and the fact that there is not sameness and endless repetition in the circumstances through which we pass, compel us to take account of opportunity. Truly did Shakespeare write, and rightly have his lines become a familiar quotation:

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries:
On such a full sea are we now afloat,
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures."

What people misinterpret is the value of their power to choose. They do not realize that an opportunity is the high gift of God to those whom He has endowed with power to use such a privilege and who can therefore be expected to assume responsibility for their choice of allegiance and action. Jerusalem's folk were not compelled to deny the Messiahship of Jesus. They had the means to identify Him; they listened to His teaching; they saw the fruits of His ministering. Against these they arrayed the fancied advantages of peace with Rome, the possibilities of displacing the official leaders of their day, and the probabilities of scoffs and sneers from the "society" of their day. These latter they decided to heed, and threw away the merits of Jesus, the representative of God. There could be only one issue from such a choice, and disaster inevitably befell them.

In many minor ways opportunities meet us now. When they meet us, and we scan them in the light of the decalog, the golden rule, the ideals of family and citizenship, our choice of them is guided correctly. When we refuse to make use of them in order to dwell at ease, or to engage in evil or to make our places in life merely safe, we are bound to wreck our happiness and destroy ourselves. Certain oportunities are so intimately connected with the will of God that to turn them down is to set ourselves outside the limits of His favor and protection.

The major opportunity of people lies in the call of Christ to believe in Him. It is strange that experienced men and women, who have seen time and again the effects of neglecting entrance into the door when it opens wide, should fail to heed the voice of their Saviour. The utter illogic, the miserable reasoning, and the contemptible preferences which are given precedence over the great offer of eternal life have long aroused wonder. In our own day, leisure, sports, cults, purely human organizations, profit-seeking employments and the sneers of wicked and godless strangers are permitted to convince us that it is safe to deny the call of the Son of God.

How sadly puerile are the excuses which are offered after the day of opportunity has passed. How terrible is the divine forecast—"Depart from me: I never knew you." Is the Church to blame? Are we sufficiently specific in warning the people that they must follow after Christ when He passes by, lest He does not come again to call them to God's peace?—Lutheran.

NOVEMBER.

Lord, I am glad for the great gift of living—
Glad for Thy days of sun and of rain;
Grateful for joy, with an endless thanksgiving,
Grateful for laughter—and grateful for pain.
Lord, I am glad for the young April's wonder,
Glad for the fulness of long summer days;
And now when the spring and my heart are asunder,
Lord, I give thanks for the dark autumn ways,
Sun, bloom and blossom, O Lord, I remember,
The dream of the spring and its joy I recall;
But now in the silence and pain of November,
Lord, I give thanks to Thee, Giver of all!

Tradition.

Louis Deschamps.

Tradition is the bugbear of modern minds. Zealots of history were subject to no greater obsessions than modern extremists acknowledge in their worship of reason, their unjustified prejudice against tradition. On every side the abuses and errors of tradition are proclaimed to the exclusion of the good uses it offers to humanity. The prestige and prosperity resting upon the achievements of our forefathers are thoughtlessly enjoyed as a matter of fact, while asserting the superiority of the present over the past. With all due respect for the greatness of the present scientific age, there are still certain uses of tradition overlooked in modern thinking.

A new business continuing the work of an old concern is careful to announce itself "Successors to ——— Company". In the business of human progress, the present age would seem to forego the responsibility of pledging itself to the standards of its predecessors, as well as to lose the good will of historical glory. Tradition is the means of "carrying over" the standards and ideals of one generation to another. Its value is measured in terms of the enduring quality of its virtues, rather than the obsolescence of its fashions. Each succeeding generation may profit by the inspiration that comes from realizing that it is pledged to keep inviolate the ideals and virtues of the race. To forget this use of tradition is to lose the wholesome effect of responsibility. It is possible, of course, to refuse every standard of tradition on the grounds of progressive superiority by logic, but the actual result is to face the necessity of beginning over again in neglecting the lessons of history. It is harder to retain virtue than to dispute it, because the test is experience, not logic. Tradition is humanity's contract with the best within itself.

Another use of tradition is to fire the imagination of people with the romance of history. It gives background, reason, and purpose to life. The barren intellectualism of many modern thinkers resemble the pitiable condition of deserters, who acknowledge no allegiance, cherish no purpose, and enjoy no pride of fellowship with their fellowmen, past and present. Tradition reminds us that life is not individual self-sufficiency, but a progressive triumph of idealism over pessimism, of spirit over circumstance. In the glamor of the past there are no distracting elements to cloud the perception of ideals. Ideals are preserved in the sheer beauty and inspiration of traditional conceptions, lest present difficulties and actual woes prove too great for human faith. There is strength and comfort in the thought that the august assembly of all great men in the past may be contemplating spiritually the struggles of one's everyday life in the interest of the universal virtues confided to the present by the past. Religion teaches the value of tradition in the sanctity of its Holy Scripture.

"There Was No Sea."

The verse, "There was no sea", must have brought a gloriously welcome thought to John on the Isle of Patmos This was a small, rocky isle, fifteen miles in circumference, generally barren, one of the Sporades in the Greek Archipelago, lying off the southwest coast of Asia Minor. Here he was outcast from the world of men and events, separated by the sea from all the folks he knew and the things with which he longed to be, in constant separation, a separation that ran through every phase of human life.

We live in a world filled with goodbyes. It is goodbye when John and Mary start off to school. It is goodbye when the boys and girls go away from home to college. It is goodbye when couples join hands, leave their individual homes and start out in life together and the marriage bells peal. It is goodbye when the bugles blow and men are called into the service of the army and navy. It is goodbye when we pack up our tents and move away into a new place. It is goodbye when friends hear the final call to come up higher unto the prepared place for prepared people. It is goodbye from the early dawn of the morning till the sun dips into the western sea.

No more attractive characteristic of the realm could there have been presented to John than in this little verse, "There was no more sea"; because it represented to him the end of that separation which characterized all life.—Rev. C. H. Nabors, in The Presbyterian of the South.

True Disciples.

When mankind comes to its completion in Christ it will be able surely to rejoice in every triumph of God in this world, and at the same time be filled with love and tenderness for the most hateful of those who work against God.

What is the passage in the New Testament to set alongside the song of Deborah: "So let all Thine enemies perish, O Lord!" Turn to the great New Testament and hear the prayer of Jesus on the Cross: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Between that barbaric cry over the destruction of God's enemies and this infinite compassion of our Saviour, what a vast difference!

Not until we have come to the place where we shall absolutely rejoice in every work of Christ, with that testimony which comes only with our complete dedication, and, at the same time, having nothing in ourselves but that pity and desire to help even the worst of men, not until then do we show ourselves to be true disciples of the Master. —Phillips Brooks.

THE LEVITE'S EXCUSE.

Clara B. Bush.

I know the road to Jericho,
It passes by my door,
And every day, there comes my way
Some traveler footsore.

But I always am so busy—
How can I heed each cry?
So I kindly say, "Another day
I'll help when you pass by".

Testing.

To be beaten but not broken; to be victorious but not vain-glorious; to strive and contend for the prize and to win it honestly or to lose it cheerfully; to use every power in the race, and yet never to wrest an undue advantage or win an unlawful mastery; verily, in all this there is training and testing of character which searches it to the very roots, and this is a result which is worth all that it costs us.—Bishop Potter.

An Open Door.

It is a wonderful thing for the religious teacher to understand that he can say to the man who urges that it is no fault of his that he cannot be "religious" because he lacks the religious faculty, that it is his fault, and that he can be "religious" if he wants to. It is true that the natural man cannot know the secret of God, but it is also true, as Paul urges, that no one need continue to be a natural man unless he wants to; he can become a supernatural man. Not only is the door of the holiest wide open, but the gate of the outer court is open also. And if a man chooses to stay outside in the cold and dark, he has only himself to blame for it. If he is shut out of this knowledge, it is because he shuts himself out. If he does not enter into the secret, it is not because he cannot, but because he will not. The things of the Spirit may be a mystery. But the key which opens the door to them is not possessed by the few, but may be possessed by any who desire to use it. —Raymond Calkins, in "The Eloquence of Christian Experience".

To Help Towards Unity.

There are, I think, at least three things which every Christian can do to help towards unity:

He can put into practice the Lausanne spirit in his relations with and his thoughts of other Christians. That means to emphasize the common faith, to try to understand others' views and learn from them; to strive always to cooperate; in a word, to make his love and sympathy as wide as that of the Lord Christ whom we all follow.

Secondly, he can endeavor to study and understand something of the great questions which are involved in unity. Parish classes, informal groups, inter-Church gatherings as well as individual reading and study are helpful. And thirdly, he can pray regularly for the unity of Christ's Church.—Bishop Parsons.

Do not disparage the commonplace. What is more commonplace than a mother's love?

A GENERAL CONFESSION.

Charles Nevers Holmes.

Almighty Father and our God;
We who kneel humbly here today,
Have erred and strayed from Thee, O Lord,
Like sheep which wander far away.

For we have followed blamefully
Our own devices and desires,
And have offended shamefully
Against the laws Thy truth inspires.

Too frequently have we forgot
Unpleasant duties that befall;
We do the things which we should not,
Within us is no health at all.

But let, good Lord, Thy mercy be Upon each wayward child of Thine;
Spare those who here confess to Thee,
Almighty Father, God divine.

Restore those who are penitent,
According to Thy promise made,
And save the sinners who repent,
That from Thy fold and flock have strayed.

O Father, for His sake, forgive!
And freely grant that we again
A godly, sober life shall live,
To glorify Thy Name. Amen.

John Three: Sixteen.

One cold, wintry night a poor Irish boy stood in the streets of Dublin—a little city Arab, homeless, houseless, friendless.

He had taken to bad courses, and had become an associate of thieves, who were leading him on the broad road to destruction. That very night they had planned to commit a burglary, and appointed him to meet them in a certain street at a certain hour.

As he stood there waiting, shivering, and cold, a hand was suddenly laid on his shoulder. It was very dark, he could only see a tall form standing by him, and he trembled with fear; but a kindly voice said:

'Boy, what are you doing here at this time of night? Such as you have no business to be in the streets at so late an hour; go home, go to bed."

"I have no home, and no bed to go to."

"That's very sad, poor fellow! Would you go to a home and to a bed if I provided one?"

"That would I, sharp," replied the boy.

"Well, in such a street and at such a number (indicating the place) you will find a bed." Before he could add more the lad had started off. "Stop!" said the voice, "how are you going to get in? You need a pass: no one can go in there without a pass. Here is one for you; can you read?"

"No, sir."

"Well, remember that the pass is 'John 3:16'; don't forget, or they won't let you in. John 3:16. There, that's something that will do you good."

Joyfully the lad rushed off repeating his lesson, and soon found himself in the street and at the number indicated, before a pair of large iron gates. Then his heart failed him, they looked so grand; how could he get in there! Timidly he rang the bell. The night porter opened, and in a gruff voice asked, "Who's there?"

"Me, sir. Please, sir, I'm John 3:16," in very trembling tones.

"All right, in with you; that's the pass"; and in the boy went.

He was soon in a nice warm bed, and between sheets such as he had never seen before. As he curled himself up to go to sleep he thought "This is a lucky name; I'll stick to it". The next morning he was given a bowl of hot bread and milk before being sent out into the street (for this home was only for a night). He wandered on and on, fearful of meeting his old companions, thinking over the wonders of the night and his new name, when heedlessly crossing a crowded thoroughfare, by accident—or rather, we would say, in the good providence of God—he was run over.

A crowd collected; the unconscious form was placed on a shutter and carried to the nearest hospital. He revived as they were entering it.

It is usual in the Dublin hospitals to put down the religion as well as the name and address of those admitted. They asked him whether he was Catholic or Protestant. "Sure he didn't quite know. Yesterday he was a Catholic, but now he was John Three-Sixteen". His reply elicited a laugh.

After his injuries had been attended to he was carried up into the accident ward. In a short time his sufferings brought on fever and delirium. Then was heard in ringing tones the oft-repeated "John 3:16! John 3:16! It was to do me good, and so it has. It was to do me good, and so it has."

These persistent cries aroused the other patients. Testaments were pulled out to see to what he pointed. What could he mean? And here one and there another read the precious words, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

"It was to do me good, and so it has," the sufferer cried.

Consciousness returned, and the poor little fellow gazed around him. How vast it looked, and how quiet it was. Where was he? Presently a voice from the next bed said, "John Thr-ree-Sixteen, and how are you the day?"

"Why, how do you know my new name?"

"Know it! You've never ceased with your 'John Thr-ree Sixteen', and I for one say, blessed John Thr-ree Sixteen."

This sounded strange to the little lad's ears. To be called blessed—he for whom no one cared!

"And don't you know where it comes from? It's from the Bible."

"The Bible! What's that?" The poor little waif had never heard of the Bible, that blessed book, God's Word to man. "Read it to me," he said and as the words fell on his ear he muttered, "That's beautiful; it's all about love, and not a home for a night but a home for always." He soon learned the text, and its meaning, saying: "I've not only got a new name, but something to it." This was indeed a joy.

Days passed on, and there were changes in the ward, but our little friend never felt lonely; he fed on his text and its precious words, little thinking how soon he would have use for them. Yet another soul in that ward was to be won to Christ by his means, and now in simple conscious faith he was to be the agent of blessing. On a cot near him lay an old man who was very ill. Early one morning a nun came to his bedside, and said, "Patrick, how is it with you today?"

"Badly, badly," groaned the old man.

"Has the priest been to see you?" asked the nun.

"Oh, yes; but that makes it worse, for he has anointed me with the holy oil, and I am marked for death. I'm not fit to die; oh, what shall I do?"

"Patrick, it's very sad to see you so," she gently answered; "Look, here are those beads; they have been blessed by his Holiness the Pope, and they will help you to die happy."

She placed them around the man's neck, and then wishing him good-bye went out. How could a string of beads ease a dying man facing eternity with his sins unforgiven? Poor Patrick groaned aloud: "God ha' mercy," he cried; "I'm such a sinner, I'm not fit to die. What shall I do? Oh, what will become o' me?"

Our little fellow heard his miserable words. Poor old man, thinks he, he wants a pass. "Patrick," he called, "I know something that will do you good, quite sure; it has done me."

"Tell me, tell me quickly," cried Patrick; "if only I could find something to do me good."

"Here it is. Now, listen, John 3:16. Are you listening?"

"Yes, yes, go on."

"John 3:16: For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Again and again he had to repeat these words. Through them Patrick found peace in his dying hour, and with his pass he entered into everlasting life. Another soul brought to Christ in that hospital ward by means of a single text, blessed by the Holy Spirit.

Our little friend recovered. For a long time John 3:16 was his one text. God blessed his simple faith, friends were raised up to him, and he was placed at school. Now he is an earnest hearty worker for the Master.—M. S. S.

JESUS SAID:

Come unto me . . . I will give you rest."—Matt. 11:28.

"Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out."—John 6:37.

The Bear That Changed a Boy Into a Man.

There are some people who say that children would rather hear a bear story than any other kind of a story. They say that if a lot of stories and very good ones, too, are told to children, and one of them is about a bear, the children always want to hear the bear story again. If at night time, they say, you ask children, which of all the dozen stories I have told you, you would like to have me tell you now, they answer, "The bear story".

Bear stories are not always equally interesting. Sometimes it is hard to make them interesting if the hearers expect too much. Still it is nice when you tell a bear story to feel as you begin it that you are sure to be listened to carefully.

Before the story is told, I hope that you will notice the subject of the story, "The Bear That Changed a Boy Into a Man". How could a bear, any kind of a bear, brown, black or white, change a boy into a man? Whoever heard of such a thing? Bears—wild bears—are ready to eat up a boy or girl, and sometimes tame bears are ready to do the same. Only lately a boy fell into the pit or yard over in the capital of Switzerland, Berne, at the very center of the city, where a lot of bears are kept, and before the boy could be rescued, the bears had killed him.

Perhaps in our bear story the bear did not mean to change the boy into a man, did not really try to do it; but it was because of the bear and of something that happened to the bear and to the boy, that the boy became just like a grown man in his courage.

This was up in Alaska—the country away off on the very northwestern part of the United States. I was there going about with a man named Sheldon Jackson. I love to tell about him because he grew up in a little bit of a village where there were so few people that they could not keep their church going unless some money was given to them. It was what is called a "Home Mission" church. So Sheldon Jackson had a Sunday School provided for him to go to, and he decided when he was still a little boy that if he should grow up to be a man he would go where there were no Sunday Schools and start some churches and Sunday Schools. It was this Sheldon Jackson that later brought the reindeer from Siberia to Alaska and so provided food for the Indians. He made a great name for himself, and the whole United States felt that he had done our country much good.

He used to come to my father's house in Albany, N. Y. So when he knew that I was to be in Alaska, he rowed out to the big boat on which I was, "The Queen", and asked me to come to his home in Sitka, and then he took me on a trip—as he went about in a boat—visiting all sorts of strange places. He had heard that there was a deserted Indian village away off in a bay of the ocean. No person that Sheldon Jackson knew could tell where it was. After a very long search, we found it—and in it were all the Totem Poles—great high poles—twenty-five feet high—with curious faces and heads and whale and bears carved upon them, which the Indians had worshipped—and everything was going to destruction.

Here is where the story comes in. Not far from the deserted village was a small house, a cabin, in which lived a white man with his wife and with their twelve-year-old boy. They were living there so as to catch salmon fish which they put into cans and sold when a steamer came each year. With the money they got in this way they would go once or twice a year to a town several miles away and buy flour and salt and oatmeal for their home.

When I went into the house, there on the floor was a rug which just covered the floor. It was the skin of a bear—the largest I have ever seen. The fur was very thick, very deep and very long. I asked about it, and this is what the mother said:

"My boy Walter was out one day about four miles away in the woods, carrying his rifle. He was alone. There was not an Indian nor a white man anywhere near for miles. He was picking some berries, when all of a sudden as he looked up an immense bear appeared before him. The bear raised himself up on his hind legs and with an awful growl, and with his front legs stretched out like arms, started to rush for Walter. Quick as a flash Walter lifted his rifle, took aim at the bear's heart, shot—and the bear fell down dead only a few feet in front of him.

"Then what do you suppose Walter did? He turned, almost before the bear fell, and ran all the way home, frightened almost to death, told his father what he had done, and they went together (Walter's father could scarcely believe what his boy had told him), and there was the body of the bear! So they dragged that bear all the way home and they took off its skin and we made a rug out of it." That was the mother's story.

But what about the Bear Changing the Boy Into a Man? Why this—this boy had always been a sort of coward before that. He did not like strange sounds at night around the cabin, the hooting of the owls and the bark of wolves, and he did not like to meet strangers whenever he did meet them, and he wondered whether when he grew up he would ever be able to do things like his father—go out in the woods and say "no" to people when they asked him to do wrong things. But from the minute he had shot the bear he was just like a man, he was ready to go anywhere and to do anything that seemed right, and he had the heart of a man, and he had a great purpose in life that he never would be persuaded into wrongdoing.

One of the most remarkable things I have ever known is the number of boys and girls who, when they were about twelve years of age—a little younger or a little older—have decided as this boy did that they would never do wrong.

There is a man in the city of Detroit—I know him well—who when he was only five years old made up his mind just what sort of a boy and man he would be. He was going to be a true and brave boy, and a true and brave man. And he has been and is brave and true. One of the finest things about our lives is that we can determine what they shall be, even when we are very, very young.

How to use the rites of religion and yet not let them crowd religion out and take its place has ever been a difficult problem in the history of all religions, and not less in the history of Christianity. But in vain do we offer outward sacrifices if we do not have the inner sacrifice of the spirit and the reality of religion in a pure heart and an obedient life.—James McClure, in The Pigeon That Saved a Battalion and Other Stories."

TO BABY ANNA.

Eugenie du Maurier Merdith.

Bonny, little, baby girl!
Smiling eyes and hair a-curl!
How we love you!

Though you're only six months old,
You've brought happiness untold;
So we love you:

You sit in your rocking chair,
With never a pout or care,
While we love you:

Anna, darling, baby, dear,
We are glad we have you here,
Just to love you:

Grandma, Daddy, Mother, all,
Brothers, Sister, you enthrall;
For they love you.

Martha Gets Up Early.

When Martha Allen opened her eyes on a certain May morning she heard footsteps overhead. She listened for a minute wondering who could be in the attic. Then she sprang out of bed and hurried into her clothes. As she buttoned the last button she raced up the attic stairs.

"Oh, Mother, are you going to clean the attic today?" she called. "Why don't you do it when I can be at home?"

"Yes, I am going to finish it today, Martha, and it wouldn't be any fun for you. We had all the fun when we went through the chests and trunks last week. Today I shall get it all spic and span and tonight after school you may settle your play-room up here."

"Oh, goody! And may I ask Betty Jane to help me?"

"Yes, you may. Now run down and eat your breakfast. It is all ready for you, and everybody else has finished. I had to hurry to be ready for Mrs. Brickett when she comes to help me. I'll be down before you start for school."

Martha ran downstairs and helped herself to her porridge and toast and a glass of milk. She felt quite grown up to be eating alone with no one to tell her to eat all her porridge and to drink her milk. She would show mother that she could eat it all without any telling. Her reflection smiled at her from the mirror across the room. The clocked showed in the mirror just over her head. The long hand was at half-past, and suddenly Martha realized that she had been eating very slowly. She carried her dishes to the kitchen and then put on her hat and took up her arithmetic book.

Calling a cheery, "Bye, Mom", she ran down the steps and hastened up the street. There were no children in sight and Martha grew uncomfortable over her lateness. She remembered hearing her father say that the dining-room clock was slow. She ran a few steps and then stopped as a voice called her name. She looked about but could see no one until Anna Roberts waved a handkerchief from an upstairs window.

"My! Anna will be awfully late," thought Martha as she waved back.

As she turned the corner by the Walters' place she saw Frank carrying a huge armful of wood toward the back door. Martha wondered if his mother had kept him home to help her clean house.

Passing the Hartman's house, Martha saw Margaret Hartman going around the corner of the house with a rake. She began to wonder what in the world was the matter with everybody. Surely this was Monday and not Saturday. Martha had been at church just yesterday. And surely that clock had said half past eight.

At the corner drug store she pressed her face against the glass and looked up at the big clock inside. Both hands were at eight. Martha rubbed her eyes and looked again. Yes, that was what it said—twenty minutes of eight—not nine. Martha turned around and went skipping home again. She sat on the front steps doing problems until Anna came over.

"Where did you go so early?" Anna asked.

"Up to the drug store to see what time it was," laughed Martha.

And then she told her how she had gotten up earlier than she thought and had looked at the clock in the mirror and thought everybody was late but herself.

"But, I'd rather be early than late any time, Anna," she ended, thoughtfully.—Janet G. Gilespie, Westminster Colo.

Prayer? What mind can measure prayer?
Just where does it begin, its end is where?
Like shuttle passing back and forth
To heaven and back to earth again,
It weaves divineness into men;
We know not where prayer ends,
But ere its work is done,
God's will and man's are one.

TREMENDOUS VALUE FOR 15c.

Leading Weekly Magazine of Nation's Capital Makes Remarkably Attractive Offer.

Washington, D. C. (Special).—People in every section of the country are hurrying to take advantage of the Pathfinder's wonderful offer to send that splendid illustrated weekly review of the whole world 13 weeks for 15 cents. It costs the editor a lot of money to do this, but he says that in spite of the cost it pays to invest in new friends, and he will keep the offer open a little longer. You will like the Pathfinder as well as its two million regular readers do and you will wonder how you ever got along without it. The Pathfinder is the most widely quoted paper in the world; it is a treasure-chest of good things. It is 34 years old and now better than ever; every one of the 13 big issues you will receive gives a clear exposition of what is going on all over the world. 15 cents in stamps or coin mailed at once to Pathfinder, Dept. 204, Washington, D. C., will keep your whole family informed, entertained, helped and inspired for the next three months.

Christ Our Sin-Cleanser, Desease-Destroyer and Death-Conqueror

"THE GREATEST CHRISTMAS MESSAGE OF THE WORLD!"

The Divine Antidote to Sin, Sickness and Death

By REV. FRANK N. RIALE, Ph. D., D. D.

Williams Fellow, Harvard

REV. JOSEPH FORT NEWTON, D. D. so well known both as preacher and author, the world over, writes:

"I have just read your book with absorbing interest and inspiration. It is a great book of Faith and makes my heart leap like a drum beat. One trouble—perhaps the trouble—with us is that we are preaching a truncated Christianity, bereft of its real and rightful power. Yet that power is always with us when we are brave enough to lay hold of it—"lay hold of eterntal life," and it will make us masters of life and time and death. You strike the great note, and I hope it will echo afar, recalling a bewildered church to its high privilege and opportunity. Thank you for what you have done."

REV. E. STANLEY JONES, D. D. author of Christ of the Indian Road, which the British Weekly says "has taken Christendom by storm," writes as follows:

"I want to thank you sincerely for your books. You have struck a note which has been beating feebly in my own soul. I feel we have been too tentative and too timid in the name of Christ. You go to the center of the problem, and sweep the universe in His Name. In this you are deeply right.

I shall be writing another book soon, and the note you have struck, will be one of the notes of that book."

In Dr. Jones' last book, Christ of the Round Table, he makes several pages of excerpts from Dr. Riale's books, and stresses with great power the death-conquered life, as the divine design for all.

Hundreds of religious leaders the world over are equally enthusiastic

Ledge vs. Boulder Granite

The purpose of a monument is to perpetuate the memory of the dead. An all-important factor, therefore, is its permanence.

Beautiful Winnsboro Granite is a true granite unaffected by the processes that disintegrate rock because of its protection from the elements, due to being deep in the earth in vast ledge formation. It has retained all of the strength and durability accomplished by the union of its beautiful crystals while molten millions of years ago.

Winnsboro Granite

"The Silk of the Trade"

therefore, will last many, many years longer than monuments cut from other granite. Its flawless beauty, stalwart strength, and great durability make it the ideal memorial granite. It possesses wonderful contrasts in shades and shadows. Thus, inscriptions cut on Winnsboro Granite Memorials can be read with greatest ease.

Beware of Boulder Granite.

A boulder is a piece of granite which has become detached from the earth stones ages ago, and has been left on the surface exposed to the elements. The smooth round edges of boulders show that the stone has begun to disintegrate. Such stone is inferior, having partially lost its vitality, becoming more brittle and tending to crumble though having a fair appearance. It naturally sells at a lower price, but if you get a monument of boulder stone, you have a stone which has already started to rot. It is well to remember, "The sweetness of low prices never equals the bitterness of poor quality."

Typical Granite Boulder.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on causual examination, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treasurer and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

Amendments to the Constitution—Bishops Vincent of Southern Ohio, Leonard of Ohio, Lawrence of Massachusetts (retired), Acheson of Connecticut, Gravatt of West Virginia, Anderson of Chicago, and Manning of New York.

On Canons—Bishops Gailor of Tennessee, Cheshire of North Carolina, Hall of Vermont, Tucker of Southern Virginia, Capers of Western Texas, Johnson of Colorado, and Dallas of New Hampshire.

Note.—The committees for the House of Deputies are held out until next week on account of lack of space.

Memorials and Petitions—Bishops Burton of Lexington, Mann of Southern Florida, Johnson of Missouri, Babcock (Suffragan) of Massachusetts, Colmore of Porto Rico, McDowell of Alabama, and Carson of Haiti.

Domestic Missions—Bishops Rowe of Alaska, Bratton of Mississippi, Sumner of Oregon, Burleson of South Dakota, Barnwell af Idaho, Saphore (Suffragan) of Arkansas, and Casaday of Oklahoma.

Foreign Missions—Bishops McKim of North Tokyo, Graves of Shanghai, Francis of Indianapolis, Roots of Hankow, Lloyd (Suffragan) of New York, Tucker of Virginia, and Freeman of Washington.

Rural Work—Bishops Acheson (Coadjutor) of Connecticut, Davenport of Easton, Coley (Suffragan) of Central New York, Hall of Vermont, Rogers of Ohio, Huston of Olympia, and Wing (Coadjutor) of South Florida.

Prayer Book—Bishops Sessums of Louisiana, Darlington of Harrisburg, Mikell of Atlanta, Parsons of California, Remch (Coadjutor) of North Carolina, and Strider (Coadjutor) of West Virginia.

Christian Education—Bishops Weller of Fond du Lac, Brent of Western New York, Knight (Coadjutor) of New Jersey, Thomas (retired), Longeley (Coadjutor) of Iowa, Ferris (Coadjutor) of Western New York, and Oldham (Coadjutor) of Albany.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., Coadjutor.

Old Barn Club Conference.

The Diocese of Southern Ohio held its ninth annual Conference on the Church's Program at the Old Barn Club near Dayton, September 26 to 30. The clergy were assembled for the first two days and the laymen for the second two days. The attendance of the laymen broke all previous records, reaching one hundred and six.

Both Bishop Reese and Bishop Vincent who were absent in 1927, were present this year. The outside leaders included the Rt. Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, Bishop of Alaska; the Rev. Harrington Littel of the Church of China; and the Rev. Leslie Glenn, Secretary for Student Work of the National Council. The local leaders included the Bishops of the Diocese, Archdeacon B. H. Reinheimer, the Rev. Maurice Clarke, Executive Secretary for Religious Education, and Dr. W. S. Keller, of Cincinnati, Chairman of the Diocesan Department of Social Service.

The program included a report from Dr. Keller of the Cincinnati Summer School in Social Work for Candidates for the Ministry, which had enrolled during the past summer seventeen men representing nine of our seminaries.

There was also a report from the Committee appointed at the last Convention in response to an appeal from Bishop Reese for $60,000 to retire mortgages incurred in the advance work of the past three years; $44,000 has been secured to date.

There was great rejoicing over the fact that there was definite assurance that the Diocese would pay its quota of the budget of the National Council in full for the third consecutive year.

Finally, a great deal of interest was aroused by the premier showing of a moving picture of the work of the Church in the Diocese, entitled, "The Kingdom That Must Be Built". The picture will be shown in all of the congregations of the diocese in connection with the Every Member Canvass.

NORTH TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. Eugene C. Seeman, D. D., Bishop.

The annual September meeting of the Executive Council was held at the Bishop's house, Amarillo. All clergy were present and Auxiliary representatives.

Beginning with Holy Communion at 9 A. M., continued session was held to close at 10:30 P. M.

Bishop and Mrs. Seaman entertained at lunch. Informal reports came in from all points. Supper was served at St. Andrew's new parish house.

National Council's increased budget was accepted for recommendation to January Convocation, which meets at Lubbock.

Good progress is being made in all fields in spite of the 77,000 square miles of territory worked by a limited force.

New college buildings are going up at Canyon and at Tech College at Lubbock. Two thousand students are expected at Tech. This college is only three years old.

The communicant list has doubled at Lubbock in two years, and a choir of thirty voices ranks high in all West Texas.

Rev. F. B. Eteson is leaving the district. His place has been filled for Plainview, Canyon and Dalhart by the coming of Rev. C. Harris, Jr., of Denison, Texas.

Mr. W. H. Martin, a candidate, has been placed in charge of Big Spring. A rector has been called for San Angelo.

Rev. Alex B. Hanson and bride will be in residence at Colorado shortly.

As usual, North Texas will be "over the top".

LOUISIANA.

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

The Gaudet Normal and Industrial School.

The Rev. St. Julian A. Simpkins, of the Church of the Epiphany, Spartanburg, S. C., has accepted appointment as Principal of the Gaudet Normal and Industrial School. This is an institution on Gentilly Road, maintained by the Church for the education of colored boys and girls.

The Rev. Mr. Simpkins comes to New Orleans from the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, where he has been since 1918 in educational and parochial work in Spartanburg.

Born in Aiken, S. C., in 1887, Mr. Simpkins attended St. Augustine School at Raleigh, and graduated from the Bishop Payne Divinity School in 1915. He was ordained Priest by Bishop Guerry in 1916. Before taking up work in Spartanburg he was rector of St. Augustine's Church, Aiken, S. C.

Mr. Simpkins married Miss Florence Speeght in 1914 and has several children. Mrs. Simpkins also is a trained teacher. He will be in residence at the School after the first of September.

Mr. Simpkins comes to Gaudet with the highest recommendations from prominent white and colored people of his diocese, which insures the progress and development of the School under his management.

J. B. S.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Parish Day was held in Severn Parish, Anne Arundel County, on Thursday, October 4. The Rev. Dr. S. Tagart Steele, rector of St. David's Church, Roland Park, was the preacher, and Bishop Helfenstein confirmed a class of seven and made an address. The meeting of the Convocation of Annapolis was held in the afternoon and the Rev. Edmund L. Gettier, Jr., rector of St. John's Church, Waverly, made an address on the General Convention and Diocesan plans for 1929. The services were very well attended and in fact the attendance excelled other years.

N. E. P.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

"The Missionary Car."

The Chevorlet Coach furnished for Mr. Dow's work by the diocese and usually referred to as "The Missionary Car", shows a speedometer record of a little over 44,000 miles in thirty months. This does not seem so strange, however, when one considers the large territory over which the City Mission work is done. Mr. Dow has listed some of the institutions, without regard for creed or color as follows:

"We go regularly to the Home for the Aged; the Home for the Blind; the Tuberculosis Hospital; St. Elizabeth's Hospital for the Insane; the National Training School for Boys; the National Training School for Girls; the District of Columbia School for Feeble-minded; the Industrial School for Colored Boys; the Workhouse; the Reformatory; Jail; and the Juvenile, Police, and Criminal Courts. Of course, our investigations and follow-up work, as well as relief, take us into the family; and constant streams of people are going in and out of our office door all day long. We are on call for the other hospitals and institutions."

M. M. W.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Chas. L. Brent, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Coadjutor.

Broadcasting Resumed.

Many interested will be glad to know that the Episcopal Morning Prayer service, broadcasted from the Churchill Tabernacle Station WKBW at Buffalo, N. Y., which was discontinued during the summer months, was restored to the air on Sunday, September 23, conducted by the Rev. James Cosbey, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd. This service is gratefully received by "shut-ins" and people in remote districts.

M. Y. T.

Personal Notes

The address of the Rev. J. Gibson Gantt is changed from Bowie, R. F. D., Maryland, to 1714 St. Paul St., Baltimore, Maryland.

The address of the Rev. H. A. Grantham is changed from 421 Stratford Road, Brooklyn, N. Y., to Penney Farms, Clay County, Florida.

The Rev. Charles E. McAllister, Canon of All Saints and Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Newark, has accepted a call to the rectorship of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore. He will succeed the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown, who has accepted a call to St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. McAllister will assume his new duties early in the coming year.

The Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, rector of Christ Church, Martinsville, Virginia, has accepted a call to become rector of St. David's Church, Austin, Texas. Mr. Boyd will assume his new duties the second Sunday in November.

ORDINATIONS.

On St. Matthew's Day, September 21, 1928, at Trinity Church, New Philadelphia, Ohio, Bishop Coadjutor Warren Lincoln Rogers ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Albert Clayton Baker. Presenter, Canon John R. Staller, D. D.; preacher, Dean Farnes S. White, D. D.; other clergy participating, the Rev. Messrs. W. M. Sidener, H. H. Parkinson and J. Keeney McDowell.

Mr. James Moulton Thomas and Mr. Charles Albert William Brocklebank were ordained to the diaconate on Sunday, October 28, by the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., in the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, Md. The Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown, rector of the church, presented the candidates for ordination and preached the sermon.

Mr. Thomas and Mr. Brocklebank are members of the senior class at the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Virginia.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Blessed is the man who has found his work."—Carlyle

"Our sins are the only things it is possible for God to forget."

"Live and let live" is a good maxim, but "live and help live" is a better.

Why build our cities glorious
If man unbuilded goes?
In vain we build the world, unless
The builder also grows.
—Selected.

The man who is doing nothing to help support missions is hindering God's work in his own heart.

Many a man who is anxious to reform the world has a gate that is hanging by one hinge.—Ex.

Unless you can do a kind deed without looking for applause, better leave it alone.

Others will judge you, not by what you can be, but by what you are; but you must judge yourself, not by what you are, but by what you can be.

The Christian who is afraid to mix with his fellow men lest his godliness be rubbed off has really but little godliness to lose.—Dr. Cuyler.

The mark of a saint is not perfection, but consecration. A saint is not a man without faults, but a man who has given himself without reserve to God.

"His story must have been true, for he got nothing for coming here—nothing except a grave."—This was the testimony of a Chinese concerning William Chalmers Burns, one of the pioneer missionaries to China.

If the Word of God is hid in the heart it will come at once into the thought when we are tempted, and the reply to the Tempter will be "It is written".

All evil, physical and moral, results from disobedience to law, physical or moral. All good is related to law, and flows from its observance. What is the progress of science but the discovery of God's laws? And what is wisdom but their application to life. The progress of civilization is nothing more or less than the discovery of God's laws and their application to life.—Josiah Strong.

If you are in doubt about the Christian faith, you cannot do better than to live up to the light that you have. Do the next duty, pray for light and the promise fulfilled in thousands will be fulfilled in you.—Ex.

Have I seven loaves, or two, or only a crust? Have I a weapon of any sort, a little admiration for Christ and His ideals, a little desire for His Kingdom, a little grace or talent that He can use? If I have—and who has not?—and if I offer it, the "Lord of all power and might" can use it, and use it to good effect for His ends.

AIDING THE ATHEISTS

"The American Association for the Advancement of Atheism" has issued a document designed to discredit the Bible and damage the Church.

As might be supposed in advance of reading the document, it contains many absurd notions and erroneous statements with reference to the history of the Holy Scriptures and the Church.

But the circular letter which accompanies the crass production and commends it to the consideration of the public contains one declaration which is quite correct. It says, "To overthrow the Church we must discredit the Bible in the minds of the masses"; and it affirms that the wide circulation of the document "will accomplish" that destructive end.

Of course, it will accomplish no such result. This is only one of the numerous predictions of the overthrow of the Christian religion which have been uttered at intervals for centuries past. Celsus, Porphyry, Voltaire, Paine, and others like them, have proclaimed the near approach of the perishing of Christianity and the death of the Church; but their truculent utterances of all such things have utterly failed of fulfillment. Such will always be the case. "The word of God liveth and abideth forever" (1 Peter 1:23), and no weapon formed to vanquish it will ever be successful.

But individual souls may be seriously and irreparably damaged by assaults on the Bible and attacks upon the Church. The deliverance of the atheists, to which reference has been made, will not have a widely extended influence; but there are men who claim to be Christians, and some who call themselves Christian preachers, who are aiding the atheists in their efforts to discredit the Bible.

These men are reviving the liberalistic teachings of the English deists of the eighteenth century and others of like kind on the Continent, such as Morgan and Bolingbroke and Vatke and Von Bohlen.

Dr. Thomas Kelly Cheyne, an English exponent and advocate of this sort of liberalism, in his book entitled, "The Founders of Criticism", acknowledges most candidly, not to say shamelessly, the great indebtedness of his school of critics to British deists.

The same is true of such rationalists as Graf, Wellhausen, and Kuenen in Germany.

It is from these liberalistic sources that clerical doubters in American pulpits and professors' chairs have drawn the sceptical theories with which they are aiding the atheists to discredit the Bible. They talk with amazing confidence about "the assured conclusions" and "settled results" of "modern criticism", thereby imposing upon persons more ignorant than themselves after having themselves been imposed upon by the unfounded claims of some of the critics.

But what results are assured? Does not every informed man know that the critics are at war among themselves, setting theory against theory; and that the same critic often puts forth more than one rationalistic speculation in his short life time and discards in the end what he defended at the first. Kautzsch of Halle, Kuenen of Holland, and Wellhausen of Germany, are in no wise agreed in their critical theories of the Old Testament and the history of the nation and religion of the Hebrews. And in recent years comes Steuernagel dissecting and rejecting all previous theories on the subject, and faring forth on new lines of his own, which later critics will doubtless discard with no less positiveness than that with which he discredits the "results settled" by his predecessors.

The changeful criticism of the Old Testament has an exact parallel in the rationalistic theories concerning the New Testament. Take, for example, the teachings of the Tubingen School of criticism, led by Ferdinand Christian Baur, which had a great vogue about the middle of the nineteenth century. It captivated for a time such scholars as Schwegler, Helgenfeld and Ritschl; and its conclusions were called "assured results". But now there is not a respectable critic in the world who accepts its "settled results" so called. Sir William Ramsay, who, from his preceptor, Dr. Robertson Smith, learned to accept some of its tenets, now, after archeological explorations of his own, has been led to reject the whole system in toto, and to expose mercilessly its "assured conclusions".

Professor Adolf Harnack, of Berlin, has renounced much of what in former years he accounted as "settled", and, he now, in his book, "Date of the Acts and the Synoptic Gospels", defends vigorously the traditional view of Luke's authorship of the third Gospel and the Acts.

Modern criticism is far more a modish vogue than it is a system of "settled results". In truth, the "higher critics", as the rationalistic critics are often called, are agreed upon only one tenet, namely, the supernatural is incredible and no miracle ever was wrought by Christ or anybody else.

But in their ever shifting theories, gathered about and from this tenet, the critics aid the atheists to discredit the Holy Scriptures. While professing to make belief of the Bible more reasonable and easy, they really unsettle faith and cast doubt on every page of God's written word. And the men in the pulpit, who parrot-like repeat their teachings, give popular currency to their pernicious speculations.

Here, for example, is a book by a man, who was formerly a pastor of a Presbyterian Church, and until recently was considered fit to teach theology in a theological seminary of the Northern Presbyterian Church. The title of the volume is "Revaluing Scripture", and in it the Bible is put on a level, and in the same class, with the Vedas of the Brahmans, the Avesta of the Zoroastrians, the Tripitika of the Buddhists, and the Koran of the Mohammedans, all of which he calls "Bibles". His book is not a "Revaluing of Scripture", but it were better called a devaluing of all revealed truth. His argument carried to its logical end is bald deism, far beyond the English deism of the eighteenth century. It can not fail to lead some minds to atheism.

Indeed, some deism is worse than atheism; for it holds that, although there is a God, He has not given, and never can give, a creditable revelation of Himself to the sinful and suffering race of man. It is better to believe that there is no God than to believe in the existenc of such an unloving and merciless deity. A deaf and dumb God who neither hears nor responds to the bitter cries of a benighted race for light, is nothing less than a demon.

At last, the issue now most acute in the theological world is a choice between naturalism and supernaturalism; between deism and the Christian revelation of God. The habit of the rationalists to find fault with the Bible leads directly and indirectly to deism, which if it be a religion at all is the religion of the uninspired reason of man.

The quarrel of evangelical Christianity with rationalism is not that human reason is useless, but that it should not be used unreasonably. Rationalism exalts human reason above revelation, and, when that is done, the way is opened for any sort of deism or atheism; and the ultimate end of deism is in atheism.

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA

Alfred B. Williams

The declaration and action of the eighteen clergymen at Annapolis were confirmed subsequently at a joint meeting of clergy and laity and Dr. Smith was chosen to be the first bishop as soon as he could be consecrated by the Bishop of London, it being agreed that no clergyman ordained by any bishop should be eligible to officiate in Maryland until he had taken oath of allegiance to that State. Dr. Smith, who was a Scotchman and then fifty-six years old, consistently opposed activity of the clergy in war, but obviously sympathized with the Americans through the struggle. He never was made bishop. If Governor Paca and the State Legislature ever intended to reestablish the Church as part of the State government, they were deterred by the storm of opposition. All they did was to incorporate the Protestant Episcopal clergy of the State, by act of 1784, as a society for relief of widows and orphans of the clergy.

FIRST AMERICAN BISHOP CHOSEN.

The clergy of Connecticut really acted for reorganization of the Church before those of Maryland, but their first meeting to consider the subject was secret, held at Woodbury the last week of March, 1783. Ten of the eighteen missionaries of the Church remaining in the State gathered and selected the Rev. Jeremiah Leaming and the Rev. Samuel Seabury, both of New York, as proper persons to be sent to London to seek consecration as Bishops of the American Church. Mr. Leaming declined because of his age, but Mr. Seabury consented. He was a native of Connecticut, son of a Congregational minister and served as chaplain of an American regiment in the British service. Probably this last fact was thought to improve his prospects of obtaining consecration in London. He was the first bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America and obtained consecration only by going to Scotland and receiving it there from Scotch bishops who never had taken oath of allegiance to the English king. He was consecrated at Aberdeen November 14, 1784, having spent months in London trying vainly to overcome technical and political obstacles.

Considering the wide separation of colonies, congregations and clergy by distances and difficulties of communication, the political, social and commercial confusion of the time, the ferocious animosities and the jealousies and antagonisms among the States previous to adoption of the Constitution—discords which gave England gleeful and well-founded anticipations of early dissolution of the new republic—the progress made in reorganization and reestablishment of the Church was wonderful. It gives proof that amid all the noise and clamors of demagogues and wars of factions and interests and the rising tide of atheism, of which we are told in the histories and the old and musty newspaper files, there was then, as always there has been, and is now, a mass of quiet, well-behaved, loyal Church people, silently dominant when real tests of strength came. The three men most powerful in making the Constitution which gave order and stability after more than five years of chaos and really established the Republic, Washington, Hamilton and Marshall, were of this element, all members of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

CLERGY OF THREE STATES CONFER.

The first Convention, or conference, representing more than one State for the reorganizing of the Church was at Brunswick, New Jersey, May 11, 1784, six months before the consecration of Bishop Seabury. This was attended by a few clergymen from New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The actual purpose of this meeting was to arrange for renewal of charters in the three States for a society for support of widows and orphans of deceased clergymen. The clergymen present, however, agreed on the general principles by which the Church in this country has been governed—recognition of the episcopacy, acceptance of the Book of Common Prayer and lay representation in the legislative bodies of the Church. Former meetings of the clergy had allowed laymen no voice, except by request or permission, and no voting power. The disregard of Church and religious affairs by the newspapers of the time is shown by the fact that the clergymen of Philadelphia did not know of the action of the Connecticut clergy, supported by those of New York City, in sending Dr. Seabury to England for consecration and learned of it first at the New Brunswick meeting. The plan of reorganization was devised and presented by the Philadelphia clergy.

This New Brunswick meeting also originated the movement for a General Convention of the Church, suggesting such a Convention to be held at Philadelphia in September, 1785, sixteen months later. The Church was in a state of suspense, Dr. Seabury awaiting decision on his consecration, a number of young men from the Southern States who had gone to London seeking ordination likewise awaiting action of the English bishops and parliament, a special act being required to permit their ordination.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed"—Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. L. H. Seeligson, of Cuero, Texas:

> "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him.
> For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust."—Psalm 103:13, 14.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

WHY THE AMERICAN RED CROSS ASKS FOR FIVE MILLION MEMBERS

ON Armistice Day, November 11, this year, the American Red Cross will ask the country for five million members in its ranks. This appeal will be made during the Twelfth Annual Roll Call, November 11 to Thanksgiving, November 29.

Why this appeal for five million members in the American Red Cross, when every American regards himself already as potentially a member, if not actually enrolled? The reason lies in just that fact; every American feels that he is perhaps the only one of his nation not actually enrolled, therefore, the strength of the organization is established, and if need be, they can call on him, too.

This is not a figure of speech. Scarcely a year has passed recently that the whole nation has not been asked to respond to an appeal from the American Red Cross for relief funds. In Florida, in the Mississippi Valley—these are recent memories, and it will be recalled that the Red Cross did not ask in vain.

The people who so freely contributed to these causes doubtless wonder why they are asked then, to join the Red Cross, when that organization has indisputable proof of their loyalty and attachment for it. The reason is, that without their membership, there could be no Red Cross organization; there would be no relief forces kept ready for any call which might arise; there would be no experienced workers to direct others in emergency; and there would be no reserve from which immediate needs could be met while the public was awakening to the need.

There are numerous other services of nation-wide benefit sponsored by the American Red Cross, but in the popular mind, disaster relief is the most spectacular as well as the one with which the Red Cross is most often associated. Therefore, consider the demands occasioned in this field.

In the five years of 1923 to 1927, inclusive, the American Red Cross administered relief funds aggregating more than $43,000,000. Of this sum, more than $5,000,000 represented appropriations made by the Red Cross from its own general funds, to supplement public contributions for the various disasters involved. The funds contributed by the public for disaster relief are used solely for disaster relief, therefore mean nothing in maintaining the organization of the Red Cross.

From the figures quoted, it will be realized that in addition to expending every dollar contributed for relief, for that purpose alone, the American Red Cross from its own general funds, furnished an average of a million dollars yearly toward the same cause, for the past five years. Thus, the funds contributed for disaster are merely in trust with the Red Cross; they go for disaster relief, and add nothing towards maintenance of the organization itself. For that, the Red Cross looks to its annual membership enrollment.

In asking for five million members this year, the Red Cross is providing for the growing demands upon its resources, and to maintain the normal program of activities which are a part of its peace time duty.

This program is broadly under the headings of war activities, which in reality are activities occasioned as an aftermath of the last great war; civilian relief, health education and junior work. All depend in great measure upon the services of volunteers.

To pick certain high-lights from this general statement; the Red Cross today is conducting on a national and international scale, services to disabled veterans of our wars. It has representatives in all veterans' hospitals, and backs these with the forces of the 3,500 Red Cross Chapters. This assistance is rendered in fields not covered by other agencies, Federal or State. In still another direction, it is not generally known that the Red Cross is probably the foremost agency actively combatting the annual death toll from water accidents, which average eighteen a day the year around. The Red Cross is the largest single employer of rural nurses in the United States; it is a pioneer in developing rural nursing, undoubtedly filling a great need.

In turning to the country annually, seeking nation-wide enrollment in its ranks, the Red Cross feels that it has the unquestioned support and backing of the American people. They have demonstrated this on all occasions. As Vice Chairman James L. Fieser said:

"If this were an industrial institution, popular good will would be capitalized in countless ways which our dignity prohibits. The attitude of industry—both capital and labor—is exceptional. Irrespective of differences on questions of economics, religion, politics, or race, the Red Cross has power as a binder and as a promoter of good will. It is universally recognized as being the sympathetic heart and the willing hands of a united people. It is uniquely free from the limiting sense of individual proprietorship and provincialism. The American Red Cross is one big national family of service."

In asking for five million enrollments in this family, the Red Cross is not demanding too much of its people. It is merely asking that four people for every hundred of our national population enroll, and thus pledge the support of their membership actively, where the others are content to feel merely spiritual kinship.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

MORNING V.

ALMIGHTY and Everlasting God, in whom we live and move and have our being, we, Thy needy creatures, render Thee our humble praises for Thy preservation of us from the beginning of our lives to this day; and especially for having delivered us from the dangers of the past night. To Thy watchful providence we owe it that no disturbance hath come nigh us or our dwelling, but that we are brought in safety to the beginning of this day. For these Thy mercies we bless and magnify Thy glorious name, humbly beseeching Thee to accept this our morning sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving for His sake who lay down in the grave and rose again for us, Thy Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ.

And since it is of Thy mercy, O gracious Father, that another day is added to our lives, we here dedicate both our souls and bodies to Thee and Thy service in a sober, righteous and godly life: in which resolution do Thou, O merciful God, confirm and strengthen us, that as we grow in age we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

But O God, who knowest the weakness and corruption of our nature, and the manifold temptations that we daily meet with, we humbly beseech Thee to have compassion on our infirmities, and to give us the constant assistance of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may be effectually restrained from sin and excited to our duty. Imprint upon our hearts such a dread of Thy judgments, and such a grateful sense of Thy goodness to us, as may make us both afraid and ashamed to offend Thee. And above all, keep in our hearts a lively remembrance of that great day in which we must give a strict account of our thoughts, words, and actions, and according to the work done in the body, be eternally rewarded or punished by Him whom Thou hast appointed the Judge of quick and dead, Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

In particular, we implore Thy grace and protection for the ensuing day. Keep us temperate in our meats and drinks, and diligent in our several callings. Grant us patience under any affliction Thou shalt see fit to lay on us, and minds always contented with our present condition. Give us grace to be just and upright in all our dealings, quiet and peaceable, full of compassion, and ready to do good to all men according to our abilities and opportunities. Direct us in all our ways and prosper the works of our hands in the business of our several stations: defend us from all dangers and adversities, and be graciously pleased to take us and all who are dear to us, and all things belonging to us, under Thy Fatherly care and protection.

These things, and whatever else Thou shalt see necessary or convenient for us, we humbly ask through the merits and mediation of Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

Our Father, etc.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION DAY BY DAY

By Alfred B. Williams

ELEVENTH DAY—MONDAY, OCTOBER 22.

In answer to a memorial from the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia requesting definition of "communicant", it was proposed in the House of Deputies to define communicants as "active" and "inactive". The active were described as those confirmed who communed at least once a year. Action was deferred after debate in which speakers said it would be establishing a vicious principle to class as "active" persons communing but once in a year.

At night the Rev. Charles M. Lathrop, Executive Secretary of the Department of Social Service, made a radio speech in which he attacked vigorously the rural jail system. The worst jails in the country, he said, are in Virginia and Maryland. He criticized with special bitterness the jail at Richmond, but said the whole jail management in Virginia was vicious, sheriffs and jailors being allowed to seek their profits from the difference between what they are allowed for feeding prisoners and how little they can pay for the food, often regardless of quality and quantity.

The National Episcopal Church League met and changed its name to "The Protestant Episcopal Church League". This is the organization that led in the fight for retention of the Thirty-nine articles. In reorganizing, it pledged continued battle against "illegal and Romanizing practices", and to maintain and defend the constitution and canons of the Protestant Episcopal Church and the rights of the laity.

The bishops at night were entertained by Bishop Freeman and the dean and chapter of Washington Cathedral at dinner at the Chevy Chase Club. One of the very few non-clerical guests was General Pershing. In an informal address he said two purposes for the remainder of his life were to assist in the building of the Cathedral at Washington to the glory of God and monuments in France to the memory and honor of the American soldiers who served there in the World War.

The House of Deputies, at a brief meeting in the afternoon, confirmed the elections as bishops of the Rev. W. M. Thomas, Southern Brazil, and the Rev. Drs. Binstead, Tohoka, Japan; Geo. H. Thomas, Wyoming; Goodwin, Nevada.

At a reception and dinner at the Wardman Park Hotel in honor of two young Armenian girls, adopted by daughters of the Rev. Wm. C. Emhardt, Field Secretary of Foreign Missions, Dr. Emhardt expressed the hope that the Near East Relief organization would be made permanent for mission work. J. J. Habdsaker, of Oregon, following, said the American flag had become the symbol of love, kindliness and life to 100,000 child refugees in the Near East.

TWELFTH DAY—TUESDAY, OCTOBER 23.

In the House of Bishops it was announced that the Rev. Dr. Frederick D. Goodwin, of Warsaw, Virginia, had declined to serve as Bishop of Nevada.

The house adopted resolutions similar to those of 1925 cordially approving the efforts of the United States toward world peace and disarmament and expressing appreciation of the work in those directions thus far done by the League of Nations and the International Court of Justice.

A resolution against compulsory military training in public schools caused sharp debate and finally was modified to calling attention of teachers and principals of schools having military training to the importance of inculcating devotion to peaceful means of settling disputes among peoples.

Storm and heat resulted from introduction of resolutions reiterating the action of the Convention of 1925 favoring faithful enforcement of the prohibition laws. This brought in politics. Bishop Gailor, Tennessee, said he was a Democrat, had voted for the resolution at the last Convention and would gladly vote for it again if this was not election year. He objected, however, to having the Convention take action which many would construe as political and which the Republican National Committee probably would broadcast for campaign use. Bishop Cheshire, North Carolina, said he, too, was a Democrat, but he did not want the Republicans to think the Church had receded from its position in favor of the laws and observance of them. The discussion caused some temper and some laughter. Bishop Ward, of Erie, concurred with Bishop Cheshire that defeat of the resolution might be taken to mean that the Church receded from its position in favor of prohibition. In resolutions offered by Bishop Green, Mississippi, "all bishops, priests, presbyters, laymen and laywomen" were exhorted to obey the prohibition law strictly and encourage its enforcement. Bishop Weller, Fond du Lac, resented this as an implied charge against the entire membership of the Church and Bishop Green said he did not know of any bishops who violated the law, but that it was violated by plenty of priests, presbyters and laymen. He withdrew his resolution, however. The original resolution was adopted after the word "renewed" as applied to the efforts of the government to enforce the law had been stricken out and a provision inserted that it should not be referred to the House of Deputies, but should go forth as the action of the bishops.

A resolution approving the efforts of the government to enforce the anti-narcotic laws was adopted, but one proposing that a week be set apart for education on the evils and dangers of narcotics was defeated.

The proposition that candidates for the ministry pass a physical and nerve examination was defeated. A resolution allowing provinces to elect missionary bishops was adopted by a close vote.

A resolution urging complete separation of Church and State was tabled, its successful opponents contending that the Episcopal Church had done nothing to make such declaration necessary for itself and that adoption might be construed as an attempt to rebuke other denominations.

The bishops adopted a resolution, by Bishop Leonard, Ohio, thanking Bishop Freeman, of Washington City, and the Chapter of Washington Cathedral, in the name of the entire Church, for the erection of the Cathedral on Mount St. Alban.

Bishop Leonard also presented tentative designs for flag and seal for the Church, which were referred to the committee that prepared them.

The New York Historical Society was designated as the repository for archives of the Church, having facilities for safe-keeping not available at the rooms of the National Council, Fourth Avenue, New York.

The House of Deputies practically unanimously concurred with the bishops in preliminary measures seeking unity with the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, Northern and Southern. The Rev. Dr. Stetson, rector of Trinity Church, New York, asked why the Baptists, Christian Scientists and Congregationalists were not included. The Rev. Dr. Humphreys, of Baltimore, remarked that probably the Presbyterians and Methodists were "the most promising and congenial neighbors", but withdrew the remark in deference to several protests. The Rev. E. Cowles Chorley, of New York, historiographer of the Church, suggested that the Methodists had been chosen because of their former connection with the Church and the Presbyterians were nearer the Episcopalians in faith, doctrine and practice than the others mentioned.

The House of Deputies reelected as members of the National Council Bishops Tucker, Virginia; Lawrence, Massachusetts; the Rev. Drs. W. H. Milton, Wilmington, N. C., and George Craig Stewart, Evanston, Ill.; Burton Mansfield, Connecticut; Samuel Mather, Cleveland; Louis F. Monteagle, San Francisco; former Governor Richard I. Manning, of South Carolina. It accepted the action of the bishops forbidding deaconesses to exercise their office after marriage. The committee on permanent headquarters for the Church was continued until 1931, several cities having made offers worthy of study.

The deputies concurred in appointment of a commission to consider changes in constitution and canons for the Church in China and in definition of members of the Church as "confirmed persons".

On motion of Dr. Stewart, of Evanston, congratulations were sent Bishop Graves on his seventieth birthday, October 23, completing forty years' service in China.

An appropriation of $2,500 was made for the commission on Faith and Order over the protest of Judge Henry, of Des Moines, Iowa, who said the commission was useless and had obstructed the one definite constructive attempt at the Lausanne Conference.

The house adopted a budget of $4,224,680 for each of the three coming years, reducing by $129,820 annually the budget submitted by the National Council.

THIRTEENTH DAY—WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24.

Agreement to adjourn without delay on the twenty-fifth having been made, a number of the lay deputies had left for their homes when the Convention met Wednesday. Some estimates were that half of them had gone. The vacant places in the hall were many. What with the regular meetings, committee conferences, a continual succession of semi-public and private social courtesies and attendance at appointed gatherings of organizations allied with the Church, practically every waking minute of members of both houses was occupied through two weeks and it was not surprising to read in the newspapers that many deputies showed signs of weariness. The bishops really seemed to stand the strain better than the deputies. This may have been partly due to the fact that each bishop was provided with his own chair, in which he might lounge as he liked, and with his own table, the latter usually covered with manuscripts, tracts, written and printed reports and memorials, which he could take up and consider at his leisure. A number of the bishops refreshed themselves frequently with tobacco and the reporters noted with delight that some of them were content with the democratic and economical pipe.

Bishop Roots, of Hankow, China, introduced resolutions asking the national government to abolish the discriminations against Japanese and Chinese in existing immigration laws. The change he suggested would, he said, allow but one hundred and forty-six Japanese and one hundred Chinese in addition to the numbers already permitted to come into the country each year. The bishops adopted the resolutions after brief debate, opponents possibly foreseeing their fate in the House of Deputies.

In executive session the bishops elected the Rev. Dr. Thomas Jenkins, rector of St. Barnabas' Chapel, McMinnville, Oregon, missionary bishop of Nevada, replacing the Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Warsaw, Virginia, elected to the same charge, but declining to accept. Dr. Jenkins was a candidate for this bishopric at the first election.

Bishop Slattery, chairman of the joint revision committee on the Book of Common Prayer, reported the changes agreed on, the result, he said, of fifteen years' work. The marriage ceremony omits the promise of the bride to obey her husband and the words, by the groom, "with all my worldly goods I thee endow". Other important changes in the book, as pointed out by Bishop Slattery, are:

In morning and evening prayer the minister may choose the psalms to be read, a shorter canticle may be sung at morning prayer than the Te Deum and there is wider choice of prayers after the recital of the creed.

New prayers have been added as follows: A prayer for those who travel by air, prayers for a State legislature, for courts of justice and for social justice.

The Holy Communion office has been rearranged, the Lord's Prayer following immediately upon the prayer of consecration. The prayer of humble access is brought immediately before the distribution of the Communion. In the prayer for the dead, the phrase has been added, "Grant them continual growth in Thy love and service".

Many new collects, epistles and Gospels have been added for special days and occasions.

The three baptismal offices in the old prayer book have now been combined in one; an additional Gospel has been added, the Sursum Corda is inserted before the consecration of the water and a new benediction has been taken from the New Testament. The language of the catechism has been clarified.

A new service for the "Visitation of the Sick" has been added, and at its close provision is made for anointing or laying on of hands together with prayer for the sick, a concession to the advocates of spiritual healing.

Bishop Slattery, in his statement, declared, "that the burial office has been enriched by new selections from the Scriptures and new prayers which give it a deeper note, and "a New Testament trust in place of the Old Testament awe" before the great mystery of death.

Special services for those at sea and for prisoners have also been included in the new book.

The Psalter has been entirely revised by a committee of competent scholars.

The articles of religion remain within the covers of the Prayer Book.

"In general," concluded Bishop Slattery, in his summary, "larger responsibility is placed upon the officiating minister, and many opportunities for shortening the services are given. While the genius of Archbishop Cranmer's English remains, together with the liturgical treasures of the past, the book becomes distinctly a book of our own time."

The bishops completed approval of the budget for the three years ahead, calling for more than $4,000,000 a year for maintenance and $3,000,000 for the mission field. They voted, also, to name a commission to confer with the "Holy Catholic Church of China", which has petitioned for absolute independence. It is composed of missionary districts maintained by the English, Canadian and American churches of the Episcopal faith.

The House of Bishops adopted resolutions, later adopted by the lower house, thanking President Coolidge for his address to the Convention and his expressions of militant Christianity. Other resolutions of thanks, voted by both houses, were to Bishop Freeman, of Washington, and his diocese for hospitality and excellent arrangements and preparations for the Convention; to Admiral Cary T. Grayson, general chairman; Hugh T. Nelson, general secretary.

In the House of Deputies there was a day of sharp discussions, including some harsh criticism of the bishops, of which the sensational newspapers made much, "playing it up" joyfully in head lines. The most angry debate was on the resolutions, sent from the bishops, asking modification of the immigration laws to remove discriminations against Japanese and Chinese. Western deputies, clerical and lay, expressing the public feeling of their section, opposed vigorously any commitment of the Church to facilitation of Oriental immigration to this country. Former Attorney General Wickersham led the fight for adoption of the Bishops' resolutions. Dr. Ze B. Phillips, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, in the chair, had ruled that the resolutions, when first presented, had been tabled. Mr. Wickersham protested earnestly against this ruling. If the great American nation could not treat the civilized Japanese as equals the Church could not hope to have them come in as brethren, he contended. Dr. Powell, of the Divinity School of the Pacific, and Deputy Wickoff, of California, said the country did not want another great problem of race assimilation forced upon it. The Rev. H. K. Sherrill, of Boston, urged that the Church take action. He said the reason why so many young people were turning their backs on the Church was that it shrank from live and vital questions—gravely debated references to Isaac and Rebecca in the Book of Common Prayer and blindly followed the state in matters seriously threatening Church welfare. This was directly opposed to the remark of Bishop Reese, of Atlanta, regarding the same subject in the House of Bishops, that the Church constantly was being asked to "stick its nose into business of the state department and give advice to the government of the United States". The deputies finally voted against concurrence with the bishops, one hundred and fifty-seven to seventy-six, thereby declining to ask change in the laws regarding immigration of Orientals.

The deputies referred to a commission a resolution offered by the Rev. Dr. Dudley, of Washington City, urging stricter and more uniform divorce laws and measures to prevent hasty marriages and marriages of defectives. Supporting this suggestion, Dr. W. Sinclair Brown, a physician, said it was time the governments take as much care for human beings as is taken for cattle and sheep.

A proposed change of the constitution provided that a majority of the House of Bishops should be the majority of those present, providing two thirds of all were present, instead of the majority of all. Dean Powell, of the Divinity School of the Pacific, leading the fight against the change, said small attendance at the House of Bishops frequently was caused by the fondness of the bishops for golf and their presence on the links when they should be attending to business. Burton Mansfield, of Connecticut, talking on the same line, said it was being proposed "to enlarge the army of Episcopal golfers". The change was defeated, decisively.

Elections to the National Council from provinces were announced in the House of Deputies as follows: First Province, the Rt. Rev. James D. Perry, Bishop of Rhode Island; Second Province, William J. Tully, of Long Island; Third Province, the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, Bishop of Pennsylvania; Fourth Province, the Rt. Rev. T. T. Reese, Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Ohio; Fifth Province, the Rt. Rev. J. M. Francis, Bishop of Indianapolis; Sixth Province, the Rev. A. E. Knickerbocker, of Minneapolis; Seventh Province, Dr. W. P. Witsell, of Arkansas, and Eighth Province, the Rt. Rev. L. C. Sanford.

FOURTEENTH, AND LAST, DAY—THURSDAY, OCT. 24.

Naturally, little business was done the fourteenth and last day of the 1928 session of the Triennial Convention, likely to be one of the most memorable in the History of the Church. Bishop Murray, presiding bishop, declared this Convention to have been the best and most promising of great results of the ten he had attended.

The pastoral letter was read at the closing service at the Church of the Epiphany and the last act of the assemblage, while lacking the brilliant out-door autumnal setting of sunshine and coloring leaves of the first, was deeply solemn and impressive. The several hundred men, many of them with well trained voices, joined in singing, without instrumental music, "Blest be the tie that binds". The effect was magnificent.

The bishops, before adjournment, heard a very earnest plea from Bishop Well, of Fond du Lac, for a special children's crusade to fill the Sunday Schools and assure proper instruction and training in devotion and work. The weakest part of the Episcopal Church, he said, is its educational work.

Bishop Slattery announced that the new revised Book of Common Prayer will be ready probably by February, certainly by Easter, of 1929.

One of the last official acts of the House of Deputies was to confirm the election of the Rev. Dr. Jenkins as Bishop of Nevada.

The most prominent and remarkable fact of the last day was the general and deep spirit of optimism on the near approach of Christian unity.

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

V.

LET us be assured that if in any field of interpretation, the literal meaning is becoming, it is the realm of the doctrine of our Lord's return.

During the centuries of

The Ten Persecutions,

wide in extent, frightful in character, the Church lifted longing eyes to heaven in hope that He would bring surcease from this unutterable suffering. The accession of Constantine to the throne of the Caesars in A. D. 321, brought the liberation in a way not anticipated; and with it came a new and wondering condition of mind. It was as though the imperial purple were thrown over the fair and scarred shoulders of the stricken and distracted Church; and she forgot her miseries in the new-found gladness of her bewildering exaltation. As she had accepted her agonies with a literal sense of their fulfillment of her destiny, she now with equal appreciation of her release, took a similarly literal view of the novel situation. Eusebius, in describing a feast given by the emperor to the returned exiled Bishops, says: "It was a picture on earth of the kingdom of God." Was this respite a blessing of the Lord or a temptation to the humoring of the flesh? We are not the ones to charge her; but in the long drawn retrospect, we may not be amiss in asking, Did the Church all too willingly settle down as though her Lord had ceased to regard His explicit purpose to come again? And coupled with this loss of the upward look, came the Allegorizing Interpretations of Origin.

This method of regarding the former strictly observed and literal aspect of the promise of the Lord Jesus, swept the complacent Church from "the simplicity that is in Christ" until today, it is the dominant system of exegesis. Scant patience is awarded the teacher who would unbalance the composure of the Church by any introduction of this thought-to-be obnoxious doctrine. Painful indeed is the attitude of the supervising clergy of one Protestant denomination, who put merciless screws upon any minister under their administration who dares to oppose the accepted standard.

To substantiate our contention that our Lord meant just what language is calculated to convey in His promise to come again and that the first Christians so understood the doctrine, we may apply our thought to the consideration of some phases of the truth in which only a literal interpretation is logically permissible. There were three feasts in the Old Testament which clearly indicate the anticipated literal work of our Lord Jesus. At these three feasts, every male was required to appear; no consideration of convenience or personal choice was permitted.

The Feast of the Passover.

was the foundation of the system of the feasts and the first to occur. There can be no question that our Lord fulfilled this feast in His death on the Cross. There, He met sin, as "the Lamb of God" (John 1:29; 1 Peter 1:18, 19). This literal event, a fact in history undoubted, did away with that literal event of which it was the completion. The rending of the veil (Matt. 27:51) removed the office of priestly intervention and opened the "new and living way into the holiest" (Heb. 9:8; 19:19). There can be no allegorizing of the distinct and incontrovertible situation, that Israel is now and has been since the fall of Jerusalem, predicted by our Lord (Matt. 23:37-39), "without a king, without a prince, without a sacrifice" (Hosea 3:4). This is beyond all intellectual explanation in view of the marvelous preservation of the Jewish race. Passover, today is a singular contradiction of all that is historically treasurable by the ancient race. Passover is held; the unleavened bread is scrupulously eaten; there are the bitter herbs, the dish of vinegar, the unbroken shankbone of a lamb, but no shed-blood. And strangely weird is the pronouncement of every father as the feast concludes: "At present we celebrate here; next year, in the land of Israel, we hope. This year we are servants here, but the next we hope to be freemen in the land of Israel." Can any measure of allegorizing satisfy this literal cherishing that burns with an unquenchable flame in the breast of every pious Jew? And this insatiate hunger to dwell in the land of Israel is indissolubly bound with the expectation of the coming of the Messiah.

The Feast of Pentecost occurring fifty days after the first day of the week succeeding Passover is another literal fulfillment of another literal purpose. It was the time of "the first-fruits" (1 Cor. 15:23), when our Lord was revealed by the Holy Spirit to the spiritual consciousness of humanity. The disciples could not understand the meaning of the resurrection when it was secretly announced to them (Mark 9:10); nor yet after that august event could they fully comprehend it (Luke 24:45-47). And during the memorable "forty days" (Acts 1:3) they alone were partners with Him in this wonderful mystery (Acts 10:41). The secret was to become the property of all mankind when the day of Pentecost was "fully come" (Acts 2:1). Then, the testimony rang out through the lips of illumined and liberated Peter. Was Pentecost a literal day? Did it have a literal mission? Was the outpouring of the Holy Spirit a literal transaction? All historical witness to the truth has its affirmative answer.

The Feast of Tabernacles,

the third and last of the three feasts at which all males were to appear (Ex. 23:14-17), has also its unique application to the literal meaning of the Word of God in connection with our Lord's return. It followed the "day of atonement", but inasmuch as the race is no longer agricultural, its import in our own land is but slightly recognized. But if Passover was fulfilled in our Lord (1 Cor. 5:7) and Pentecost the universal unveiling of the Son of God by His Spirit, we must admit Tabernacles into the consideration of the significance it possesses. Passover and Pentecost need the rounded whole which Tabernacles supplies. And we can see the present literal return of the Jew to Palestine, and the strange phenomenon of his adopting agricultural pursuits, as a testimony that the nation into which Christ was born in the flesh is to dwell in its land and in due time welcome Him in the midst of His people (Zech. 12:10; Isa. 25:9; Ezek. 28:25). So long then, as Tabernacles is unfulfilled in the scope of the Old Testament provision, so long are we held to the strong conviction that only a literal advent can possibly materialize the plan of God.

Failure to comprehend this, to us, incontrovertible truth, has led many to find refuge in the assumption that the only material aspect of His coming lies in its being the occasion for the destruction of the earth. In numberless hearts, the "blessed hope" conveys no joy; for it involves the desperate expectation of a "grand smash-up". If this were so, we should have to readjust our entire perspective of the divine intention. No doubt it arises from the statement of St. Peter (2 Peter 3:10), that in the day of the Lord, "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth and the works that are therein be burned up". But let us be advised that

The Day of the Lord is Like Any Day.

It has its morn, and night. This is apparent from the answer of the watchman in Isa. 21:11, 12, to the appeal, "What of the night?" The response is "The morning cometh and also the night". No. The Lord's glorious appearing does not strike terror to the hearts of His own who have the Scriptural vision. It brings joy to the believer, for it ushers him into the presence of his Lord (1 Thess. 4:13-18); it has the challenging appeal of the Lord's own longing in the assurance that when He comes we shall be with Him and like Him (John 14:3; 1 John 3:2).

Let us plead with our poor, frightened hearts, to be glad in the hope of that day (Titus 2:13); for it inaugurates "the restoration of all things, spoken by the mouth of all God's holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:19-21). This sin-scarred earth cannot be destroyed until He has once more beautified it with its original glory, when the desert shall "blossom as the rose" and "the earth shall be filled with glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. 35:1; 11:9). Even poor dumb nature is silently and patiently waiting for this august event in the day when He shall be vindicated on the very soil where His blood fell in propitiating efficacy (Rom. 8:19-23). So then let us refresh our souls with the assurance of the vital hope; and stand firm in the acceptance of the simple promises of the Word of God, in the cogency of their import, the drawing of their winsomeness. For "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. 10:37).

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate Dean of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania, 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

Purpose.

The Purpose of Deuteronomy is to teach us how to discover God's ways with and for us in the place of trial, to reveal principles to guide us into the enjoyment of our blessings in Christ, and to unfold the future glory of God and His redeemed (1 Peter 1:7; Eph. 1:17-19; 2 Cor. 3:18; Rev. 21:3).

I. Chs. 1-11. The Lord reviews our past failures to point out the cause, and to encourage us to press on toward the goal, because He is not discouraged with us (Matt. 14:31; Phil. 3:15; Isa. 40:28; 42:4; Ps. 27:14).

1. Chs. 1-4. The unbelief which hinders our enjoyment of God's blessings in Christ, hinders our being made a blessing, and must be judged and put away in order that the faith of Christ may lead us on (Heb. 12:1-2; 4:9, 10; 2 Peter 3:18; Mark 4:26-28; Gal. 2:20).

2. Chs. 5-11. A review of the covenant of grace under which God has placed us as believers in Christ, reveals the marvelous privileges which are ours toward God and toward man (Heb. 10:15-18; Gal. 5:1; 1 John 4:19; 3:16; Rom. 1:14; 13:8; 1 John 1:7).

II. Chs. 12-28. If God in grace sought to guide us when we were trying to serve God in our own way, how much more will He guide us by His Word and Spirit, when we yield our lives to the Lord and thus come into the place of blessing (Ps. 119:105; Amos 3:3; Ps. 32:8; John 16:13-15; Rom. 8:14; Col. 1:9; Eph. 5:17; Rom. 12:1, 2).

1. Chs. 12-18. To know Christ as Prophet, Priest, and King, will bring to our hearts a knowledge of God's blessings in Christ, and to live as prophets, priests, and kings will make us the channel of blessing to others (Deut. 18: 18; Acts 7:37; Heb. 7:25-28; 8:1; Zech. 6:13; 1 Cor. 14:1-3; 1 Peter 2:5-7; Rev. 1:5, 6; 5:9, 10).

2. Chs. 19:28. Blessing was the result of obedience for Israel under law, but obedience is the result of blessing for every believer under grace, and every obedient believer is a blessing to others (Deut. 28:1, 2; Rom. 8:1 R. V.; Eph. 1:3; 4:32; Heb. 6:14).

III. Chs. 29-34. God's purpose to conform us to the image of His Son will be fulfilled to His glory, because He will do it, in spite of our failures (Rom. 8:29, 30; 1 Thess. 5:24; Phil. 1:6; Titus 3:5; 2 Cor. 3:18).

1. Chs. 29-31. God has given us His righteousness in Christ, and by a holy life we are witnesses of that fact to others (Cor. 1:30; 2 Cor. 5:21; Rom. 4:5; 1 Peter 1: 16 R. V.).

2. Chs. 32-34. All that Christ is unto us and has done for us will be fully revealed to and through us as believers, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ (Eph. 3:17, 18; 2 Cor. 3:18; 1 Peter 4:11; Eph. 2:7).

TWENTY-THIRD SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O God, our refuge and strength, who art the author of all godliness; Be ready, we beseech Thee, to hear the devout prayers of Thy Church, and grant that those things which we ask faithfully, we may obtain effectually; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE ascription, "our refuge and strength", reminds us of the Forty-sixth Psalm, "Deus noster refugium", God is our hope and strength, a very present help in trouble". The refrain of this Psalm emphasizes this thought of God as our refuge in time of trouble; it is twice uttered by the Psalmist: "The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah." Many commentators think that this word Selah indicates a solemn pause or rest, which meaning suits well here, as it bids us rest here and ponder a moment on the presence of the Lord of hosts and the God of Jacob, our refuge. And so in using this collect in our devotions, it were well, after the words, "our refuge and strength to remember the Selah, and pause a moment to get the full comfort of the words and to realize that the Lord of hosts is really with us, a very present help in trouble. The petition of the collect is double; that God be ready to hear the devout prayers of His Church, and that we may effectually obtain what we faithfully ask. Observe the antithesis: effectually, faithfully; no petition can be effectual, unless it be faithful. The word, effectual, is taken from St. James' Epistle (5:17 and 18), where the Apostle uses it to describe Elijah's prayer, which was so faithful and effectual: "a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth. . . . And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit." The Apostle might well say: "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

THE Epistle for this Twenty-third Sunday after Trinity, is from Phil. 3:17-21. It begins with a pathetic appeal to the Christians at Philippi not to walk in the ways of those who are "enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is destruction, whose appetites are their gods, and whose glory is their shame, whose minds are given up to earthly things". The nature of those whom Christians should not follow, is well described here in five characters: First, they are "enemies of the cross of Christ", that cross which for hundreds of years had been the most shameful and hated thing that the world could conceive of, as the hangman's halter is now regarded, but has become since the Lord of glory hung upon it, the most glorious thing in the world. Few of this class at the present day, I imagine, called by the Apostle, "enemies of the cross of Christ", would be willing to admit the charge, and be classed with the many, Jews, Greeks, and Romans, who in St. Paul's time, and for two or three centuries later, hated and despised the cross on which they thought the despised Nazarene had perished justly under Pilate's sentence; but let them remember Jesus' words (Matt. 12:30): "He that is not with me, is against me; and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth." Jesus divides all in reach of the Gospel, into but two classes, those with Him, and those against Him; the gatherers, and the scatterers; He allows no third class, no neutrals. And the second character of this class is that, "their end is destruction", unless indeed God bring them to repentance and a better mind. A third character of this class makes "their appetites their god". And here again, I think, there are few of this class of whom it is not true (enemies of the cross), that would admit the charges, and there are some of them of whom it is not true; many, we hope, whose appetites are not their god, having higher and better aims, and yet far from the highest. Intellectual, and even moral good may be their high aspirations; but their richest gain in this direction can be but loss, unless they can glory in the cross of Christ. There only is the true, beautiful and good to be found in its perfect form. The fourth and fifth marks apply to all this class of "enemies of the cross of Christ". They glory in their shame, who "mind earthly things". And what is the true value of these earthly things? Looked at in their true relation to heavenly things, and used as the gracious gifts of a loving Father, they conduce much to our happiness in this brief life that is here our portion; but see what the Prophet Isaiah says of them to those who "are given up to them" (40:6-8): "All flesh is grass, all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it; surely the people is grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever."

Such are the characters of the class we should not follow. The Apostle does not here give the characters that mark the true Christian; but marks them by their heavenly citizenship (or conversation, in the old English form); but to the Galatians (5:22-23), Paul gave these marks as the fruit of the Holy Spirit, viz.: "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance", and these marks well become one who, while yet on earth, has claimed and received the citizenship of heaven, through faith in the Lord of that kingdom, for the coming of which we are taught constantly to pray; and He will come in due time, according to His promise, often given, of which St. Paul reminds us here, speaking of His return from heaven: "From whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself."

THE Gospel for the Twenty-third Sunday after Trinity is St. Matt. 22:15-28. It tells how the Pharisees "took counsel how they might entangle Jesus in His talk", by asking Him a political question. It is interesting to observe how ready Jesus is always to answer questions such as an honest enquirer has the right or privilege to ask, and how completely He baffles those who come to Him with some sinister object in view; or who, at least, have no real desire to be instructed by Him.

THE AUTHENTIC LITERATURE OF ISRAEL, Vol. II.: By Elizabeth Czarnomska. The Macmillan Company, New York. Price $5.

This book is interesting, although depressing, as showing that the students in another one of our schools, namely Sweet Briar College, are being fed upon the husks of criticism. The advertisement on the cover gives the clue, "The books of the Old Testament," it says, "are composed in great part of clippings taken from four or five documents which were in the possession of its compilers. This work reverses this process, by rearranging these detached fragments into an approach to the original homogeneous documents and makes it possible to discover the general points of view current in the age of Hebrew history which produced each one of them."

What the book does not let the casual reader into is the secret of this discovery of the points of view of these ages. It does not tell you that the views supposed to be current in a certain age have already been determined, not Scriptural study, but by a preconceived notion, born largely in the brain of Wellhausen. It neglects to say that he and his followers had an arbitrary theory of the way in which the Old Testament religion developed and that they set to work to reconstruct the Old Testament to suit their theory. Therefore if a passage in an earlier book stood in the way of their theory by coming too soon in history, they politely relegated it to a later date, and as authority gave their own dogmatic dictum.

A brief illustration from the present work will suffice to explain the point. Several of the prophecies from Micah and Isaiah to which Christians have always looked as pointing to the coming of the Messiah are cut from their place in these prophets and placed after the First Book of the Maccabees. The reason being the authoress's dictum that "the doctrine of the Messiah arose very late".

She also gives us the mutilated sections purporting to be P's additions to the Books of Genesis and Exodus. There is no evidence to show that she has ever read H. M. Wiener's work criticising the absurdities of the whole J E P D analysis. One of the reasons why the theory has lasted so long is just that its proponents cannot be gotten to read or to face seriously the arguments brought against their position by conservative writers.

THE ENGLISH IN ENGLISH BIBLES: A treatment of the Gospel of St. Matthew, Chapters 1-14. J. F. Sheahan. Cloth, Pp. 143. Published by the Columbus Institute, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Price $1.25; paper, 75c.

A truly unique contribution. The author gives three lines of translation: The Rhemes of 1582; the Authorized (King James) of 1611, and the Revised of 1881. These are so paralleled as to bring before the reader at a glance, the distinguishing differences. We are first impressed by the fact that a Roman Catholic publication, seeking to acquaint the reader with the Scriptures, is so openly circulated. We are aware that the "Roman Church professes to permit its members to read the Bible, but when we seek to obtain one at price within reach, we are discouraged. There are plenty of the fourteen dollar editions, elegantly bound for embalming family records and gracing the center tables. But this reviewer recalls that some years ago, after vainly searching all the Roman Catholic publishing houses in New York City, he had to order a reasonably priced copy by mail from the Catholic Bible House in Philadelphia.

While the Greek student will find much to sharpen his wits in this comparative study, the English reader, for whom the book is especially designed, will equally enjoy and profit by the translations so plainly displayed. All of us who have given any attention to the contrasts between the confessedly blunt phraseology of the King James translation which may be due as Hofman has put it to "The Germanizing of the Authorized Version", and the more smoothly flowing renderings of the Douay Version, issued two years before, will admit the author's contention as to the superiority of the Rhemes New Testament incorporated in Douay. In one conspicuous instance, however, "the pot" cannot "call the kettle black". Both versions admit that grammatical blunder which for centuries has rasped the nerves of the sensitive purists, namely the question of our Lord (Matt. 16:13), "Whom do men say that the Son of man is?" (This quotation from Rhemes.) The Revision of 1881 does rectify that error; but George Washington Moon enjoyed a merry time in his "Revisers English", discovering and exploiting sundry mistakes of the modern translators. The American Revision later, made profitable use of Mr. Moon's criticisms. Of course, we must allow that as the Revisers were bound by the principles ordained ere they began, to hold as strictly as possible to the Authorized, there was not large room for literary liberty.

We have not the space to select illustrations of the author's able discriminations. The reader will soon discover them. He makes most of the renderings, correspondent with his judgment, as to the Greek, illustrative of the superiority of the Rhemes New Testament. And the honest scholar will agree in many of the instances. Surely, when such a book comes before us, the very fact of its existence is enough to compel a good-natured acceptance of the challenge.

But it is not alone in these striking parallels that the value of the book resides. There are historical and exegetical notes interspersed throughout the volume that will be a mine of wealth to those who have not the material at hand which treats of the themes under discussion. So that the average reader will possess a fund of information here condensed which would otherwise require a number of separated contributions. We thank the author for this wisely included department; and unfeignedly we may express the hope that he will pursue labors further, giving us the whole of St. Matthew and ultimately the entire New Testament similarly treated.

TRIUMPH OF THE LAITY.

Mr. Editor:

I write to tender to you my profound and unqualified thanks for the great part The Southern Churchman has taken in securing the retention of the Thirty-nine Articles. Truly, this is something that makes one say, "What hath God wrought"? It is a triumph of the laity, in very large part.

I shall write further on this matter when time permits. Meanwhile, let me thank you more than I can tell.

COMPENSATION FOR CLERGY INADEQUATE.

Mr. Editor:

I have noticed many articles in the past few months relating to the question of compensation offered to the priests of our Church, which is, as every one knows, totally inadequate for present-day needs.

Some time ago I addressed a communication to you on this subject suggesting that the diocesans secure an endowment fund for the proper support of our diocesan missionaries. This project would not entail a great hardship upon those in authority. Once our diocesan missionaries were given a just compensation it would not be long before the average clergyman was securing a right living.

A long association with the clergy of our Church has given me an insight into the serious results involved in the Church's shortsightedness, so that I can speak as I do.

The salaries of our clergy have not kept pace with the times; that is matter of record. It is partly the fault of the clergy themselves because they do not present the matter to their vestries. The average vestryman, who is generally an employer of labor, would get only second-rate help or be forced out of business, if he offered his employees the wages with which he insults his parish priest. When one takes into consideration the years of study and the hardships through which the clergy have to pass, the Church's injustice is apparent. The remuneration clergymen receive comes nowhere near making it possible for them to bring up their families and to support themselves in keeping with their office. When complaint is made that physicians' fees are too high the response usually is: "Consider the number of years spent in preparation and the cost involved." Why not consider the same facts in reference to the clergy? I have known of many cases which are pathetic, to say the least. It is time that the vestrymen of our Church put their clergymen in a position which will command the respect of the Church and the community in which they live.

It might not be a bad plan if our esteemed bishops would address a letter setting forth the need of just and adequate income to those in charge of the churches under their jurisdiction. Can you picture the result of proper salaries, particularly for diocesan missionaries? There would be an influx of candidates for the ministry which would astound the local Churchmen and women of our Church.

I hope that this communication may start a movement the results of which will be in keeping with the dignity of our Church. She represents a wealthy constituency, but one which lacks woefully in respect to the question of a just wage for its parsons.

Clergyman Has Unique Experience.

The Rev. William Henry Pettus, rector of Grace Church, Everett, Mass., who has recently returned from a visit of two months in Europe, preached on the last Sunday morning in September in the Cathedral at Norwich, England, to a large congregation and received a honorarium from a fund left over three centuries ago to pay visiting preachers at the Cathedral, by Sir John Pettus, Baronet, of whom the Rev. Mr. Pettus is a lineal descendant, and the first clergyman of the Pettus family to receive this honorarium at Norwich Cathedral.

General Convention Endorses Near East Relief.

Washington, D. C., October 25, 1928. —The General Convention of the Episcopal Church at its closing session in this city today, passed a resolution endorsing the $6,000,000 Underwriting Campaign of the Near East Relief.

The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas, the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church has learned with gratification that the Trustees of the Near East Relief have undertaken an underwriting campaign to raise six million dollars for the liquidation of obligations and the conservation of results; and

Whereas, it is a special cause of gratification that the Near East Relief has in its final budget made provision for the conservation of the religious forces of the Near East through the strengthening of the ancient native Churches, and also that, having begun to minister to the neglected Assyrian Race, it has now made generous provision for their future welfare; be it

Resolved, the House of Bishops concurring, That we heartily endorse this final effort of the Near East Relief to discharge its duty, and urge both clergy and laity to respond generously and cooperate whole-heartedly, and be it further,

Resolved, the House of Bishops concurring, That this resolution is adopted with the understanding that, in consideration of such cooperation, irrespective of the outcome of the campaign, no phase of the program be neglected, and that adequate provision be made for the welfare of Nations heretofore largely neglected, and that the supervision of this program as far as the cooperation of the Episcopal Church is concerned be referred to the National Council.

Youngest and Oldest Episcopal Bishops.

While the oldest bishop in active service attending the recent General Convention was without question, the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, Bishop of Southern Ohio, who was born in 1845, there was a close race for the honor of being the youngest.

Three of the bishops were born in April, 1887. The laurels, however, go to the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, Bishop of Florida, who was born on the twenty-seventh. Bishop Robert E. L. Strider, Coadjutor Bishop of West Virginia, born on the ninth, leads Bishop Edwin Penick, Coadjutor Bishop of North Carolina, by five days.

Catholic Congress to Hold Annual Sessions in New York City for First Time.

The Fourth Catholic Congress will hold its sessions in New York City on Tuesday, November 13, Wednesday, November 14, and Thursday, November 15. This will be the first time for the sessions to be held in New York City. Last year the meetings were held in Albany; in 1926 in Milwaukee; and in 1925 in New Haven, Conn.

From acceptances already received, it is estimated that nearly 2,000 clergy and laymen will attend the Congress, the headquarters for which will be at the Hotel Pennsylvania. A new feature this year will be the dinner of delegates on Wednesday night, November 14, for which nearly one thousand guests have already accepted. Colonel Anthony Dyer will act as toastmaster of the dinner.

"The Catholic Life" will be the general subject for the addresses and discussions at the meetings, and ten special papers will be read bearing on this theme, by visiting clergy.

The Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York, is honorary president, and Bishop Charles Fiske, of Central New York, and Bishop Colemore, of Porto Rico, are honorary vice-presidents; the Rev. S. C. Hughson, O. H. C., is chairman of the Congress Committee. Serving with him are the Rev. Sidney Atmore Caine, vice-chairman and secretary of the Congress; the Rev. Charles C. Edmunds, D. D.; the Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, and the Rev. Frank Damrosch, Jr., secretary of the Committee.

The Rev. Dr. Randolph Ray, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration (The Little Church Around the Corner), is chairman of the New York Committee on arrangements, on which are also the Rev. Thomas A. Sparks, chairman of the dinner committee; the Rev. Frank Simmonds, chairman of the ecclesiastical exhibits committee; the Rev. Dr. William Pitt McCune, chairman of the information committee; the Rev. John Whiting Crowell, chairman of the altars committee; Dr. Charles Sears Baldwin, professor of English at Columbia University, and Haley Fiske.

THE CALL TO THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

The Y. M. C. A. has designated the week of November 11-17, 1928, as a week of prayer for young men and boys. A letter addressed to the Leaders, Members, and Friends of the Young Men's Christian Association, reads as follows:

"Again it is our great privilege to summon the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States to a week of special concentration in prayer. The period designated by the World's Committee is November 11-17. During those days we shall experience the joy of conscious union in meditaton and intercession with our brothers of fully fifty nations. . . . .

As we enter upon the second year of the Centenary period we turn our thought to the theme "Lord, teach us to Pray". It seems to express the obviously growing desire among men for real communion with God, and for the exercise of the unselfish and potent ministry of intercession. How ineffective we are in our praying! What might it not mean if even the leaders of our Movement, both lay and secretarial, devoted themselves during this appointed week to faithful effort to enter into that art of praying by which some men lay hold upon the unseen forces that control the affairs of men. We need a schooling in prayer.

Let this week be not only a period of unusual praying but the introduction of a year in which a great deal more time and energy than ever before will be expended in prayer—that most rewarding activity.

We would suggest that in each local Association leaders be selected early from among those who have a rich experience in availing prayer, and that plans be carefully laid whereby they may induct many others into more resultful praying. No merely formal prayer meetings will accomplish what we have in mind.

Carefully prepared outlines and other helps will be provided by the committee that is serving us in this observance. There is a growing literature written in the terms of our present day mood and experience. Let all the available resources of persons and of the printed page be thoughtfully used.

The present year has opened new doors before the Associations and the Churches and set old ones further ajar. The swift change in China favorable to the Christian forces, the Jerusalem Missionary Conference of the leaders of both the sending and the receiving Churches of the world, the ripeness spiritually of Latin America's intellectual leadership, the full mutual understandings enjoyed in working relations with the Eastern Orthodox Churches—to mention only a few great features of progress—have greatly increased the Association's opportunity for service. Here at the base, confronted with increasing opportunities and responsibilities both at home and abroad, as a Movement we seem at times beset by a kind of helplessness and confusion that holds us back. Difficulties though great in themselves seem magnified out of their true proportion, and we are prone to let them become stumbling blocks rather than stepping stones leading to higher attainment and ever greater achievement. Shall we not turn afresh to Jesus with the desire that will not be denied, to learn from Him how to pray so that we may rise out of blindness and weakness into clarity of vision and to renewed purpose and power to do the will of God.

On behalf of the General Board of the National Council of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States of America.

Adrian Lyon, Chairman.
John R. Mott, General Secretary."

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Chas. L. Brent, D. D., Bishop.
Rt Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Coadjutor.

Two of our churches in Buffalo are losing their rectors, who for good and sufficient reasons are retiring from active service. The last Sunday in August the Rev. C. Herbert Caviller terminated a rectorship of thirty-six years in All Saints, and the middle of September the Rev. Charles A. Jessup, D. D., resigned the rectorship of St. Paul's after a term of service covering fourteen years. Both of them have been strong and effective workers, potent forces for good in the community, beloved by all who knew them. Each leaves behind him an enviable record of achievement.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

St. John's, Mt. Washington.

The opening services in the new St. John's Church, Mt. Washington, were held on Sunday morning, October 14. Bishop Helfenstein preached the sermon and made the dedicatory prayers. Immediately after the processional hymn, the vestry formed a procession and marched to the Chancel steps and the Senior Warden presented the keys of the new church to the rector in token of the formal opening of the new church and parish house for work and divine worship. The Junior Warden then returned to the rector the parish Bible to be restored to its proper place in the church as an outward expression of the purpose for which this new edifice has been erected.

The Church Normal School of the Diocese of Maryland has opened with about one hundred and fifty enrollments. There are three sessions in the school this year, instead of two as in former years. The first session covers coaching classes in nine grades of the Christian Nurture Series and also a lecture course on the Young People's Movement. The second session is recreational and instructive and occupies twenty minutes between two strenuous periods. The third session covers the choice of the following lectures: Life of Christ, Church Doctrine, Church at Work, Church History and Story Telling. These classes are given on any T. A. Rulings and certificates are awarded for the work done.

The Convocation of Towson met in St. John's Church, Worthington Valley, on Wednesday, October 31. It was opened by Morning Prayer and Sermon by the Rev. Henry B. Thomas, rector of Sherwood Parish, Cockeysville. After the business session and luncheon, "The General Convention and Evangelism" was the topic for the afternoon discussion.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Consecration of Bishop Thomas.

The Rev. Albert S. Thomas, rector of historic St. Michael's Church, Charleston, South Carolina, will be consecrated bishop of the diocese of South Carolina in St. Michael's on November 30, St. Andrew's Day, succeeding Bishop Guerry, whose tragic death made the vacancy. The consecration will be the first service of the kind ever held in Charleston—a strange fact when the long identification of that city and the distinction of its clergy are recalled. The three most recent bishops were consecrated at Columbia, capital of the State—Bishops Capers, Guerry and Finlay.

The ceremony will begin at St. Michael's at 11 A. M., with the Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, of New York, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, officiating and assisted by the Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, Bishop of North Carolina, and the Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, Bishop of Western Texas, who will serve as co-consecrators. The Rt. Rev. T. D. Bratton, of Mississippi, will preach the sermon, and the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, Upper South Carolina; and the Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, Atlanta, will present the bishop-elect.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

To Hear Reports of Convention.

The Diocese of Springfield is arranging for the holding of twelve dinner meetings in as many parts of the diocese during November to hear the reports from its bishops and deputies to the General Convention and the Woman's Auxiliary gatherings, and also to hear something about the conventions of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Daughters of the King. Three years ago five of these dinner meetings held following the General Convention brought together nearly five hundred families of the diocese, and it is expected that more will hear of the Washington meetings than was the case following the last General Convention

Bishop Promoting National Church Unity.

The Bishop is determined that this diocese shall cooperate in every way possible in the general enterprises in which the National Church is interested. For instance, the request has gone out over the diocese for offerings for the American Church Institute for Negroes in its efforts to raise the final amount due on its new building program. Then the Bishop has asked the people to send in their offerings on the second Sunday in November for the American Church Building Fund Commission, which Commission has most generously come to the financial assistance of this diocese in building programs in the days gone by. The appeal for the observance of Sailors' Day is commended by the Bishop; and Rebuilding Sunday, November 11, for aid to help the Church make a new start in Florida and Porto Rico is also something the Bishop is interested in.

The Diocese welcomes the assistance of the Rev. Harwood Sturevant, one of the Auxiliary General Secretaries of the Church, who is at work with the clergy and vestries in seven parishes of the diocese in two-day program conferences, and also is speaking in five churches on the two Sundays he is in the diocese.

TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. C. S. Quinn, D. D., Bishop.

Funeral Services For Bishop Kinsolving.

The Bishop's death was most peaceful. After having spent a very pleasant evening at the radio with friends, upon retiring he said to his attendant that he felt a bit uncomfortable. In less than a few minutes he put his hand under his head on the pillow and passed peacefully to sleep.

A private service was held on Saturday at noon in All Saints' Chapel, Austin, conducted by the rector and a former rector of the chapel, the Rev. Messrs. Harris Masterson, Jr., and DuBose Murphy, and at 3:30 the Burial Service was read in St. David's Church, Austin, with the Bishop of West Texas, the Rt. Rev. William T. Capers, the Bishop of North Texas, the Rt. Rev. E. Cecil Seaman; Bishop Quin and the Rev. Peter Gray Sears, officiating. Interment took place in a local cemetery in Austin.

Twenty-seven of the diocesan clergy were present in their vestments, and representatives from many of the congregations in the diocese.

Preaching Mission.

On the top of the Blue Ridge Mountains, near Luray, Virginia, is one of the outposts of the church, a part of Luray Parish. The church has there a schoolhouse, which is used on Sundays for our Sunday School and services, and also a resident worker, Miss K. S. Haile. There, on Tanner's Ridge, amid the peace and quiet of the mountains, we are to have a Mission, conducted by the Rev. Dennis Whittle, of Covington, Virginia, from November 20 to November 30, to try to bring God's peace and quiet into men's lives there. We need the prayers of our Church people in this work, that behind the few of us gathered together on the Ridge may be the great body of our church. Will you join with us in prayer that God's healing, saving, life-giving power may be shown forth everywhere, and in this mountain community, so that this mission may result in lives deepened, transformed and reclaimed by the Power of our Lord?

F. J. Warnecke,
Student Pastor.

Church Membership in Virginia.

Total Church membership in Virginia, in 1926, according to a bulletin of the Census Bureau, was 1,172,363, including Jews. This is an increase from 1916 of 224,227. In the same period the total population, including all races

MEMORIALS.

Nell V. Mellichamp.

Thus they remember me, who once their earth-house shared;
Memorials of carved marble, rare things of beauty, by skillful hands prepared.

Would that they needed not to keep their memory green
With gifts like this, in all their beauty mere things that may be seen!

But, that because I lived, some suffering heart they'll bless,
Or fill some little minds with God and love that sorrow may be less.

More costly these, more rare than crafts-man's art,
That earth has known—more like to Heaven; these offerings of the heart.

"What Should Be the Christian's Attitude Toward War?"

The approach of Armistice Day with its celebration will bring out the colorful aspect of war. Bands will play, parades will form, military reunions will occur—all of which will emphasize the glamor and the appeal of war. This element of war cannot be disregarded, neither can it be ignored. Human beings seem to be so constituted as to respond affirmatively to the lures of war.

When the band is playing and the colors are flying it is hard to think of war's other side. Tonight's discussion must point out that war is wasteful, exhausting, demoralizing and accompanied by many sinister evils. The band does not play as we "go over the top". Cheering ceases while "taps" is being sounded. The "hurrah, boys, hurrah" has ceased to echo when the various installments of the war debts are being paid.

Several questions might be offered for discussion in the consideration of tonight's topic. Let some time be given to the point: "Is war barbaric?" Shells are manufactured for one purpose only. To kill soldiers. Poison gas is produced for but one purpose. To kill soldiers. Shrapnel has but one use and target practice has but one aim. Killing the enemy is the avowed purpose of war. Kill enough of the enemy's number and he will give up. Is killing barbaric?

A second question may be profitably discussed. "Is war satisfactory?" That is, does war permanently settle differences between nations? It seems to have been hit upon as a method of settling differences between nations. A little reading of history would lead one to discover that France and Germany have had more wars than the one fought recently. "Alsace" and "Versailles" seem still to be irritating words in those two countries.

Christians ought to ask a third question: "Is there no other way of settling differences between countries?" We who love the title of our Lord which terms Him "the prince of peace", believe that there are other methods. There are other methods that are certainly more economical, that leave less harshness and ill-feeling in their train, and that have embodied in them more of the spirit of the Lord Christ.—G. W. Brown, in Presbyterian Banner.

Character and Religion.

Louis Deschamps.

It is sometimes argued that religious faith is secondary to character, and that as long as one lives a moral life there is no great importance to one's creed. While it is true that conduct is a test of creed, yet it does not follow that conduct is independent of creed. If the duties and tasks of life can be performed by sheer power of will alone, it does not mean that the inspiration and joy of spiritual vision derived from religious faith is not worth-while. To deny one's self the privilege of being helped by religion does not justify the assertion that character is superior to creed. Without the support of a religious faith morals are very often mere arbitrary laws requiring an unreasonable surrender of personal freedom in the opinion of those who do not have the inspiration of devotion to a sacred faith. Many people thoughtlessly confuse character with servitude and conformity with cowardice for this reason. Character without religious faith is purely mechanical. It is like warfare without patriotism, labor without loyalty, and sacrifice without love.

There must be something more to character than mere submission to rules. Morals are either the result of spiritual conviction, or they are the begrudging obedience of unwilling victims of the tyranny of a heartless power of will. To require morals without the help and inspiration of religion is to except too much of human nature. Virtue by personal prowess of self-control alone is very likely to become pharasaical and intolerant of others. The one who fights the good fight without religion deserves great respect for the depth and power of his character, but there is also something pitiful in the thought of the needless strain of sheer determination of one who struggles without apparent purpose and without the warmth and light of faith.

A complete character also involves the individual's perspective outlook, and appreciation of life. If duty must be performed blindly, or if life's hardships must be endured stolidly, character has litle to do with religion. Many noble and brilliant minds acknowledge no religious faith, yet live exemplary lives as far as character and morals are outwardly concerned. But it should not be taken for granted that life requires a sacrifice of the individual in ruthless disregard of his happiness and desire for self-expression. Religion gives the background of universal tradition and mystic vision. Nothing but religion can offer an explanation of life sufficiently satisfying to justify the demands of character. An explanation that goes no farther than the eye can see and the mind can understand in human terms is a cruel mockery of the heroism and aspirations of a life. To complete character there must be a consciousness of immortality, a profound conviction of an infinite purpose pervading life in the will of its Creator. Unless there is a reverent sense of worship, an acceptance of the Unknown from mystic inspiration rather than from logical explanation, character is not complete.

Religion is as essential to character as character is to religion. The performance of duty is in itself a satisfaction, yet God does not require a lifetime of grim and desperate obedience. It is not His will that any one should obey His commandments at the expense of cheerful and inspired conceptions of life. Religion not only makes consecration to great and eternal ideals a vital part of individual philosophy, but it also fires the imagination with a broadness and clarity of vision that individual misfortune or circumstance can not entirely dim. Character is softened by the brilliant sunset hues of the traditional glory each succeeding generation commits to its descendants in the sacred form of religious faith and ideals. The stern dictates of character are more easily obeyed if supplemented by the consciousness of a sacred trust to be preserved in a way befitting the greatness of the past. Religion makes character a virtue because it reconciles duty with the purpose and significance each questioning individual demands of life.

WANTED: A MAN.

A Dreamer—One Who Sees Visions.

A man whose horizon extends beyond the sordidness of life; one who is not dismayed by the dark shadows of slums and saloons, because in his dream he sees a city free from every contaminating influence, in whose streets little children will laugh and play because there is nothing to make them afraid.

Wanted: A Man.

One who will not falter when the enemies of righteousness assail him with lies, nor when the friends who want peace at any price caution him to go slow for fear that he may "start something".

Wanted: A Man.

One who has the courage to foregather with those who believe as he does about civic and social purity and justice and who are ready to make common cause against standpatters, softtreaders, sickly sentimentalists, and all that tribe that pretends to find comfort in the fallacy that "God's in His heaven, all's right with the world"—even though little children are needlessly dying, poverty-stricken women are wearing their hands thin and making their hearts sick by degrading toil, and when whole communities are living below the level demanded by a decent civilization.

Wanted A Man.

One who will take risks and dare defeat, but who truly believes that the day has not gone by when "one shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight".

Wanted: A Man.

One who still believes in humanity, in spite of its frailties, its ingratitude, its shortened memory, its spinelessness, and all those weaknesses that flesh is heir to; a man who will remember that Jesus gave Himself for just such "weaklings"—lived with them, loved them, died for them; a man, therefore, who will remember that "a servant is not greater than his master".

Wanted: A Man.

One who has in him the stuff of which martyrs are made, which goes into the composition of heroes, but who never thinks of himself as a hero or martyr.

Wanted: A Man.

Just one man. Not an army, nor a battalion, nor a regiment—not even a company. Just one man—that's all! One man. One such man in your town could work wonders. He could remove mountains. He could lift valleys. One man.

How About You?—Charles Stelzle, in Christian Statesman.

SUNDOWN.

(When the wounded in hospitals came to die, said a British officer, their last request, in the great number of cases, was for the prayer, "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep".)

When the sun of life is low,
When the dewy shadows creep,
Say for me before I go,
"Now I lay me down to sleep".

I am at my journey's end,
I have sown and I must reap;
There are no more ways to mend—
"Now I lay me down to sleep".

Nothing more to doubt or dare,
Nothing more to give or keep;
Say for me the evening prayer,
"Now I lay me down to sleep".

Who has learned along the way—
Primrose path or stony steep—
More of wisdom than to say,
"Now I lay me down to sleep".

What have you more wise to tell
When the shadows round me creep?
All is over, all is well,
"Now I lay me down to sleep".

—B. L. T., in Chicago Tribune.

What the War Did to My Mind.

What troubled me was to find the point of contact between religion and toiling, moiling, fighting, floundering sons of man. We were suffering from a perverted emphasis. We had made the accidental things to be fundamental. The churches were divided upon frills and punctilios. Like many, I had to think my way through again. That was chiefly what the war did to my mind. It was not a complete mental revolution; it was rather the application of an acid test to what I had already dimly acknowledged. To most people religion is not a useless or unattractive thing, but the churches seem to them to bury a few grains of wheat in a bushel of chaff. It is the chaff they contend about among themselves, it is the chaff they offer to hungry men.

I had been brought up a Baptist. I had been led to attach tremendous importance to much or less water and to special conditions for its use. All this fell away from me as one casts off a heavy cloak in warm weather. I did not repudiate it. I had merely no use for it. I was dealing with men to whom I gave often the last message or the last grip of the hand before they went into the "line", from which they frequently did not return. Under such circumstances such an ordinance was not only impossible; it was irrelevant. Never again could I give it a place of primary importance. I ceased to be a sacramentarian, save in the sense in which Jesus caused common bread and wine to be charged with meaning unutterable. I came to believe—and I still believe—that birth, marriage, and death are the greatest because the most universal of all sacraments. I would rather that men perceived in them the Real Presence than in something else which needed to be "fenced" from the vulgar. I sought for the elemental in religion, holding that to be truest which makes the most direct appeal to all men where they truly live. . . . By sheer force of observation I became an inter-denominationalist, or rather sought for something that lay beneath them all.—Dr. F. W. Norwood, in The Christian Century.

O COUNTRY OF OUR LOVE AND PRAYER.

Our thought of thee is glad with hope,
O Country of our love and prayer;
Thy way is down no fatal slope,
But up to freer sun and air.

Great, without seeking to be great
By fraud or conquest, rich in gold,
But richer in the large estate
Of virtue which thy children hold.

With peace that comes of purity,
And strength to simple justice due—
So runs our loyal dream of thee:
God of our fathers, make it true!

—Whittier.

The Christ of the Ages.

Christ abides, towering, sublime, supernatural, our Saviour, our Master, our Lord. We worship Him in the beautiful recollections of His power as men saw it among the hills and by the Lake of Galilee. We worship Him still greater in His own immediate contact sway He turns and overturns judges, saves, and transforms through all the Christian centuries.

We worship Him once again, not yet, but it will be, when at last the purpose of God is completed: for some day all truth will be finished, all love perfected, and every dream come true.

At last, the unity of God's holy order will be as supreme among men as now it is in nature, and not one deed or thought or emotion even of Him who is least will depart at all from His perfect purpose. In that great day, and over that vast empire of the soul there will be one name, Jesus, the name that is above every name. Can it fail? No more than the stars can fall. It is complete in Him.

And yet, though He is sufficient, He waits for us, that we may build His purpose with Him. He holds back archangels, that we may tell the story. He holds back His own omnipotence that we may move it by our prayers. What He will do for me, where we fail, is largely beyond our knowledge. It is a part of the secret of His providence, a part of the mystery of His dealings with us in death.

But here is the vision: Christ standing there against the background of the centuries, supernatural, transcendent, the one supreme miracle. Christ the answer for every need, the solution for every problem. Christ the way, the truth, the life, the road by which men come to God. The one sublimity unchanged, unchangeable, the power behind the centuries, the goal toward which they move, the abiding hope of men.—Henry Paul Sloan, D. D.

Some Weather Signs.

Signs of fair or foul weather are noted very carefully by country people. Some of them are more inclined to believe in the old sayings about the weather than in any readings from barometers or the predictions of weather prophets. Here are a few old saws:

Evenings red and next morning gray are certain signs of a beautiful day.

If the cock goes crowing to bed, he'll certainly rise with a watery head.

When black snails cross your path, black cloud much moisture hath.

When rocks fly sporting high in air, it shows that windy storms are near.

When the peacock loudly bawls, soon we'll have both rain and squalls.

If the moon shows like a silver shield, be not afraid to reap your field. But if she rises haloed round, soon we'll tread on deluged ground.

A rainbow in the morning gives the shepherd warning; that is, if the wind be easterly, because it shows the rain cloud is approaching the observer.

A rainbow at night is the shepherd's delight; that is, if the wind be westerly, as it shows that the rain clouds are passing away.

If at sun-rising or setting the clouds appear of a lurid red color, extending nearly up to the zenith, it is a sure sign of storms and gales of wind.

When you see a gossamer flying, be ye sure the air is drying.

If the fog lies close to the surface of the ground until it is gradually dissipated by the sun, the day will be bright and fine.—Exchange.

MY TASK.

To love some one more dearly every day,
To help a wandering child to find his way,
To ponder o'er a noble thought and pray,
And smile when evening falls—
This is my task.

To follow truth as blind men follow light,
To do my best from dawn of day till night,
To keep my heart fit for His holy sight,
And answer when He calls—
This is my task.

And when my Saviour by and by to meet,
When faith hath made her task on earth complete,
And lay my homage at the Master's feet,
Within the Jasper walls—
This crowns my task.

—Selected.

A Hint.

If the people who want to do good among the poor would give up patronizing them, would cease trying to convert them before they have gained the smallest personal influence with them, would visit them as those who have just as good a right to be here as they have, it would be all the better for both, perhaps chiefly for themselves—George McDonald.

"The beneficent claim of Christ is laid upon international affairs without abatement. Mankind is His. So it ought not to be a matter of amazement or dissent when the truths and principles by which He lived are used as the key to international problems. However remote general assent to this may be, the Church can not debase the universal currency of the highest Christian ethic by filing away its sharp, exacting edge or limiting its circulation."

OUR SEA.

All people are like little ships,
The world as one big sea,
Where each of us puts out to sail
To reach life's destiny.

Most people sail where waves are smooth
Where sailing's only fun,
But they are never nearer home
Than when they had begun.

No, we must sail the sea that's rough,
And face storms that are hard
If we would reach life's destiny,
The City of Our God.

Timmy's November Game.

Timmy looked rather crossly at Aunt Lu.

"Of course I know that November is for Thanksgiving Day," he said. "But what is one day, 'way off at the end of the month? I want something for all November."

"Certainly you do," agreed Aunt Lu. "Well, why not try being thankful all through the month? Sort of practice up for Thanksgiving Day."

"How?" demanded Timmy practically.

"Well, you're inclined to be rather a fuss budget," began Aunt Lu. "Lots of things you don't like to eat—things that many a hungry boy would be glad enough of. And you're fussy about clothes, too; that lavender shirt with the little mended place, that you don't like to wear, is better than lots of boys have. You try this month to find things to like—to be thankful for, and you just forget about the things you don't like."

"How many things must I find?" asked Timmy.

"One for every day," said Aunt Lu.

Timmy tried hard not to be a fuss budget. When he wanted to say at breakfast, "I hate oatmeal", he changed and said instead: "This is very nice toast". One day when almost everything had gone wrong, he could be thankful that there hadn't been an earthquake; and on another day he pleased Aunt Lu by throwing his arms around her and saying: "I am thankful for you."

It was getting on toward Thanksgiving Day when Timmy went to do an errand for Aunt Lu at a shabby little house away up at the other end of the street. Mrs. Jones, who lived there, helped Aunt Lu with her cleaning and baking.

While Timmy waited for Mrs. Jones to pack up some cookies that Aunt Lu wanted, he talked to Joe Jones, who was in his class at school.

"I'm playing a game all myself," said Timmy. "Every day I find something to be thankful for. Today it's cookies."

"Huh!" said Joe Jones. "That's not much of a game."

"It is, too," said Timmy, "only you couldn't play it."

"Why not?" demanded Joe.

"'Cause you haven't enough nice things," said Timmy with a small boy's frankness. "Now, this house isn't pretty enough to be thankful for."

"It's got a prettier view of Sunset Mountain than any house on the street," said Joe.

"And you have to work after school," went on Timmy.

"Sure I do," agreed Joe, "and before, too. I just got a dandy new job selling papers. Have to meet the five o'clock train every morning."

"Why, it's all dark then," said Timmy in an awed voice.

"Sure it is," admitted Joe cheerfully. "It's great exploring around in the dark."

"Do you like oatmeal and cream for breakfast?" asked Timmy solemnly.

"I never tasted cream, but I think oatmeal and milk are fine," declared Joe.

"What are you the most thankfulest of all for?" demanded Timmy.

"My mother," said Joe with shining eyes.

Timmy went home and told Aunt Lu about Joe, who liked to carry papers before school and deliver washings for his mother after school and who had never tasted cream or oatmeal and was thankfulest of all for his mother.

"He ought to get a prize, oughtn't he?" said Aunt Lu. "He plays the thankful game so well."

"Can't we give him a prize?" begged Timmy.

Aunt Lu thought a minute. "We'll ask him and his mother to have Thanksgiving dinner with us," she said.

Joe thought it would be great to have dinner at Aunt Lu's. Timmy decided to wear his lavender shirt with the mend in it; he explained to Aunt Lu that Joe's clothes always had lots of mends, so it would be better for him to have one. But really it didn't matter much. Joe was so excited about the big turkey and the crimped cranberry pie and the ice cream shaped like a brown melon that he wasn't thinking about clothes. After dinner the two boys and Timmy's dog climbed Sunset Mountain and saw a rabbit and a weasel that had part of his brown summer coat on and part of his white winter coat.

"My, there's a lot of things to be thankful for around here," said Timmy, going to bed that night. "But tonight I'm the most thankfulest 'cause I've got Joe for a chum."—Christian Observer.

Before the Party.

Genevieve Lareaux brushed a tear from her cheek as she stepped out on the narrow sidewalk. The little brown terrier jumped up and licked her hand and ran on ahead to lead the way. Genevieve's mother stood on the doorstep.

"Maybe Father can take you for a boat ride when he comes," she said.

Genevieve tried to smile as she glanced back, and then ran up the street after the eager dog.

"Here, Pym!" she called. "Here! Here!"

Pym stopped and waited a moment, wagging his tail, and then ran on again

The street was very narrow and steep, and was bordered on either side by houses of various sizes and shapes. It led from the wharf below on up into the Rue de Revelle which wound its way to the top of the slope, past Fontenac Castle and into the country beyond.

"Hello, Genevieve!"

She stopped and looked up. On a balcony across the street a young girl stood smiling down at her.

"Are you invited to the party?" she asked.

"Yes," replied Genevieve. "Aren't you?"

"Yes, indeed; I'm going. So is Marie, and so is Jean, and nearly every body. There'll be special musicians from Laroc, and a fortune teller, and I don't know what all. Won't it be fun?"

"I guess it will," answered Genevieve. "Here, Pym! Here!"

And off she ran up the street after her frolicsome dog. But as she ran tears again filled her eyes, because she could not go to the party. She had nothing that would do to wear, for they were poor, and this was to be a big party at the Renigny's fine home where all the dresses would be pretty ones.

At the top of the hill the narrow street came into a wide boulevard. Here she stopped and turned and, shading eyes with hand, looked out across the harbor and into the ocean beyond to see if her father's ship was coming in, which was two days overdue. But she saw only a fishing smack and far out a passing schooner, and the blue stretch of water glistening in the sunlight, and the soft, white clouds beyond.

Troubled with thought she went on and came to the castle wall and walked alongside it quite a distance with scarcely notice of where she went. Suddenly she heard a scream and, looking up quickly, saw just ahead a fat woman, red-faced and bare-headed, with a black cat on her shoulder, and backing away with a basket between her and Pym, who was jumping high at the cat and barking ferociously.

"Pym! Pym!" cried Genevieve, rushing forward.

But just then Pym sprang almost into the fat woman's face, and the terrified cat jumped to the ground and ran like a streak, with Pym in hot pursuit. The fat woman dashed after them, shouting and waving her basket, and Genevieve swiftly followed.

The cat darted through a gateway in the wall, a wide entrance against a side of which the chubby keeper leaned in a tilted chair, dozing in the bright sunshine; and Pym, racing past, knocked into the up-raised legs of the chair and sent the astonished gatekeeper sprawling to the ground.

"Hey! Thunderation!" he yelled, disentangling his legs from the chair and scrambling up.

Before he realized what had happened, the fat woman rushed past him, followed by Genevieve, and then catching sight of Pym he shrieked at all three.

"Stop! Stop! Halt!"

But they paid no heed, so he set out in pursuit, shouting and spinning his short legs as fast as they would go. Presently he overtook them at the foot of a tree, into which the cat had climbed to safety and around which Pym was racing and barking, with eager eyes looking upward.

"You villain!" snarled the keeper, making a dash at him; and Pym, with a mischievous gleam in his eyes, scampered away for a playful retreat and then turned and waited.

The gate-keeper ran at him once more, and off he went again; and around and about they went until, coming near the gate, Pym spied the keeper's hat near the overturned chair and picking it up dashed joyously away through the shrubbery.

"Hey! Drop that hat!" the keeper exploded, jumping high with rage, and sped after him as if for his life.

Pym dashed here and there and led the chase far into the castle grounds. Genevieve followed as fast as she could, and at length observed the Countess de Saignes and several others standing and watching the chase. Coming closer she saw that they were very mirthful over what they beheld. And just then Pym, as if he knew the Countess, ran and put the hat at her feet.

When Genevieve came up the gatekeeper was standing before the Countess, looking very mad, yet abashed, hat in hand, explaining how it happened; and as he finished some one said:

"I'll wager my horse you were fast asleep!"

At this they all laughed, all but the keeper, who bowed to the Countess, turned and strode quickly away. In the midst of the merriment the Countess caught sight of Genevieve, with Pym in her arms.

"Come here, child," she said.

Genevieve came to where she was.

"Is that your dog?" she questioned.

"Yes, Countess."

"And what is your name?"

"Genevieve."

"A pretty name," said the Countess. "And the dog's?"

"His name is Pym."

"Hm!" mused the Countess. "And who named it Pym?"

"I did," replied Genevieve.

The Countess studied the child's face.

"How old are you, Genevieve?" she inquired.

"Ten," said Genevieve.

"And you've been crying," observed the Countess.

Genevieve started back.

"How did you know?" she asked.

"Your eyes are red," explained the Countess.

Genevieve was silent.

"Won't you tell me about it?" said the Countess kindly.

Genevieve looked up into her eyes and, obeying a sudden impulse, told her about the beautiful party to which she was invited and could not go.

"Well, well," spoke the Countess. "Now tell me about your father and mother."

And so they talked on a while until Genevieve, realizing she must go, started away.

"Wait a minute," said the Countess. "Could you take a note by to Joan Barbette on your way?"

"Yes, Countess," replied Genevieve.

So the Countess scribbled off a note and gave it to Genevieve, who said, "Good-bye" and departed.

Joan Barbette lived near the Rue de Revelle in an old brick house with an artistic dressmaking sign on the door. It so hapened she was on the porch when Genevieve came up.

"Here's a note from the Countess," said Genevieve.

"Oh! From the Countess!" exclaimed Joan. "How nice! Thank you so much!"

Genevieve turned away, but had not gone far when Joan called her.

"Wait! Come here, child. Listen!"

Genevieve returned, surprised and wondering.

"My dear Joan, please make this child, Genevieve, a beautiful party dress, as a special favor to me. Countess de S."

Genevieve stared, silent, amazed.

"I'm to make you a beautiful party dress," said Joan.

"Oh!" exclaimed Genevieve, as if scarcely yet realizing it; and together they went into the house.

Before long Genevieve came out and ran swiftly home, with Pym at her heels.

"Mother!" she cried, bursting through the door. "Look! The Countess is having a beautiful dress made for me to wear to the party, and here are the samples. Look! I can take my choice!"

She spread them out on the table, red, blue, green, white, pink, yellow, all silk.

"Oh, aren't they lovely!" exclaimed Madame Lareaux. "But what—."

"Which would you choose?" interrupted Genevieve.

"This green, I think," replied her mother. "But tell me. The Countess, you say—."

"Yes, yes," Genevieve interrupted again, and hastily told what had taken place.

"Oh, isn't is just perfect for this to happen!" exclaimed her mother. "Because look what your father brought you!"

"Father?" repeated Genevieve quickly. "Has Father come?"

"Yes, just after you left. He's gone back to the dock. Look!"

She opened a thin box, and within on soft, white silk lay an exquisite green necklace.

"Mother!" cried Genevieve, clasping hands in a transport of delight.

"Mountain crystals," said Madame Lareaux. "An old jeweler in Genoa was selling out and—oh, look!"

She held the necklace against the sample of green.

"Isn't it a perfect match?"—J. C. J.

A NATION'S STRENGTH.

What builds a nation's pillars high
And its foundations strong!
What makes it mighty to defy
The foes that round it throng?

It is not gold. Its kingdoms grand
Go down in battle's shock;
Its shafts are laid on sinking sand,
Not on abiding rock.

Is it the sword? Ask the red dust
Of empires passed away;
The blood has turned their stones to rust,
Their glory to decay.

And is it pride?- Ah, that bright crown
Has seemed to nations sweet;
But God has struck its lustre down
In ashes at his feet.

Not gold but only men can make
A people great and strong;
Men who, for truth and honor's sake
Stand fast and suffer long.

Brave men who work while others sleep,
Who dare while others fly—
They build a nation's pillars deep
And lift them to the sky.

—Emerson.

Jack's Courage.

Crash! Bang!

Jack's heart nearly stopped beating, and his eyes grew wide with horror; there was mother's best vase on the floor broken into hundreds of pieces.

"People shouldn't put vases on little tables just where a fellow couldn't help bumping into them," muttered Jack. Still, he had been told not to go into the drawing room in his heavy boots, and he began to feel rather queer. "Oh, well, they'll think it was the cat!" he said to himself, and off he went.

Every one had started supper when Jack came in again, and he slipped quietly to his place.

"Where's puss?" he asked.

"Oh, she's in disgrace!" answered Margaret. "We've shut her up in the cellar. She knocked over mother's new vase."

"No one seems to know anything about it, so we thought puss must have done it," said mother.

"Oh!" said Jack, and nothing more was said about the vase.

Jack took out his lesson books, but somehow he could not study. What was it that new teacher had said—something about courage. Oh, yes, he remembered! "Courage consists not only in bearding a lion or facing a mad bull, but in the quiet performance of unpleasant duties or the cheerful aceptance of deserved censure."

"Acceptance of deserved censure." Yes, that meant taking the blame on yourself, he remembered that.

"Miaow, miaow," came faintly from the cellar, and that settled Jack.

He cleared his throat and began manfully, "I say, mother".

"Yes, Jack," answered mother softly.

Why would that queer feeling come in a fellow's throat?

"I—I knocked the vase over.'

"I'm so glad you told me, son," she smiled back at him. "I don't mind so much about the vase, but I'd hate to think my boy wasn't truthful. Wouldn't you like to let puss in?"

"My, won't I work hard for father in the garden this summer and buy her a new vase!" thought Jack as he went to the door and called puss.—Lilian Ladyman, in Jewels.

MOTION RHYMES.

Sew, sew, sew, sew!
In and out needles go!
You and I and all of us know
The mothers are clothing their children, oh!

Stir, stir, round and round!
Knead, knead, pound, pound!
You and I and all of us know
The mothers are feeding their children oh!

Brush, brush, tangled hair,
Brush, brush, smooth and fair!
You and I and all of us know
The mothers are dressing their children, oh!

Hush, hush, go to sleep!
Down, down, eyelids creep.
You and I and all of us know
The mothers are quieting their children oh!

Work, work, work, work!
All day long, never shirk!
You and and all of us know
The fathers are earning the money, oh!

Play, play, play, play!
Now's the end of the day.
You and I and all of us know
The fathers are home with their children, oh!

Gifts Differing.

One heaven, but many stars; one light, but many colors; one God, but many manifestations of his wisdom and work: this principle runs through the universe from center to circumference and through all our life. One human mind, but many types of temperaments; one field of work, but many trades and professions: thus the fundamental unity of our human world breaks into endless variety, and this makes the picturesqueness and ever-changing interest and beauty of the human scene. This also promotes the efficiency of our work, for it is only as we differ that we can have the division of labor that vastly increases production in all fields. It would be a monotonous and barren, dull and dreary world in which we were all alike. We would soon get tired of one another in the endless repetition of ourselves. But gifts differing make us ever interesting to one another and blend the diverse personalities into stronger and richer unity and harmony. Each should be content with his own gift and develop it into its fullest power and service. Even if he has only one talent and that a humble one, it has in it endless possibilities of usefulness and beauty.—Presbyterian Banner.

If You Would Be Popular.

Before you start along the road to popularity, you must have six things packed ready to take with you:

1. Unselfishness, a willingness to forget self in the interest of others.
2. Sincere friendliness toward people of all ages.
3. Ability or willingness to adapt oneself to be at ease under various circumstances and with all people.
4. An unassuming manner, not boasting about what you are or have or can do and avoiding stirring up needless envies and jealousies.
5. A controlled tongue that refrains from gossip and needless criticism and speaks in kindness.
6. Trustworthiness so that others know you will keep confidences and that your word is as good as your bond.—Girlhood Days.

The Bible is the Book for the young man because it tells the life story of the young man Jesus, whose ideals, purposes, duties, and teachings have made Him the great attraction of the ages.—Christian Observer.

Let no man suppose that progress can be divorced from religion, or that there is any other platform for the ministers of reform than the platform written in the utterances of our Lord and Saviour."—Woodrow Wilson.

LOVE---The Motive
EVANGELIZATION---The Result of the Church's Program

The Symbol of the Program Is the Cross

The Program is a schedule of endeavor. It represents, in terms of action, the acceptance by the Church of its obligation to carry the Gospel to all mankind.

The Every Member Canvass (November 25-December 9, 1928,) is the method for freeing the motive and expressing it.

The Canvass is an effort to enroll the interest, sympathy, and love of every member of the Church, and to have them express these things in gladness of service and generosity of giving.

The authority for it is St. Paul's injunction:

> "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him."

There you see we have every member, the systematic plan of laying up for the work of the Church every week, and the principle to guide; not what some one else is giving, but as God hath prospered.

The Parish Canvass that presents the Cross, not the dollar mark, is the Canvass that succeeds.

On October 1st Mrs. Robert Harrison and myself went to New York to attend a two day conference of the American Mission to Lepers, which was held in Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church House.

Doctors, scientists and missionaries from China, Korea, India, London and our own country were asembled to discuss relief and help for the Leper.

Dr. Victor Heiser, leading leprologist of the world under the Rockefeller Foundation Fund, was there and gave great hope in his address, for nineteen lepers have been, dismissed from Carville Hospital Louisiana, lately, and 1,100 from Culion, Philippine Islands, the largest hospital for lepers, as cured of leprosy.

All voiced the sentiment that if they were brought to Christ, it was worth while.

Please remember the lepers Christmas. It brings them such joy to know they are not forgotten.

All contributions gratefully acknowledged.

Death

MISS CATHERINE E. POLKINHORN.
Is Called Home.

Active worker in religious, philanthropic and patriotic endeavors.

MISS CATHERINE E. POLKINHORN died at her apartment, Hotel Brighton, Washington, D. C., Monday, September 24, 1928, in the 85th year of her age, having been born in that city and of which she was a lifelong resident, April 1, 1843.

She was the daughter of the late Henry and Marianne Brown Polkinhorn, her mother having been born in Gloucester, England. Her father was at one time owner and publisher of the National Intelligencer, during that period the leading newspaper in the District of Columbia, and the original Congressional Record.

Miss Polkinhorn was the granddaughter of Sir Thomas Brown, a portrait painter of Gloucester, England, and a lineal descendant of James Askie, a sergeant in the Pennsylvania Line during the Revolutionary War.

She was a liberal contributor, and greatly interested in the Washington Cathedral, was a member of the Episcopal Church; Board of Lady Managers of the Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital; Corporator Episcopal Church Home; a Regent and one of the founders, Our Flag Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution; member D. A. R. Ex-State Officers' Club; Women's City Club; Political Study Club; Society of Natives, D. C.; and Travelers' Aid Society.

The deceased is survived by two nephews, Henry Whitefield Samson and Dr. Henry A. Polkinhorn, two nieces, Miss Blanche Polkinhorn, of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Florence P. Affleck, of New York City.

Funeral services were held in the Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral, Thursday, September 27th, at 3 P. M. Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL.D., Bishop of Washington, officiated, assisted by the Rev. Charles T. Warner, Rector of St. Alban's Parish. The Cathedral Choir, under the direction of the Choirmaster, Edgar Priest, rendered the following hymns: "The Strife Is O'er," "Peace, Perfect Peace," and "For All the Saints."

The honorary pall-bearers were: Dr. J. F. Moran, Victor B. Deyber, Colonel Arthur W. Whaley, U. S. A.; Charles W. Imlay, Prof. H. L. Hodgkins, Dr. V. B. Jackson, Dr. Custis Lee Hall and William M. Hannay. The active pall-bearers were: Judge Isaac R. Hitt, Jacob Scharf, Percy S. Foster, Herbert Poole, Edwin N. Lewis and Captain Theodore Cox, U. S. A.

The interment followed in Oak Hill Cemetery, one of the oldest cemeteries in the District of Columbia, in the family plot, in which her father, mother and other members of the family are buried.

Miss Polkinhorn, though advanced in years, enjoyed excellent health, and retained her faculties to the end. Had she not accidently broken her arm in August, on a vacation trip to the mountains of Maryland, resulting in the breakdown to which she succumbed, it is likely she might have lived very much longer. She retained to the end the same keenness of perception, vivacity of manner and love of life which she had always possessed.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

and ages and both sexes, increased 236,813. Increase of population, slightly more than ten per cent. Increase of Church membership, slightly more than twenty per cent. There were in the State in 1926 a total of 7,565 congregations, representing eighty-two denominations, while in 1916 there were 7,135 congregations, representing seventy-six religious denominations. As will be noted, this makes an average of one hundred and sixty-four members to the congregation, of church, or parish, as it may be called.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

The Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Deplorable Motor Accident.

The people of this diocese are greatly distressed over the fact that Mrs. Robert Carter Jett, wife of the Bishop, Mrs. C. Edwin Michael and Mrs. Michael's sister, Mrs. Mollie Cronin of Aberdeen, Maryland, were injured in a motor car accident on the night of Thursday, October 25.

Mr. Michael, who had served as one of the Lay Deputies from Southwestern Virginia in the General Convention, was returning from Washington in his car with the three ladies. Shortly after dark he collided with a truck which was standing in the road without lights. The accident was apparently unavoidable on Mr. Michael's part, as his view of the truck was obstructed by another car which was running in front of him. That car suddenly swerved to pass the truck and now, seeing the truck for the first time, Mr. Michael was too close to miss is.

A doctor at Thaxton gave first aid to the injured ladies and called a Roanoke physician who went with ambulances and brought them to the Roanoke Hospital; the accident having occurred at a point only twenty miles from Roanoke, the home of the Michaels and Mrs. Jett.

Mrs. Jett and Mrs. Michael each had two ribs broken.

Mrs. Cronin received much more severe injuries.

Mr. Michael came out of the accident unharmed, except for the terrible mental and nervous shock of the occurrence.

With the deepest gratification it is announced that the three ladies are now making steady progress toward recovery.

Mrs. Jett and Mrs. Michael were taken from the hospital to their homes on November 1.

Mrs. Michael is improving splendidly and rapidly gaining her strength.

Mrs. Jett will necessarily be confined to her bed for several days longer, as she suffered a somewhat greater shock than Mrs. Michael. Her condition, however, is quite satisfactory at this time and, if nothing unforeseen occurs, she will soon be her normal self again.

Mrs. Cronin received the most serious injuries and for a time there was great apprehension as to the probability of her recovery. She rallied much more quickly than was expected and, while she must remain at the hospital for some time, there is now every reason to feel that she will continue to improve and proceed steadily toward full recovery.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

To Elect Suffragan Bishop.

Bishop Stires has called a special session of the Convention of the dioceses to elect a suffragan bishop. The session will meet at the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City on Wednesday, November 14, at 9:30 A. M., and will begin with a celebration of Holy Communion.

A group of twenty-two of the clergy, feeling that before choosing a suffragan bishop it would be helpful to hold a conference, invited all the clergy of Long Island and the lay delegates to the last convention to meet at St. Ann's Church on Friday evening, October 26. The call declared: "The purpose of the conference is to give an opportunity to suggest names and to discuss the qualifications of the men suggested. This seems the more necessary, because it is the custom of the Long Island Convention not to permit nominating speeches at the time of the election; so that there will be no opportunity on November 14, to present the reasons why a candidate is favored. It is so important that the best possible man for the position be elected that definite time for consideration of possible nominees is very desirable. No vote will be taken to determine how many favor any candidate; no attempt to put the meeting on record as in favor of any candidate will be permitted. But frank and friendly discussion ought to help us all to an intelligent decision."

SOUTH FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. J. D. Wing, D. D., Coadjutor.

Notice of Deposition From the Ministry of the Church.

I hereby give notice that, having received from the Reverend R. Paul Ernst, a Presbyter of the Diocese of South Florida, his written renunciation of the Ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America and his request to be removed therefrom,

And, acting in accordance with the provisions of Canon 36 of the said Church, and with the advice and consent of the clerical members of the Standing Committee of the said Diocese,

And in the presence of the Very Reverend P. S. Gilman and the Reverend J. B. Thomas, Presbyters of the said Diocese,

I did on October 30, 1928, in All Saints' Church, Winter Park, Florida, pronounce and declare that the said renunciation is accepted and that the said R. Paul Ernst is released from the obligations of the Ministerial Office, and that he is deprived of the position, authority and power conferred upon him by his Ordination as Presbyter in the aforesaid Church.

I further state that this act was taken for causes not affecting his moral character.

Cameron Mann,
Bishop of South Florida.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

With the closing of the General Convention, the Woman's Auxiliary and other smaller conferences on Wednesday and Thursday, October 24 and 25, Washington began to return to its diocesan and parochial interests, which for a time had been set aside for the larger interests of the Convention. Some visitors remained in Washington a little longer and in several churches Bishops were the preachers on Sunday, October 28. With the memory of the great happenings of the Convention, with the definite and helpful information gained thereby, and with an inspiration which lifts one to higher aspiration and levels, the Church people of Washington go back to their work with an unusual opportunity for service. At one of the churches the subject of the sermon was, "Voices of the Convention". This very well describes many of the sermons on Sunday, October 28. That which was uppermost in the minds was naturally spoken of, and people were glad to take stock of just what the Convention had meant to them.

At the Cathedral, services which had been held at 11 o'clock in the uncompleted portion of the main Cathedral, and in the afternoon in the open amphitheatre during the Convention, were held in Bethlehem Chapel, as usual in the winter months, with the regular Cathedral choir, under Edgar Priest, choirmaster, rendering the music.

The Bishop of Washington left Washington immediately after the Convention for a few days of much-needed rest, after serving in the capacity of host to the Convention of 1928, which in the opinion of many is the greatest and best Convention in the history of the Church.

Personal Notes

The Rev. G. Huntington, retired on account of permanent disability, has changed his address from Bethlehem to Amherst, New Hampshire.

The address of the Rev. Edmund L. Woodward, M. D., former Dean of Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia and Editor of the Virginia Churchman, Richmond, Va., is now "Shrine Cove", Orkney Springs, Va.

Rev. T. B. Dellbridge has resigned the rectorship of the Church of the Holy Communion, Buffalo, N. Y., and has accepted appointment as missionary at Randolph, N. Y., and vicinity, of which he was in charge before coming to Buffalo.

The Rev. William Taylor Willis has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Roanoke, Va., and expects to take up his new work December 1. Christ Church had been without a rector only since August 6 last, when the Rev. G. Otis Mead retired on account of ill health. Mr. Mead is now recuperating in the country near Altavista, Va. After December 1, the address of the Rev. W. Taylor Willis will be 350 Washington Avenue, S. W., Roanoke, Va.

1835 DOMINUS FIRMAMENTUM MEUM ISIN

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 17, 1928. No. 46.

A PRAYER

O God, send us Thy blessed Spirit, and make us purely and perfectly Thine own. Help us to be faithful to the solemn vows of our baptism; to renounce the devil and all his works, the pomps and vanity of this wicked world, and all the sinful lusts of the flesh; to believe all the articles of the Christian faith, and keep Thy holy will and commandments; manfully to fight under the banner of our crucified Lord, and to continue His faithful soldiers and servants to our life's end.

Help us to love Thee our God with all our heart and mind and soul and strength, to worship Thee and give Thee thanks, and put our whole trust in Thee, and call upon Thee, and honor Thy Holy Name and Word, and serve Thee truly all the days of our life.

Help us to love our neighbor as ourselves, to do unto all men as we would they should do unto us, to love, honor and succor our father and mother; to honor and obey the civil authority; to submit ourselves to all our governors, teachers, spiritual pastors and masters; to order ourselves lowly and reverently to all our betters; to hurt nobody by word or deed; to be true and just in all our dealings; to bear no malice nor hatred in our hearts; to keep our hands from picking and stealing our tongues from evil speaking, lying and slandering. Help us to keep our bodies in temperance, soberness, and chastity; not to covet or desire other men's goods, but to learn and labor truly to get our own living and do our duty in that state of life in which Thou art pleased to place us.

We beseech Thee, bless and keep all who are near and dear to us. Cleanse and defend Thy Church. Bless all ministers and teachers of Thy Truth, and Thy servants everywhere. Direct and control the hearts of our rulers and magistrates that they may execute justice and maintain peace and good order among us. Comfort the bereaved and sorrowing. Relieve all who are sick and in trouble. Deliver the oppressed. Enlighten the ignorant. Change the hearts of the wicked, and make Thy righteousness to prevail in the earth.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.—Amen.

Education Through Pictures

An old Chinese adage says that one picture is better than a thousand words. There is no doubt that in the propagation of the Christian faith we can best use both words and pictures.

The fact that the printed picture is inexpensive makes for its speedy use along with the other methods of picturing the story or lesson. It is almost necessary for churches and schools, where, due to lack of electricity or the impracticability of effective presentation, projected pictures are not possible.

If you have overlooked the great values of pictures in your church and Sunday-school work, or are in need of any supplies or equipment, you will do well to write to the advertisers of this publication or to Church Equipment Service, The Southern Churchman, 628 East Main Street, Richmond, Virginia.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Sin is not imperfection: it is corruption."

The waves of fear and mists of worry do not extend upward.

I am my brother's brother, not merely my brother's keeper.—John R. Mott.

It is sometimes easier to die than to live for Christ.—Dr. Francis Wei (China).

The showy man seldom shows anything worth seeing.

"A vision without a task is a dream.
A task without a vision is drudgery.
A vision and a task is the hope of the world."

The best preaching of the Father in Heaven is the practicing of the brother on earth.

The very greatest service the missionary can render to the East is to live the life of Christ before them.—Dr. W. Y. Chen (China).

If you are praying for growth in grace don't keep your hands in your pockets.

All the efficiency in the world can never make up for the absence of the sufficiency of faith.—Rev. Dr. Wm. Porkess.

I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow mine own teachings.—Shakespeare.

Poise, stability, equilibrium, the virtues that can be depended upon, these are the mark of the person who has self-control.

We have come to the realization that it is not the East or the West, but the world that is pagan.—Mrs. Paul Appasamy (India).

"The loftiest principles are the necessary basis of the simplest acts of faithfulness, and all which is most pure, lovely, and of good report in the Christian life is the sole result of all that is most sublime in the Christian faith."

The day Bishop Phillips Brooks' death a mother came into the room where her little one was playing, and holding the bright little face between her hands, said tearfully, "Bishop Brooks has gone to heaven". "O Mother," was the answer, "how happy the angels will be!"

Those who can take that crabbed tree, the cross of Christ, handsomely upon their backs, and fasten it on cannily, shall find it such a burden as wings to a bird, or sails to a ship.—Rutherford.

While the aim and function of the Church is to win the individual to discipleship it cannot stop at that. The Christian leader must somehow find his way to the rim of the world and take his stand upon it, looking out over the whole of mankind and translating all his loyalties into terms of loyalty to mankind for whom Christ died.—Bishop Brent.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 17, 1928. No. 46.

SUNRISE?

From the welter of cross currents and conflicting interests, opinions, passions and prejudices, of our national election the All Merciful and Omnipotent God may direct a vast and enduring blessing for mankind. It is appropriate to say here, as incident to the subject under consideration, that probably the very large majority of the thousands of staunch Protestants for whom The Southern Churchman speaks, while rejecting doctrines and methods of the Roman Catholic Church, lament earnestly the opposition to Governor Smith because of his membership of that Church. Whatever its errors, the fact that its training and teaching helped to give the country a man of Governor Smith's fine qualities and character is sufficient proof of its practical usefulness. The Sovereign Pontiff obviously is a gentleman of exemplary life and excellent common sense. In any conditions he would have been no more likely to attempt interference in our affairs here than President Coolidge would be to try to have himself crowned Pope.

It is a somewhat absurd commentary on this phase of the election that as soon as the result was known Pope Pius XI, according to press dispatches from the Vatican, expressed his admiration for Mr. Hoover, with whom he coordinated in European relief work, and showed the correspondent a photograph of himself and Mr. Hoover standing side by side, shoulder to shoulder, cooperating, spiritually united in doing Christ's will by helping the helpless, feeding the hungry, caring for the widows and orphans, the poor and stricken. So far as is recalled now, Governor Smith never even has seen Pope Pius, to whom he was pictured as subservient, while Mr. Hoover was the Pope's cordial comrade and co-laborer in doing mercy on a scale unprecedented in history—mercy lavished in obedience to the Living Power and Spirit of Christ by American Protestants of many names and denominations, Roman Catholics and Jews alike.

That picture of the Pope of the Roman Catholic Church and the American Quaker, side by side, and both loyally obedient to the same God and Master and Teacher, opens a vista of beautiful glory. Two men, so widely separated in manner of worship, in upbringing, birthplaces, fields of labor, yet as brethren in love for their fellow men, in divinely given impulse to help and relieve. There may be deep and solemn truth in the thought that God now is fulfilling His promises and executing His purposes through inspiration as direct as He bestowed on the old prophets of Israel. The men and women who by labor and thought and self-sacrifice, peril of life, discovery from patient experiment, generous giving, have done and are doing so much to reduce human suffering and misery and increase human happiness and make our race as it should be, perhaps are working consciously or unconsciously, as absolutely under the mandates of God as were Isaiah and Jeremiah and Ezekiel, picturing glories and deliverances to come and our race as it is destined to be.

Clear facts are that the American people have elected as President a man probably more intimately acquainted with the mind and heart of both Europe and Asia and the conditions of both than any other man in the country. Because of exceptional circumstances and well-used opportunities, he has more of the confidence and good will of the people of those continents than any other man in the world. He will be the executive head and the leader of the thought and director of the policies of the world's richest and most powerful nation and most stable government.

A hundred years ago, fifty years ago, Episcopalians prayed each Sunday that the Lord deliver us from war, pestilence and famine, battle and murder; but the most hopeful and devout could see no glimpse of answer to the prayer. Now it has been vouchsafed that pestilence and famine are being abolished with rapidity astounding when we recall comparatively recent conditions. May we not, then, hope, from what already has been done and from present conditions, that the answering of the other part of the prayer is near? And that we approach the ending of war and battle and murder?

No nation ever has had the opportunity this nation has now to establish for the world and all the on-coming generations of man the blessings of assured peace and safety and mutual good will among men. No ruler of any country ever has had such opportunity for bringing those blessings as Mr. Hoover will have, if he be spared. However we may have voted or wished in the recent election, it looks like a decree of God that at a time when mankind is longing and looking for leadership to peace and brotherhood the most powerful of the nations has chosen as its leader a member of an obscure and feeble Christian sect the fundamental principles of which are peace and brotherhood; and a man identified before all nations with the benevolence, the bounty and the Christ spirit of his country.

The coming four years may bring, quietly and noiselessly as the sunrise, the beginning of a noble new era for all mankind. Regardless of politics and our preferences, let us unite in the hope that our country and our new President may use well, wisely and effectually these splendid opportunities confronting us. As citizens and Churchmen let us be alert to encourage and stimulate every movement for real peace; and on our knees, reverently and fervently pray "from war and battle and murder, Good Lord, deliver us"; and "Thy Kingdom Come".

[Since the above was written news comes of Mr. Hoover's proposed journey through Central and South America and of President Coolidge's Armistice Day address. The secular newspapers generally treat Mr. Hoover's visit as a quest for trade, which seems rather a small and ignoble view of what probably has much deeper and finer significance. The great body of the American people will prefer to consider this act of the president-elect as a definite plea for general goodwill and peace and more intimate understanding among the nations of this hemisphere than ever has existed.

While the President's declaration that we intend to be ready for self-defense is bluntly clear, his expression of the desire of this dominant government and country for permanent mutual confidence and generosity is unmistakable. Indications that the days of sneaking deceptions and seeking of advantages as elements of national diplomacy have passed under clouds of universal disgust and contempt continue to accumulate.]

FURTHER PROTEST FROM MR. BRYDON.

A second protest against assertions regarding the early history of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Virginia, contained in the series of articles on Church Conventions, prepared by me, has been received from the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, Historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia. It was referred to me and I have advised against publication of it. Respecting and cordially admiring Mr. Brydon's enthusiastic loyalty to our Church and to the State, I find his deductions of religious and Church conditions in the Colony and Commonwealth before, during and after the Revolutionary War in direct conflict with those of several respected historians from whom I have taken the material for my articles. I was not around here in those periods, pretend to no personal knowledge of the facts and prefer to avoid indefinite controversy involving waste of space and time.

Mr. Brydon has my address. If he will be kind enough to send me the evidence, condensed as closely as possible, on which he bases his charges that I am in error, I will be glad to ask The Southern Churchman to publish it, along with brief quotations from the historians referred to, and so dispose of the subject in one article, I hope to the general satisfaction. Also I will include Mr. Brydon's criticism in the pamphlet in which it is proposed these articles shall be combined.

Among the books from which I have derived information disputed by Mr. Brydon, are "Memoirs of the Church", by Bishop White, one of the fathers of the American Church, who labored in and for it through the Revolution; Tiffany's "Church History"; McConnell's "History of the American Episcopal Church"; Lodge's "History of the Colonies"; Dr. Lyon Tyler's "History of Virginia". Mr. Brydon, in one of his controversial communications, remarks that I have taken my statements from "enemies of the Church". Which of these authorities he includes in that description I am unable to guess.

Alfred B. Williams.

MOVEMENT FOR GENERAL CONVENTION BORN.

Acting promptly on the recommendations of the New Brunswick meeting, the four rectors of Pennsylvania and twenty-one laymen—the first laymen to be active participants in an Episcopal Church gathering—met in Christ Church, Philadelphia, May 24, 1784. A standing committee was appointed with Dr. White chairman, and a declaration of principles of Church organization and government, which had been accepted, in substance, ever since, was adopted. Representatives were chosen to a meeting of clergy and laity to be held at New York October 6, which had been suggested at New Brunswick as a kind of preliminary for the General Convention to be held the following September in Philadelphia. The New York meeting was attended by delegates from eight States. It claimed no authority beyond that of offering suggestions, or recommendations, to be considered at Philadelphia in September, 1785. States represented were Massachusetts and Rhode Island, one clergyman representing both, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland. The Rev. Mr. Griffith, of Virginia, was present informally, the yet existing laws of the State being so that he could not attend in his official capacity. This meeting practically mapped out the program which the Philadelphia Convention of the following year followed. Those present at the New York meeting were unconscious of another heavy blow the Church had received by the formal secession of John Wesley, in England, who ordained Dr. Coke and the Rev. Francis Asbury as Bishops of the Methodist Church, which then had in the United States 15,000 members, eighty-three preachers and several hundred lay preachers. Members of this Church had been regarding themselves as in the Episcopal Church, but a separate society, although communing in the Church and using the Prayer Book.

In the session of 1784-85 the General Assembly of Virginia partially released the Church from State control and May 18, 1785, the first State Convention was held at Richmond, attended by thirty-six clergymen and more than seventy laymen, acting on the plan suggested at New Brunswick and Philadelphia. Deputies elected to the Philadelphia Convention, to be held in September, were instructed to favor as few changes in the liturgy as possible and the resolutions adopted declared that it was unnecessary to retain any Creed but the Apostles' Creed. In South Carolina the State Convention was attended by three clergymen and ten laymen and five deputies to the General Convention at Philadelphia were elected. One of these was the Rev. Robert Smith, who declined to serve. He feared that the intensity of feeling against the British, stronger in that State than elsewhere because of outrages by the British army and authorities and vindictiveness of the feud between Tories and Whigs, would react against the Church if it identified itself with the Church of England in any way. It was a coincidence that Mr. Smith, who especially insisted that there should be no bishop in his State, afterward became the first bishop there. The Rev. Henry Purcell was chosen clerical delegate for the Philadelphia Convention.

Pitiful showings were made at the State conventions generally. New York had five clergymen and eleven laymen; New Jersey three clergymen and fourteen laymen. Bishop Seabury had returned a consecrated bishop, but declined to attend at Philadelphia, objecting strongly to several of the provisions in the plan of reorganization favored by the New Brunswick and New York and Philadelphia meetings.

FIRST GENERAL CONVENTION.

When the first General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America met, September 27, 1785, in Christ Church, Philadelphia, prospects were dark. The Methodists had been lost from the fold of the Church and in what remained there was a split apparently beyond healing. Controversy on both sides of the water was savage. But seven of the thirteen States were represented, by a total of sixteen clergymen and twenty-four laymen, from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina. The two States of Maryland and Virginia had ten of the clergy and fourteen of the laity, leaving but sixteen for the other five. The Rev. Dr. White was President and Dr. Griffith, of Virginia, Secretary. This Convention sat until October 7. It adopted changes in the liturgy "to make it consistent with the American Revolution and the constitutions of the respective States" and outlined an ecclesaitsical constitution and a proposed Book of Common Prayer, neither of which won ultimate acceptance. The debates developed among the laity poverty of understanding of fundamental doctrines of the Church and looseness of regard for them, which must have been appalling to the clergy. Perhaps the most practically important action was adoption of an address to the archbishops and bishops of the Church of England asking consecration of American bishops. This was accompanied by certificates from civil authorities of Pennsylvania, Virginia, New York and Maryland, that the creation of bishops would not be contrary to the laws of this country. Patrick Henry, classed as foe of the Church because of his successful legal fight against the parsons, signed the certificate for Virginia.

The reply of the English Church authorities was received in May, 1786, and considered at an adjourned meeting of the General Convention in Philadelphia, June 20, of that year. Seven States were represented by fourteen clergymen and twelve laymen. John Jay, first Chief Justice, was a delegate; Dr. Griffith, of Virginia, President, and Francis Hopkinson, signer of the Declaration of Independence, Secretary. There were manifestations of bitter feeling against Bishop Seabury. He, or his partisans, had done much to stir it by insisting on his ecclesiastical authority and opposing the movement for consecrations and ordinations in England. From this distance it appears an ignoble squabble, inextricably entangled with the ferocious anti-British feeling and the political and commercial battles among the States.

A Canadian on King George

Canon Dyson Hague.

We Canadians are naturally proud of our King (as we are of our gracious Queen Mary also), and I thought the readers of The Southern Churchman might like to read something about him. When little Prince George was born nobody ever thought that he would be the future King of England, for his elder brother, Albert Victor, was always a healthy boy. Their father was then the Prince of Wales and the two boys grew up the greatest of friends. When they became sailors, Prince George being a little chap of eleven, it is said that he took to the sea life like a fish to water, for the ambition of his life was to be a real sailor. The young princes on the Britannia were treated just like the other boys, and Prince George had to darn his socks, sew on his buttons, and mend his clothes; and he was such a true boy that he was universally voted a sport, and was the favorite boy on board the ship. For thirteen years he followed the sea and took his place like any other until he was appointed to the Canada as Sub-Lieutenant. Years ago when I was in Halifax, two stories were told of him. One was that an American, anxious to get near royalty, went down to the dockyard to see the Prince, and was shown a young officer black with coal dust, and to his great astonishment was told: "There is the Prince!" It happened to be a coaling day, and the Prince was as grubby in the performance of his duty as the man who carried the coal! I was told, too, by the Governor of Nova Scotia, the late Honorable A. G. Jones, that when he, and the General and President of the Halifax Club called on the Prince to extend to him the privileges of the Halifax Club that the Prince said: "I thank you, gentlemen, for your kindness. I will be glad to do so, but on one condition." Mr. Jones said they wondered a little what it would be as, for a moment, they rather expected some claim of royalty's privileges, but they were greatly relieved when the Prince said with a smile: "If you will allow me to come just as the rest of you, without any kowtowing to me, or making any fuss, I will come. But if you make any fuss about it, or noise over me, I am afraid I shall not care to come." That showed what our King was. Just a simple, unostentatious, hard-working man, and as modest and unassuming as any gentleman. And what a fine sense of duty he had and has. As a King he is and has been the great democrat. His life has illustrated the kingly life of service. Lord Meath tells the story of King George when he was a young officer in command of a torpedo boat, his first command. He had received orders to take his ship to Spithead, when an urgent invitation was sent to him to attend the Goodwood Races and the Admiral, the Commander-in-Chief, said he would be pleased to give him leave and that his services could be dispensed with for the day. And then Prince George spoke up and asked: "But how about the officer whose duty it is to run out the torpedo boat?" and added: "If it is all the same to you, sir, I'd rather do my duty." And do his duty that day he did, as he promptly obeyed his orders and sailed out to sea, leaving the astonished Admiral to make such explanations as he best could. It is a well-known fact that from his boyhood, the King has read his Bible every day. When he was a boy he promised his good mother, Queen Alexandria, that he would regularly read a chapter or a portion of a chapter of the Holy Bible every day of his life, and it is said to this day the King has religiously kept the promise that he made to his mother. And doubtless he will never forget those wonderful words spoken to him on the day of his coronation by the Archbishop of Canterbury in Westminster Abbey, when he put the Bible into his hand with these solemn words: "Our Gracious King, we present you with this Book, the most valuable thing the world affords. This is the royal law. These are the living oracles of God." Quiet, unostentatious, the King's supreme desire seems to have ever been to promote the happiness of his people, and it must be a great joy to His majesty and the Queen to see their sons in the same unselfish unobtrusive way following their steps, and winning the devotion of all true British hearts in all parts of the Empire. I shall never forget how, years ago, in a seaside place where there were a number of American Southerners, I was telling some of these stories about the King. A gentleman from Georgia told me that on the way home that night his wife said to him: "John, I wish we had a king!" What a tribute from a citizen of the world's greatest Republic!

So you can well imagine, my readers, why we Canadians are proud of our King not only as a constitutional sovereign, but as a man, and how we may truly pray that in his devotion to his wife and children; in his keen sense of duty; in his honest desire to walk humbly before his God; he might be followed by all the citizens of that great commonwealth of democracies we call the British Empire.

The Pearl of Paradise

Frederick W. Neve.

An angel brought from Paradise
A pearl for me of countless price
And said: "This pearl will always shine
If thou art filled with love divine".

I know 'tis so for when my tongue
In hymns of praise to God hath sung
And love hath filled this heart of mine
The pearl of Paradise did shine.

But when some unkind words I said
Whereby my brother's heart hath bled
And anger hath my heart controlled
Till it was lead instead of gold;

The pearl grew dull as dull could be
Its hidden beauty none could see
Nor could they tell its matchless price
Nor that it came from Paradise.

And when the angel came again
His face was sad and full of pain,
"Why is it that this pearl of thine
Is dark and doth no longer shine?"

"It does not shine because you see
I let my tongue o'ermaster me
And then I lost my self control
And love was driven from my soul.

"Take back the pearl to Paradise
I cannot make the sacrifice,
Which perfect love demands of me,
To curb my tongue with charity."

"'Tis not within thy power I know
To make thy heart at all times glow
With love to every one you meet
At home, abroad, in mart or street.

"Some unkind word may draw from you
A sharp reply: All this is true,
But still the pearl can only shine
If you are filled with love divine.

"The love of Him who died for you,
He will within your heart renew,
Till you shall feel the constant glow
Of that pure love He will bestow.

"And if at times the light burns dim
Lift up thy trembling eyes to Him,
His cross of agony and pain
Shall make His love more real again."

And it is so, for day by day
As I walk humbly on my way,
I feel that love within me glow,
Which ever prompts me to bestow

Kind words, kind deeds on all I meet,
At home, abroad, in mart or street,
And all the while the pearl doth shine,
Fed by the hidden love divine.

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

VI.

AS justifying our contention that we may not allegorize the simple statements of Scripture, we may now note the venerable and accepted standard of exegesis, "The literal is always to be received unless it can be proven absurd". Admittedly, there are allegorical sections, especially the Book of the Revelation, which is mainly prophetical. To literalize such passages would mislead the simple-minded student. But we run far into the realm of the speculative, when we assume to make God to say what we want Him to say, because of our own predilections.

With open minds, therefore, let us view the eschatological field of the Word of God as embraced in the threefold offices of our Lord Jesus. By mutual consent we speak of Him as Prophet, Priest and King.

These differing and yet inter-related terms are signalized by time-periods in His dealings with humanity.

We may rightly deem that His prophetical office originated when the first promise of the Redeemer was made (Gen. 3:15). Standing by the divinely inspired record we trace from that event, a series of incidents in which He is seen as prophet, not always and necessarily predicting, but appearing to instruct His people. We have already indicated that His contact with Abraham in Genesis 18 is confirmatory of His own contention, "Your father, Abraham, rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it and was glad" (John 8:56). In our former treatment of this we named other possible instances.

His prophetical office was distinguishingly admitted while He was "here among men". The people accorded Him an authority in His teachings not admissible to the scribes (Matt. 7:29). "Never man spake like this man" was the witness of the officers of the temple sent to apprehend Him (John 7:46). The multitude had previously testified, "This is of a truth, that prophet that should come into the world" (John 6:16). Undoubtedly, it was His prophetical office to which He referred when in His prayer to His Father, He declared, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do" (John 17:4). St. Peter, after Pentecost, confirms our postulate, by his reference to our Lord as the prophet of whom Moses had made mention, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you, like unto me" (Deut. 18:15-18; Acts 3:22). So then we may fittingly regard our Lord's prophetical time-period as ending at the Cross, when He became first by the offering of Himself as the accepted sacrifice (John 10:17, 18; Acts 20:28; Rom. 5:8; 1 Cor. 15:3; 2 Cor. 5:21; Gal. 3:13; Eph. 5:2; Phil. 2:8; Col. 1:14; 1 Tim. 1:15; Titus 2:14; Heb. 1:3; 1 Peter 1:18, 19; Rev. 1:5). Then, by His resurrection and ascension, entering into His Father's presence for us (Heb. 9:12-14), having obtained eternal redemption for us. By this, He became our Intercessor and Advocate (Heb. 9:24; 7:25; 1 John 2:1). We bow before the worshipful ascription, "Such a High Priest became us, who was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate, from sinners, made higher than the heavens" (Heb. 7:26; 8:1, 2). We may remind ourselves, in this connection, that in the prayer to His Father, He affirms His ceasing to pray for the world (John 17:9). This for two reasons, first, because His prophetical office among men had made prayer for them a necessary adjunct to His mission. Then, in His taking up the mediatorial work, His intercessions are distinctly for His own. Hence, He transfers the priestly work on earth, associated with the prophetical and ending on the Cross, to us who are now entrusted with the divine commission (1 Tim. 2:1-3; 1 Thess. 5:17; 1 Peter 2:9; Rev. 1:6; 5:9, 10; 20:6). This is the true incentive for missionary spirit and endeavor. We do not appreciate missions and support them because we are assured of their fruitfulness, though our weak hearts are comforted when we see evidence of success, but because we have been set on the earth as His intercessors. As He stands for us in the heavenlies, we stand for Him in the presence of a needy world.

But what is worthy of being strongly stressed is the consideration of the time-period of this mediatorial office. As His prophetical era ended on the Cross, His priestly career will also have its termination. For

The Kingship of our Lord Awaits Consummation.

We do not infer by this, that He is not our King at present; any more than we would presume to declare that He is not our prophet. For as our sovereign Lord, He administers to us His three-fold office as occasion requires. He certainly exercised the prophetical office in committing to Saul what that Apostle calls "my Gospel" (Rom. 2:16; 16:25; 2 Cor. 4:3; Gal. 1:11, 12; 2 Tim. 2:8); and He is to us our teacher through the Spirit He has given us (Eph. 4:21). And so as well, we render Him the worshipful homage of our hearts and lives in the recognition of His sovereignty. That is the inner meaning of His royalty as the challenge to our allegiance. But the time-period is the matter at hand. We now behold Him as expecting the auspicious hour of His Kingship (Heb. 10:12, 13).

His Present Place of Honor is on His Father's Throne.

We learn this from sundry passages (Mark 16:19; Luke 24:50, 51; John 13:1; 16:28; 17:4, 5, 13; Acts 1:10, 11; 2:33; 3:21; 7:55, 56; Eph. 1:18-23; Heb. 1:3; 8:1; 12:2; 1 Peter 3:22; Rev. 3:21). We may esteem Him now as King de jure. The hour must come when He shall be King de facto. While we may humor the Litany hymn with the elasticity due to poetry, we do not express the real truth when we sing "Bending from thy throne on high", for He has no throne on high. He is now on His Father's throne; and the only throne ever mentioned for Him is an earthly throne. If we have any regard for the prophecy of Daniel, we note the sounding out of the note of expectancy, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed" (Dan. 2:44). "I saw in the night visions one like unto the Son of man coming with the clouds of heaven; and there was given to him dominion and glory and a kingdom; that all peoples and languages should serve him" (Dan. 7:13, 14). This is fully in accord with our Lord's own prevision, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations" (Matt. 25:31, 32). Let us observe that the word nations refers to living persons on the earth, earth-born, earth-related. The term ethnos is not employed in the Scriptures as identified with those who have died and are in heaven; but just people in the flesh; Out of the world of sense, the redeemed are now being called (Rev. 5:9, 10). But it is not they who are here discovered before our Lord's presence. "All nations," discloses the world-wide nature of this assumption of power and Lordship. Aye, let us warm our hearts with this glorious fact that on this earth, where He bore the shame of His trial and crucifixion, where as the Man of Sorrows, He felt the woes of humanity in that awful isolation which drew from His agonized lips the heart-rending cry, "My God; my God, why hast thou forsaken me" (Matt. 27:46), where sympathetic Nature entered protest in the earthquake (Matt. 27:45, 51), and the three hours of darkness; on this earth He must vindicate His royalty. For God cannot be finally checkmated by the ire of man. Modern scholars are pleading that

Calvary Was a Defeat.

But we see it in another light. A wise general may, for good and sufficient reasons, retreat from a position which he regards as perilous to his troops; he may seem to have lost the battle by maneuvers which appear to be yeilding to the enemy; but when we discover his hidden intention as justified by his splendid charge at the head of his army, we commend his tactics. Calvary was not a defeat, but a preparation for world conquest. To have won His escape from the death on the Cross would have been to sacrifice all that makes His coming again a glorious vindication of His majesty. So, He left the world in the judgment of superficial observers, a crushed man whose vision had been a hallucination. But in truth, since that day of marvelous import, He has been gathering together His elect ones, who shall share with Him the unveiling of His glory. The Twelve are to reign with Him over the ancient race (Matt. 19:28); to all His approved saints there shall be a measure authority in that great kingdom of which He is to be sovereign and Lord. Some may have other thoughts of this; but so far as the Scriptures reveal, the scene of this universal sway will not be in a far-off heaven, but right here on earth.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

EVENING V.

O LORD, our Refuge and Strength, most mighty and gracious and good God, we humbly kneel down to thank Thee for the mercies of the past day, and to acknowledge Thine unceasing care of us. Thou didst make us and fashion us when as yet there was none of us. Thou didst breathe into us the breath of life. Thou hast protected us in our helpless infancy. Thou hast delivered us from many and great dangers in our early and later years, and hast shielded us and led us thus far on our way in safety. Thy loving kindnesses have been always about our paths, and Thy good and perfect gifts have abounded towards us. Grant, we beseech Thee, that

Let our faces be always set towards our heavenly home. be devoted to Thy service and show forth Thy praise. Keep us evermore under the protection of Thy good providence. Let the fear of Thee, our Lord, and Master, control us wholly and let perfect love and confidence cast out from us all fear and doubts and vain regrets.
the lives which Thou hast so blessed and prolonged may Make it the purpose and business of our lives to seek Thy truth and righteousness, to help all about us, and set forward Thy kingdom. And do Thou so fill us with the love of Christ and the hope of heaven, that all else may be to us comparatively of little account.

May our love abound yet more in knowledge and in all judgment; may we approve things that are excellent, that we may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ, and be filled with the fruits of righteousness.

Make clean our hearts within us, O God, and kindle and keep alive in us all holy desires and purposes. Help us by Thy Holy Spirit to think what is right, and by Thy merciful guiding to perform the same. Consecrate our gain to Thyself, our substance to the Lord of the whole earth. Let us, in all that we are and have, glorify Thee. Defend us from all dangers and adversities, and grant us that perfect peace that they have who love Thy law, whose minds are staid on Thee.

Grant, we pray Thee, O Lord, that Thy Church may serve Thee in godly quietness and may be kept from the temptations of the enemy. Bless and prosper all who are laboring for Thee, and enlighten, strengthen, and direct them in their work.

Pity all who are suffering in mind, body, or estate; and comfort and relieve them.

Take us now, and all who are dear to us, under Thy protection this night. Give us peaceful and refreshing sleep, and by Thy tender, loving care, make us ever more and more meet for Thy service.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Our Father, etc.

JOSHUA.

Subject.

The Subject of the book of Joshua is Israel's entrance into, conquest of, and division of Canaan, the promised land, for inheritance.

I. Chs. 1-5. Entrance into the promised land.

1. Chs. 1-2. The God appointed leader preparing the people, and spying out the land.
2. Chs. 3-4. Crossing the Jordan and setting up a memorial.
3. Ch. 5. Rolling away the reproach of Egypt by circumcision.

II. Chs. 6-12. Conquest of the promised land.

1. Chs. 6-8. Destruction of Jericho, and defeat and victory at Ai.
2. Chs. 9-10. Gibeonite league and victory over five Amorite kings, while the sun and moon stood still.
3. Chs. 11-12. Conquest of twenty-four kings and the Anakim.

III. Chs. 13-24. Division of the land for inheritance.

1. Chs. 13-15. "Very much land to be possessed," and the inheritance of Caleb and the tribe of Judah.
2. Chs. 16-21. Inheritance of eight and one-half tribes, and setting up of the Tabernacle in Shiloh.
3. Chs. 22-24. Return to their inheritance of two and one-half tribes and Joshua's encouragement and warning for Israel.

Purpose.

The Purpose for which the book of Joshua was written for us is to teach how Jesus, our Joshua, would lead us into the place of blessing, the heavenly places in Christ, how He would give us victory over all the principalities and powers in the heavenlies, and how He would cause us to possess, or enjoy, our inheritance in the heavenlies (Eph. 1: 3-14; 6:10-18; 1:17-23; 3:14-19).

1. Chs. 1-5. Entrance, by faith, into the place of blessing, the heavenlies in Christ, by yielding all to the Lord for His possession, control, and use through the fullness of His Spirit (Rom. 6:13; 12:1, 2; 1 Peter 3:15 R. V.).

1. Ch. 1-2. Jesus Christ, the God appointed Captain of our salvation, prepares us to enter into the place of blessing by describing the glories of the heavenlies which he has spied out by going "three days" before us (Heb. 2:9-11; 10:10; Rom. 4:25; Eph. 2:5, 6; Col. 3:1-3).

2. Chs. 3-4. "Made alive unto God" by beholding the glory of the risen Christ in His Word through the fulness of the Spirit, we set up a memorial, the testimony of a new life (Rom. 6:11; 2 Cor. 3:17, 18; Rom. 6:4; 8:13; Phil. 3:8-10).

3. Ch. 5. Putting away all confidence in the flesh our eyes turn to the Lord, who is our strength and our shield (Phil. 3:3; 4:13; Ps. 28:7).

II. Chs. 6-12. Conquest of the heavenlies, where Satan and his angels, through the old "self" dynasty in believers, would keep them from enjoying their blessings in Christ (Eph. 6:10-13; Rom. 7:18, 19; Gal. 5:16, 17; 6:18).

1. Chs. 6-8. Sure victory over the kings of Jerioch and Ai, "self-will" and "self-confidence", in spite of shameful defeat (Phil. 3:21; Rom. 8:37; Eph. 6:10; Phil. 4:13; 2 Cor. 12:9, 10).

2. Chs. 9-10. Though deceived into making a league with the enemy, yet all things working together for our good, our Princely Leader gives us victory over the five great Amorite kings, "self-esteem", "self-sufficiency", "self-complacency", "self-exaltation", and "self-satisfaction", through His long-suffering grace (Rom. 8:28; Isa. 43:13 R. V.; 2 Cor. 3:5; 1 Cor. 13:4-7).

3. Chs. 11-12. Victory over the twenty-four death doomed kings of "self-indulgence", "self-seeking", "self-glorying", "self-consciousness", "self-importance", "self-depreciation", "self-vindication", "sensitiveness", "self-love", "self-introspection", "selfish motives", "selfish desires", "selfish choices", "selfish pleasure", "selfish fears", "selfish cares", "selfish sorrows", "selfish sacrifices", "self-righteousness", "selfish gifts", "selfish prayers", "selfish hopes", "selfish service", "selfish possessions", "and such like" (Gal. 5:19-21; Col. 3:5-9).

III. Chs. 13-24. Our Joshua divides unto us as much enjoyment of the blessings in the heavenlies in Christ as we have faith to possess (Eph. 1:3-14; Heb. 11:1, 33).

1. Chs. 13-15. "Very much land" remains to be possessed of our heavenly inheritance at any point of the conquest, but if we wholly follow the Lord, like Caleb, we may enjoy God's best, the knowledge of His will, His strength, His rest, His peace, His joy, His love, and His presence (Josh. 14:8, 12; Col. 1:9; Rom. 12:1, 2; Phil. 4:13; Heb. 4:9-10; Phil. 4:6, 7; 1 Peter 1:8; Neh. 8:10; 2 Cor. 5:14; Ps. 16:10; Matt. 28:20).

2. Chs. 16-21. Our inheritance in the heavenlies is enjoyed in a life of fellowship with Christ in the most holy place, into which place we have fled for refuge, and where we may live a life of service like Levites. This means a holy life separated unto God for service in the furtherance of the Gospel (Eph. 4:1-3; 7-16; Heb. 4:15, 16; 6:18-20; 7:25; 9:24; 10:18-22; Eph. 2:10).

3. Chs. 22-24. Victories won fit us for usefulness in the enjoyment of our blessings in Christ, in being made a blessing to others, while, like our Princely Leader, with single eye we seek only God's glory, and give Him absolute possession of our whole being (John 7:37-39; Matt. 6:22; 1 Cor. 10:31; Rom. 12:1, 2).

TWENTY-FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O Lord, we beseech Thee, absolve Thy people from their offences, that Through Thy bountiful goodness we may all be delivered from the bands of those sins, which my our frailty we have committed. Grant this, O Heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, our blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen.

THE second clause of the twofold petition of this Collect is based upon the "bountiful goodness" of God. In praying for absolution from our offences, we should bear in mind what the Bible and the Church both teach us as necessary conditions of such absolution, viz.: repentance and faith. The absolution is not ours except on these conditions: of true repentance, and unfeigned belief and these are the gift of the Holy Ghost, freely given, if only we earnestly desire, and ask for them. In the second part of this twofold petition we pray to "be delivered from the bands of those sins which by our frailty we have committed", reminding us that any sinful act brings us into the bondage of Satan, and we are taught here to pray for deliverance from such bondage by the aid of the Holy Ghost, that we may recover ourselves "out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will" (2 Tim. 2:26). The hands of sin suggest also the bondage of habit, each wrong indulgence of appetite or desire increasing the bands and strengthening the bondage of the habit, so that at length one is indeed a helpless captive; from which captivity only the grace of God can deliver. Some, especially the victims of intemperance, seem conscious of their captivity and helpless condition; but how many there are outside the Church of God, entirely unconscious of their captivity; who would even resent being called servants of Satan? Yet the Gospel teaches us plainly that there is no neutral ground; we must serve either God or Satan.

THE Epistle for this Twenty-fourth Sunday after Trinity is Col. 1:3-12. The first part of this Epistle is a thanksgiving of St. Paul "to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ . . ." for the hope of heaven, which had come to the Colossian Christians through the Gospel, which Gospel "bringeth forth fruit in them since the day they heard it, and knew the grace of God in truth".

Our Epistle closes with a prayer rich in spiritual blessings for his Christian converts of Colosse; but without mention of any temporal blessings, not even deliverance from the persecutions so rife in those days. Twice in this short prayer is knowledge sought for them; first, knowledge of His will; then knowledge of God Himself, "in knowledge of whom standeth our eternal life, whose service is perfect freedom".

Such knowledge as the finite being may have of the infinite One is promised us in another state of existence; for in 1 Cor. 13 Paul says, "for now we see in a mirror dimly, but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known". Our eternal life depends on our knowledge of God; hence its vast importance. Every Christian feels or ought to feel, if he is growing in grace, each day some addition to his knowledge of God, which steadily increases, as more and more we incline to His will and walk in His way; as our Saviour teaches (St. John 7:17): "If any man is willing to do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, if it be of God . . ." There is more or less of danger in the pursuit of knowledge of all kinds except this knowledge of God and of His will. "Knowledge puffeth up," or "breeds conceit," St. Paul says (1 Cor. 8:1). The tree of knowledge in the midst of the Garden "was pleasant (a delight) to the eyes and a tree to be desired to make one wise" (Genesis 3:6); yet was forbidden to Adam and Eve in their first state of innocence. A fuller and better knowledge of God's will would have saved them from such disobedience, and so fatal a fall. A large number of the wise according to the wisdom of this world have failed to get this knowledge of God and His will, as manifested in the Gospel of His Son; such as Charles Darwin and Tyndal and Huxley and Spencer; who learned much of the wonderful works of God; but unlike Newton and Mauray and Gray, and many other Christian philosophers, failed to get this pearl of great price; this treasure hid in a field, which the humblest and most ignorant, according to the standard of this world, may get, and in countless numbers have gotten, by seeking it in God's appointed way.

THE Gospel for this Twenty-fourth Sunday after Trinity, is St. Matthew 9:18-26, and tells of two miracles of our Lord, the healing of a sick woman by a touch of His garment, and the raising of Jairus' daughter from the dead. I shall say but little of the miracles; I wish to call your attention to the prayer of the ruler of the synagogue, and also to the subject of prayer in general; for I think that much of our happiness as Christians in this life depends on our view of what prayer is, and how we use it. The prayer of the poor father is given in his own words in Mark also, and is very pathetic. "He fell at Jesus' feet and besought Him greatly, saying: My little daughter lieth at the point of death. I pray Thee, come and lay Thy hands upon her that she may be healed, and she shall live" (Mark 5:23). Our Lord's visit to the sick child is a little delayed by the people thronging Him, and the healing of the sick woman; and He meets the messenger telling of the death of the child.

Our Lord strengthens the weakening faith of the ruler with the comforting assurance: "Be not afraid; only believe." There was much excuse for this weak faith; for, so far as we know, Jesus had not yet "burst the bars of death", and proved Himself to be "death of death and hell's destruction"; for this raising from the dead Jairus' daughter was the first of the three resurrections from the dead, wrought by our Lord, and described in detail in the Gospels, the second being that of the widow of Nain's son, and the third that of Lazarus. The final touch of St. Mark's account is beautiful, showing the ecstasy of the parents and friends who forget the now healthy child's need of food in their great astonishment and admiration; but He who never forgets, though a woman may forget her sucking child (Isaiah 49:15); calmly and quietly, as one who has made no extraordinary effort, "commanded that something should be given her to eat", a remarkable proof of His divinity. A few words now about prayer; and let me say I get the thoughts mostly, and some of the words, from a discourse of Canon Gore on 1 Thess. 5:17: "Pray without ceasing." As we said above, the happiness we Christians can get in our pilgrimage "through the wilderness of this world" (as Bunyan calls it), largely depends on our value of prayer, and the use we make of it if "prayer a task and burden prove", the Christian will surely find, life also a task and a burden, almost too heavy to bear.

A true theory and a happy use of prayer may be had from a careful consideration of two things our relation to Him as an infinite Being, and our relation to Him as His children. As to the first consider that to such an infinite Being nothing is great, nothing is small. When we stretch to its utmost our power of imagining, even to take in the universe in its great extent, the furthest star system, it is a small thing compared with what remains to be imagined; so in the other direction, when we think of the least possible thing, the atom or the ion, and dwell on it in thought, it becomes of vast size compared with entities far smaller. Thus we may bring ourselves to realize God's care of such infinitesimals as we are in His universe; that even our hairs are numbered, and that a sparrow shall not fall on the ground without our Heavenly Father's knowledge and care. And if we can, as our Saviour and elder brother, Jesus Christ, assures us we can, come to Him as a Father who loves us far more than we can love our children, we shall not only pray, but cannot but pray, without ceasing, and with a sure confidence of being heard and heeded. We may wonder sometimes, and even be inclined to complain, in our ignorance, that He does not give us just what we ask for; that sickness or death, e. g., come upon us, and our Father in heaven does not give us the health or the life we ask, as His blessed Son gave it to Lazarus, and to many others, never, so far as we are told, refusing this gift, when asked for. No doubt there was good reason for this apparently more liberal use of His power to heal and restore; some day perhaps He will tell us why; for "we shall praise Him again, when we pass over Jordan". Meanwhile let us pray in the words of Charlotte Elliott's hymn (667):

"Renew my will from day to day;
Blend it with Thine, and take away
"All that now makes it hard to say, Thy will be done."

A GOODLY HERITAGE: By Georgiana M. Forde. Cloth. Pp. 122. Published by George W. Jacobs, Philadelphia.

As the author claims, this is a simple Church history. Primarily published in Great Britain, it has the flavor of an English writer and bears the commendation of English prelates. Tracing the record of the Church in Britain from the beginning, it shows as all intelligent histories must, that the Church of England had its sources in a national consciousness, though feebly felt in the early periods. The Bishop of Rome in sending Augustine with his monks at the close of the sixth century, did not found an English Church, but subdued an existing Church, strong in the faith and loyal to the Lord. And the Reformation did not witness the origin of a new Church in England, but the liberation of the Church and the Nation from Papal domination. This all needs to be told and re-told, because of the popular perversion that Henry VIII. was the founder of the English Church. The author also makes clear that the Reformation was more a national protest against the tyranny of the Pope as a secular agent for bleeding the treasury of the nation than a mere religious uprising for sentimental reasons. The events in Henry's life which bespoke matrimonial intricacies were but incidental to a movement which needed not that impulse. The English people were not proud of these acts of their sovereign; they were, on the contrary, ashamed of him and his deeds. But the times were full of ferment, nothing settled could be accomplished until the tag-ends of confusion were gathered and the melting pot had fused the various metals. Through the virgin experimentation of Edward VI. for the establishment of Protestantism, the nation was carried, by the sudden death of the young king, into the bloody reign of well-intentioned Mary, whose bigotry was to her but the expression of a true-hearted loyalty to the Church of her mother, Katherine of Arragon. Happily, her regime was also short and the accession of Elizabeth gave the nation a settled order which has never since been disrupted. And it were well to recall that even Magna Carta, unwillingly granted by King John in the beginning of the thirteenth century, was the fruitage of the charter granted by Henry I., two centuries before, and brought to light by that intrepid Englishman, Stephen Langton. All this is fundamental to a right comprehension of the status of the English Church, our Mother in the faith of the Lord Jesus.

The book briefly treating of the American Church, concisely embodies all essential facts of that period of the life of the Anglican Communion. A helpful aid in setting forth the apostolic claims of the Church all too often misunderstood by not well-informed Protestants and other communions.

CHRISTIANITY REBORN: By L. L. Leh. Cloth. Pp. 221. Price, $2.00. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York City.

The author denominates this book as "an adventure in the actual nature of Christianity, as viewed from the standpoint of human need". He has given us on the packet of the book, the basis of our estimate of his product. His search has been through devious paths outside that of the illumination of the Holy Spirit and the quest for knowledge in the fellowship of the exalted Lord Jesus, in whom are hid "all the treasures of wisdom". Just how far he might have gotten had he made his pursuit along the apostolic pathway, we may not opine. For he speaks of discovering a substitute for theology through the avenues of psychology and social science. He outlines a new gospel, and he has the temerity to assume that it will command eventual acceptance. The new Christianity which he has systematized will function along the lines of numberless departments all coordinated into one common whole of efficiency. His basis is that Christianity is undergoing a revolution. And he certainly is helping the cause.

Now, all we have to say to this is that the real ground for the contention of this author is that the Church long ago departed from her normal office of exalting the person of her Lord and winning souls to Him as the center and circumference of all desire. We may not be so critical as repeat St. Paul's protest, "If any many preach unto you any other gospel than that which ye have received, let him be anathema". Yet, how far into this realm of condemnation the Church has entered let all who think, reason out. The trend towards socialism, which has captivated the Church, has prepared the way not only for the work outlined in this book, but the very author himself, who needs the Pauline perspective and impetuosity.

Yet, we frankly accept this contribution as a study of the tendency which is everywhere sweeping over the Christian world. We may not, should not be ignorant of its spirit and workings. And if we have a better method, let us be clear and strong in our testimony. For when this "ignis fatuus" has allured the people into a quagmire, some one must be ready to point the way out. We humbly believe such will be found, if it be not in our day.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

THE PASTORAL LETTER.

Mr. Editor:

I have just received with a great deal of interest the Bishops' Pastoral Letter. For the most part it is a most admirable document. It evinces a spirituality highly to be commended. It is an able appeal for loyalty to the "doctrine, discipline and worship" of this Church, and it is devoutly to be hoped that this appeal will be heeded by clergy and people.

There are some expressions contained in the Letter which it seems to me, challenge attention.

The Bishops say:

> "Catholic in our unbroken continuity with the Christian ages and in the fullness of our Christian heritage, Protestant in our participation in the great sixteenth century movement of reformation and freedom, we have in the good Providence of God succeeded during four hundred years in holding together in some fashion these two fundamental types of religious experience and expression. But the extremes are far apart and often seem impossible to reconcile. The tension is at times severe.

* * * * * *

"If Catholic and Protestant cannot find a way to live together and to worship together the one Lord whom both adore, 'then is our faith vain. We are yet in our sins'.

* * * * * *

"There is little or no excuse for the individualistic extremes such as often disturb the peace of the Church and its normal life. . . . . The ordination vows of the clergy pledge them to loyalty to 'the doctrine, discipline and worship' of this Church.

* * * * * *

"No group of men is trying by insidious propaganda to wreck the Church."

Thus, while reaffirming the Protestant, as well as Catholic, character of the Church and condemning the extremes which are imperiling the peace of the Church, and while directing the attention of the clergy to their ordination vows, requiring loyalty to the "doctrine, discipline and worship" of this Church, it would seem that the Bishops have been a little unfortunate in the use of the expression, "No group of men is trying by insidious propaganda to wreck the Church".

In a sense, this statement is true, in that the "Anglo-Catholic" party is not attempting to wreck the Church, but, by the very "individualistic extremes" referred to in the Letter, that party is attempting to convert the Church into something utterly alien to its Constitution, doctrine, discipline and worship, by a propaganda which we of the laity are prepared to prove is, as a matter of fact, insidious, and which is, as we are also prepared to prove, wrecking parishes in various parts of the country.

The "Anglo-Catholic" party has not hesitated to publicly declare that the Reformation of the sixteenth century, the principles of which the Bishops reaffirm in their Letter, was a huge blunder. They have not hesitated to introduce into the Church forms of worship forbidden by its laws. They have organized religious communities, such as orders of Monks and Sisterhoods, to teach and spread in the Church doctrines and ceremonies contrary to its doctrine, discipline and worship. They have organized between fifty and sixty societies, one of them admittedly a secret association, for the purpose of carrying on their propaganda. Canon twenty-five of the Church provides a remedy for violations of the law of the Church by these religious communities, yet they publicly continue to do as they please. In places they have even gone so far as to deny to the people the Holy Communion except in one kind. They have not hesitated to say that they intend to pursue their course, regardless of the law of the Church, until all vestige of its Protestant heritage "of reformation and freedom" shall be no more.

None deplores controversy in the Church more than the writer, but how is there to be peace or harmony until the Church shall, in no uncertain terms, declare that all who are ordained to its sacred ministry must conform to its doctrine, discipline and worship? Liberty in non-essentials, but conformity as to fundamentals.

That there is a group of men in the Church "trying by insidious propaganda" to so alter the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church as to render conditions intolerable for Protestant Episcopalians is a fact which can be quickly established by the evidence of loyal laymen scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. No Church can at one and the same time teach the Mass, Purgatory, etc., in New York and repudiate the same things in San Francisco, or teach Invocation of Saints, Benediction of the Sacraments, etc., in San Antonio, and condemn the same things in Minneapolis. If, as the Bishops very properly say, the Church is "Protestant in our participation in the great sixteenth century movement of reformation and freedom", then she cannot peaceably house those who have been ordained in her ministry and yet repudiate that declaration.

"Anglo-Catholics" do not hesitate to say candidly that one and the same Church cannot peaceably house both schools of thought. They do not hesitate to say that their views must prevail "to the exclusion of all others", and they are even now raising a fund of half a million dollars to spread their propaganda.

Simply ignoring these facts will get nowhere. It is sincerely to be hoped that the Bishops will use their good offices, as well as their Episcopal authority where necessary, to abate the "individualistic extremes" which they appropriately deprecate and to remind the clergy of their ordination vows, but if the laity fail to courageously and loyally support their Bishops in so doing, and if they fail in the duty and responsibility resting upon them to defend the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church, as set forth in her Constitution and Book of Common Prayer, they cannot complain if they find their Church converted into something they cannot support.

It is just as much the duty of the laity to see that the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church are respected as it is that of the bishops and clergy. If the laity had been awake to their responsibilities, the peace of the Church would not now be disturbed by the "individualistic extremes" to which the Bishops refer. If they refuse to attend their parish meetings, convocations, diocesan conventions and other gatherings for the promotion of the work of the Church; if they refuse to participate in the evangelistic work of the Church, and if they neglect to watch over her welfare, they need not be surprised if, while they sleep, an enemy sows tares.

To the everlasting credit of the recent General Convention, it heeded the great memorial asking that the resolution to drop the Articles of Religion be rejected. Now, let the laity take their rightful places in the life of their Church and all will be well.

A GOOD IDEA.

Mr. Editor:

The following is an excerpt from the Report of the Findings Committee, adopted by the Conference on Small Town and Rural Work of the Diocese of Kentucky:

> "We find that certain radio stations regularly broadcast the services of the Church, and that some isolated communicants derive great spiritual benefit from such services.
> We therefore recommend:
> That the editor of the Bishop's Letter prepare and publish each month a list of the principal stations broadcasting such services, with the hour and nature of these services."

Accordingly, I would appreciate it if churches which regularly broadcast religious services would notify the undersigned editor of the Bishop's Letter of the hour, wave length, and other information necessary to comply with the request in the Findings.

ASSISTANCE NEEDED.

Mr. Editor:

In this parish in Albemarle County, Virginia, we are undertaking to build a small churchly chapel to take care of a neighborhood five miles distant from the parish church, separated from us by a rough mountain road. The tiny village where the chapel is to be built is called Stony Point. Work was begun and carried on successfully here for many years by Mr. Philip W. Nelson, the Senior Warden of the parish. Services have been maintained in a union building. We have now let the contract for a new chapel of our own, to be built for $1,700, and at this writing we have $1,000 in sight. I write to say that we should much appreciate any assistance friends could give us in raising the amount we need. A commission appointed by the diocese reported a hearty approval, and our Bishop has helped us with a generous check. If you could insert this notice in The Southern Churchman, we feel that it would bring the matter to the attention of kind friends and we should be very grateful indeed.

I have written some of my minister acquaintances that we send from this parish on the average six young people each year to the cities to take their places among the workers there.

THE CHURCH AND MASONRY.

Mr. Editor:

We are near the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the service at Christ Church, Philadelphia, which was attended by General George Washington and three hundred other members of the Masonic Order. It would be well to observe this anniversary with church services for Masons and their families and friends. Lodges seem happy to accept invitations to a church service at almost any time, and particularly so in connection with such an anniversary as this. Clergy not of the Order need feel no hesitation about sending in the invitation.

I understand the object of the service was one especially congenial to Masons, namely, the celebration of St. John's Day, although the date was December 28. Convenience may indicate a different date for the observance of the anniversary, as it has with us.

It is a good way to record among men a not too widely known strength of agreement between the Church and Masonry.

For those who realize their common faith and can use expressions of it which are accredited in the traditions of both, I have spare copies of a program which will, while they last, be sent to those who ask for them.

PRAYER FOR THE DEAD.

Mr. Editor:

"The dead in Christ" were prayed for in Christ Church here today. I cannot say, Amen, to such, believing it a useless prayer for those who have received "the kingdom prepared for them from the beginning of the world". It is useless, if not foolish, to pray for what we already have. If I have perfect health, I pray not for health. If I prayed for the dead at all (as I do not), I'd pray for such as seemed not to have died in Christ. As his friend prayed for Cardinal Beaufort in that famous passage of Shakespeare:

"My Lord Cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss, hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope. He dies, and makes no sign. O God, forgive him!"

We have all had loved ones to die so, apparently not in Christ. So, if you must pray for the dead, dear Anglo-Catholic, pray for such. But better leave them in the hands of a most loving and merciful Creator, who "will do for them better things than we can desire or pray for."

"Almighty God, we entrust to Thy loving care those who are dear to us, for this life and the life to come, believing that Thou art doing for them better things than we can desire or pray for."

"Let the dead rest!" The living, the living, need all our care.

Berkeley Minor, Sr.

Charlottesville, Va.

---

Mr. Editor:

I was deeply grieved to see that the General Convention had added the prayer for the dead in the prayer for the Church Militant. They first deleted Militant to make the way plain for such a petition for the dead. As it now stands it includes all on both sides of death.

To allow such an unscriptural doctrine to be placed in the matchless Liturgy of the Church is little less than a calamity and will surely stop the negotiations for union with other branches of the Church in this country. Those who lean so strongly to many Roman doctrines were determined to carry the Church back to pre-Reformation days, if possible. I marvel that there was so little opposition in either House if reports of proceedings are correct. The Gallios "cared for none of those things and the Evangelicals seemed so scattered they could not rally their forces to combat thoroughly Roman and unscriptural doctrine. Not one speech attempted to justify the change on scriptural grounds. That was impossible. Instead the following reasons were in evidence: "It is such a comforting doctrine"; "Why stop praying for those of our loved ones when they have passed from us? We pray for them when they have gone on a journey, why not when they have gone to be with the Lord?" "It is such a consolation to me. It may not be in the Bible, still I derive a great deal of satisfaction from it." If it were right to pray for the departed, why did not Christ tell us so in plain words? Surely He would not have left us in the dark on so important a doctrine. Those who believe in prayers for the departed cannot successfully deny some form of Purgatory. If there is no Purgatory, what do our prayers avail for those who have fallen asleep in Jesus? To my mind it comes from a belief that Christ on the Cross did not do a perfect work, but that we must be further purified after death and made ready for the final abode with the Lord. Christ said to the thief: "Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise." No half-way house on the way. No masses or requiems for the repose of souls. I think it was Bishop Latimer who said prayer for the dead was the smoke of Purgatory. He was right. Again, prayer for the dead will surely be followed by prayers to the dead. In fact, that is right now upon us and has been for some time. Many parishes pray to all sorts of saints. Yet, there is not one word of Scripture to suggest it or encourage it. This Romish doctrine has been saddled on the Church by a well-known party who have long disregarded anything in Prayer Book or Articles of Religion and coolly quote some musty rusty old Canon of the middle ages to support their contention. A group of clergymen in Washington got together soon after this change was made and declared they would never use that prayer. When I was ordained thirty-three years ago, such a doctrine was contrary to the teaching of the Church and since the Articles of Religion have been left to us, and one of them declares that "It is not lawful for the Church to ordain anything that is contrary to God's Word, it is my purpose to stand on that and refuse to say such a prayer and I will denounce it wherever I may be. I have always said if prayers for the dead ever came, I intended to become a sudden convert to the 'Doctrine of intention', and when I used them it would be for those in pulpit and pew whom the undertaker had not gotten in his care". There are many people in the Church who will not submit to this flagrant departure from the Word of God and who will fight it to the bitter end. Those who are opposed to this false doctrine are looking to The Southern Churchman to lead them in the fight.

PRAYEA FOR THE DEAD

The question of prayers for our loved ones who have gone ahead seems to be a source of great perplexity to many. The following prayer composed by the great English scholar and Christian, Samuel Johnson, on January 23, 1759, when he was fifty years of age, appeals to us very strongly:

Langbourne Meade Williams.

"Almighty God, merciful Father, in whose hands are life and death, sanctify unto me the sorrow which I now feel. Forgive me whatever I have done unkindly to my mother, and whatever I have omitted to do kindly. Make me to remember her good precepts and good example, and to reform my life according to Thy Holy Word, that I may lose no more opportunities of good. I am sorrowful, O Lord; let not my sorrow be without fruit. Let it be followed by holy resolutions, and lasting amendment, that when I shall die like my mother, I may be received to everlasting life.

"I commend; O Lord, so far as it may be lawful, into thy hands, the soul of my departed mother, beseeching Thee to grant her whatever is most beneficial to her in her present state.

"O Lord, grant me Thy Holy Spirit, and have mercy upon me for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

"And, O Lord, grant unto me that am now about to return to the common comforts and business of the world, such moderation in all enjoyments, such diligence in honest labor, and such purity of mind, that, amidst the changes, miseries, or pleasures of life, I may keep my mind fixed upon Thee, and improve every day in grace, till I shall be received into Thy kingdom of eternal happiness.

"I returned thanks for my mother's good example, and implored pardon for neglecting it.

"I returned thanks for the alleviation of my sorrow. The dream of my brother I shall remember."

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart", Psalm 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. Amelia Holt, of North Carolina:

> "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee" (Isaiah 26:3).

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

Democratic Francise For Sale, Says Rogers.

(Special to Times-Dispatch.)

New York, November 7.—For Sale—Would like to sell, trade, dispose of, or give away to right parties, franchise of what is humorously known as Democratic party. Said franchise calls for license to enter in national elections. Said right or franchise is supposed to be used every four years, but if intelligent parties had it, they would let various elections go by default when understood they had no chance. If in right hands and only used in times when it had an "issue" or when Republican party had split, think it could be made to pay, but present owners have absolutely no business with it, under present management. They have killed off more good men than grade crossings have. Address Raskob, back at Chevrolet workshop.

Yours. WILL ROGERS.

Cannon Says Hoover's Election Repudiation of Wet Democrats.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, issued a post-election statement, in which he characterized the defeat of Governor Smith for the Presidency as the "overwhelming repudiation of the proposal by the people of our country to place the national government in the hands of representatives of the wet sidewalks of our cities, aided and abetted by a selfish, so-called liberal element of high society life".

Further, Bishop Cannon, in his statement, declared that "it is in order for Mr. Raskob to resign at once, that the Democratic party may be reorganized free from the taint and pollution of wet or Tammany control".

His statement, in part, follows:

"This insolent challenge of a solid, unpatriotic Tammanyism and its self-indulgent allied forces has met with a response which has shown to the world the genuine idealistic, truly progressive Americanism of our people. This response in the Southern States has assumed the proportions of a political revolution. Positive, explicit warning was given more than a year ago that the Southern people would not commit both political and moral suicide by supporting a wet Tammany candidate. But Tammany, in absolute control of the Houston Convention, ignored all protests and danger signals and nominated its wet candidate.

"Faced by such a situation, men and women of the South, who placed principle above party, deliberately organized to preserve Southern Democracy by the overwhelming defeat of the wet Tammany candidate. It is political tragedy that so few Southern Democratic leaders recognized the nature and the extent of the revolution among the Southern people and believed, to the last, that party regularity would be a more potent force than moral conviction. However sincere they may have been, by their lack of understanding and by their unjustifiable denunciation of those opposing Governor Smith as 'intolerant bigots, hypocritically using prohibition and Tammany as a cloak for their bigotry', fanned the flames of the revolution and aided in Smith's overwhelming defeat and in the retirement in the near future of some of our Democratic leaders who have so bitterly denounced anti-Smith Democrats as 'traitors' and 'intolerant bigots'.

"As this wet Tammany leadership has brought upon the Democratic party the well-deserved and the greatest defeat in American political history, it is in order for Mr. Raskob to resign at once, that the Democratic party may be reorganized, free from the taint and pollution of wet or Tammany control.

"The prohibition referendum, so long desired by the wets, has been held, and the enemies of the eighteenth amendment have been ignominiously routed.

"It is exceedingly gratifying to all anti-Smith Democrats that, at this crisis in the history of the Democratic party, Mr. Hoover, the nominee of the Republican party, is a man of such great ability and high character."—The Richmond Times-Dispatch.

St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo.

A gift of $50,000 from Mr. and Mrs. Percy R. Pyne, of New York City, to the $2,656,500 building fund for St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, was announced recently by the Hon. George W. Wickersham, Chairman of the American Executive Committee for the Hospital.

At the same time Mr. Wickersham announced the addition to the Executive Committee of Jerome D. Greene, of the firm of Lee, Higginson and Company of New York.

"The International Hospital News," the November issue of the monthly bulletin published by the American Executive Committee of St. Luke's at 7 Wall Street, New York, reports the sending of a cablegram to Tokyo to inform the Emperor and Empress of Japan on the occasion of their enthronement that the ultimate success of the movement to complete the International Medical Centre seems assured by the adoption of the resolution by the General Convention to raise $1,000,000 for this purpose.

The cablegram is as follows:

His Excellency Hon. Charles MacVeagh, American Embassy, Tokyo, Japan.

General Convention of American Episcopal Church assembled at Washington has placed on record determination to raise at earliest possible date as a priority one million dollars towards fund for completing new buildings of St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo. This action substantially assures satisfactory completion of fund. Please present to Imperial Household Department through proper channels assurance that International Medical Centre will be completed as a testimonial and pledge of friendship and goodwill from Americans in commemoration of the Enthronement of their Majesties. Please inform Viscount Shibusawa, Chairman Japanese Advisory Council, of this action.

Teusler, Wickersham.

In commenting on the word sent through Ambassador MacVeagh to the Emperor and Empress to mark their Enthronement, Mr. Wickersham said:

"By bringing this fund of $2,656,500 to its goal Americans will be making the most significant financial contribution in the interest of Japan in which they have ever had a part. I do not mean to minimize the generous gift of $11,000,000 by Americans to the Red Cross for the relief of the Japanese earthquake sufferers. But this present enterprise is doubly significant because in this project Americans are not making a present to Japan but they are joining with the Japanese—who already have made a substantial contribution towards the Medical Centre—in establishing an institution which will advance medical science in both countries. This will be a clearing house for modern clinical medicine in the Far East; when through the development of its present program St. Luke's will be a meeting place for medical men from all quarters of the globe. It is fitting that a testimonial of American goodwill towards Japan should take the form of a great hospital and research centre which will reciprocate for the great service rendered the world by such Japanese scientists as Kitazato, Aoyama, Noguchi, Nagayo and Shiga."

Faith and Order Continuation Committee Will Meet in Switzerland, August 27, 1929.

The next meeting of the Continuation Committee of the World Conference on Faith and Order will be held in the Maloja Palace, Engadine, Switzerland, on August 27, 1929. This was decided at the recent meeting of the Business Committee held in New York in pursuance of a proposal received from Sir Henry Lunn.

The Business Committee approved in principle a suggestion from the Rev. Principal Alexander Martin, that outstanding representatives of the World Conference on Faith and Order movement be sent to the Superior Courts or other annual gatherings of the various churches, and authorized Chairman Brent and Secretary Brown to take steps to carry out this suggestion.

Bishop Brent was requested to prepare a prayer for Unity for circulation to all the churches for use at Christmas-time.

The Business Committee made public a letter received from the Rev. Alfred E. Garvie, Vice Chairman of the Continuation Committee, with reference to the sessions of the Continuation Committee held at Prague in September. In this letter, Dr. Garvie pointed out the difficulty of the American Continental sections understanding one another, owing to their wide geographical separation. "There is the difficulty," continued Dr. Garvie, "of reconciling the progressive and the conservative standpoints. The Lausanne Conference itself made a great difference, and that should be recognized in a more confident and less timid attitude. The purpose of discussing agreements is surely to emphasize them, and differences to try to harmonize them; and I hope the Reports of the Churches will give us warrant to do so, and the Reference Committee will guide us in so doing.

"As regards the movements towards Unity, we should, without pronouncing any judgment on the terms, which must be left to the uniting Churches, welcome them, and be a medium of letting them be as widely known as possible. I am glad we have gone so far as we have in what we have said about the mission fields.

"We are an inter-church movement, and individuals must be responsible for their actions to their own church authorities. While we must not say or do anything which would encourage a lack of discipline within any of the churches, it is not our function to pronounce on discipline, and no Church must expect us to come to its aid in the exercise of discipline."

University of the South Receives Generous Gifts.

Within the past three weeks the University of the South has received two subscriptions of $25,000 each towards the two million dollar expansion fund, which the University is raising for endowment and additional buildings.

Miss M. G. Thompson, of New York, who is a Presbyterian, became interested in Sewanee through the Rev. Dr. George B. Myers, an alumnus of the University and a member of the theological school faculty. After conference with Vice-Chancellor Finney and further independent investigation, Miss Thompson became convinced that Sewanee is rendering a unique service and merits assistance in extending her influence. The generous gift of $25,000 was the result.

Mrs. Hugh McK. Landon, a devoted Churchwoman of Indianapolis, has pledged a further $25,000 to be added to the $50,000 she gave last spring to endow the Chair of English in the college, in memory of her father. The effort of the University to bring the salaries of professors up to $3,600 a year prompted this additional gift from Mrs. Landon.

These two gifts set the University far forward on its way to claiming the additional gift of $55,770 from the General Education Board before the close of the year.

Armistice Day.

Armistice Day was marked in some way in the churches throughout Washington, by special services of prayer and music. At Washington Cathedral, an impressive memorial service was held at three o'clock in the afternoon at the tomb of Woodrow Wilson. A processional of "The Strife is O'er", by the Cathedral Choir was followed by a lesson, a prayer by Dr. James H. Taylor, pastor of the late President, the singing of America, and an address by the Bishop of Washington. A floral tribute was placed on the sarcophagus. The recessional hymn used was "For All the Saints". Bethlehem Chapel was taxed beyond its capacity by hundreds of people who had come to pay tribute to the memory of Woodrow Wilson. By means of a system of public address amplifiers the overflow congregation was enabled to hear the service in the other chapels of the Cathedral.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The program of the fourth annual Institute of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Washington, which was held in Trinity Diocesan Church on November 14, was rich with inspiration and interest.

Dr. G. Freeland Peter, Canon of Washington Cathedral, delivered the principal address in the morning on "The Joy of Service". Three missionaries were also listed as speakers, namely, the Rev. Norman S. Binsted, Bishop-elect of a new missionary jurisdiction in Japan; Miss Schereschewsky, missionary in Japan and daughter of Bishop Schereschewsky, who translated the Bible into the Japanese language, and Miss Ethel Robinson, who has left the faculty of Columbia University to go to Porto Rico as a missionary.

Members of the Branches served as ushers.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

G. F. S. Celebrates Fiftieth Anniversary.

On November 3 and 4, the Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese of Maryland celebrated their fiftieth anniversary. A reception was held at the Central House on Saturday afternoon, and a banquet at the Hotel Emerson in the evening, at which Bishop Murray and Bishop Helfenstein were present. On Sunday morning, Bishop Murray celebrated at the Corporate Communion Service of the G. F. S. in old St. Paul's Church, and at four o'clock Sunday afternoon a special service was held in Grace and St. Peter's Church, at which Bishop Murray was present and the Rev. Dr. H. P. Almon Abbott, rector of the church, preached.

Cornerstone.

Bishop Helfenstein laid the cornerstone for the new parish house at the Church of the Redeemer, Roland Park, immediately after the morning service on Sunday, November 4.

Convocation of Cumberland.

The Convocation of Cumberland met in All Saints' Church, Frederick, on Thursday, November 8. The opening service was held on Wednesday evening and the Rev. Dr. George F. Dudley, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Washington, was the preacher. Bishop Helfenstein celebrated the Holy Communion on Thursday morning. The business meeting followed immediately after the service, with reports from the parishes and talks on Evangelism by the Rev. Dr. Torkington, the Rev. Dr. Stehll, the Rev. Mr. Kloman and the Rev. Mr. Burgess, as appointed speakers, but the discussion was joined in by all present. Bishop Helfenstein later gave some "echoes" of the General Convention.

Dedication.

On Monday evening, November 12, Bishop Helfenstein will dedicate the new parish house at St. Alban's Church, Glen Burnie, the Rev. F. M. Heil, rector.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

Plans For the Every Member Canvass.

The Every Member Canvass in Southwestern Virginia for the financing of the mission work in the diocese and General Church for 1929, is being conducted under the guidance of the Field Department of the Diocesan Executive Board, the personnel of this department being: Mr. C. Edwin Michael, Roanoke, Va., Chairman; the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, Lynchburg; the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Staunton; the Rev. F. Ernest Warren, Bristol, and Mr. W. D. Tyler, Dante, Va.

For the efficient prosecution of the work the diocese has been divided into four districts, Nos. 1, 2 and 3 ,respectively, under Mr. Barnwell, Mr. Gravatt and Mr. Michael, and No. 4 under Messrs. Warren and Tyler jointly.

The program, which the diocese is asked to subscribe, amounts to $61,290, of which $44,190 is the budget for the mission work of the diocese, and $17,100 is the quota for the missions from November 25 to December 9, although for various reasons the canvass of certain parishes will perhaps be held earlier, or slightly later than these dates.

New Rector at Christ Church, Roanoke.

The Rev. W. Talor Willis accepted the rectorship at Christ Church, Roanoke, Va., as of November 1, 1928, and conducted the services on Sunday, November 4.

Mr. Willis is in residence at Christ Church Rectory, 350 Washington Avenue, Roanoke, Va. Mrs. Willis and their eight-year-old son are visiting her relatives in Mississippi and will join Mr. Willis later.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis received a warm welcome to our Southwestern Virginia to the City of Roanoke and especially to Christ Church.

Dedication at St. Stephen's, Culpeper.

St. Stephen's Church, Culpeper, in St. Mark's Parish, received the gift of a memorial window to the late Rev. James Gibbon Minnegerode, D. D., which was dedicated on the Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity. The rector, the Rev. Kensey Johns Hammond, D. D., preached the sermon on the Apostle St. John, whom the window represents.

In the character of St. John the preacher found illustration of Dr. Minnegerode's life in its courage and gentleness, and nearness and devotion to Christ: both as an administrator, theologian and pastor.

COLLECT FOR TWENTY-FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O Lord, we beseech Thee; absolve Thy people from their offenses; that through Thy bountiful goodness we may all be delivered from the hands of those sins, which by our frailty we have committed. Grant this, O Heavenly Father, for Jesus' Christ's sake, Our Blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen.

NO LONGER.

No longer of Him be it said,
"He hath not where to lay His head".
In every land a constant lamp
Flames by His small and mighty camp.

There is no strange and distant place
That is not gladdened by His face.
And every nation kneels to hail
The Splendor shining through its veil.

Imprisoned for His love of me,
He makes my spirit greatly free;
And through my lips that uttered sin
The King of Glory enters in.

Joy.

The fruit of the Spirit is JOY. If you have ever felt pure joy—an inward thing far removed from ordinary pleasure or happiness—that is a sign to you that the Spirit is working in you. Joy is a word that Jesus used of Himself when He said He wished His disciples to have His joy. With the shadow of the cross over the very beginning of His ministry, with the knowledge that His disciples would forsake Him, knowing He was hated by the Pharisees, and that He was going to die like a criminal —with all this soon to come, Jesus spoke of His joy.—Selected.

The Supremacy of Jesus.

The irresistible appeal which Jesus makes to men of vastly different temperaments and interests is in no way better illustrated than in the innumerable and varied biographies of the Teacher of Nazareth which after nineteen centuries continue to pour without abatement from the publishing houses of the foremost countries of the world. Indeed, during the last five years the number of notable studies of the life of Jesus has been larger than for any previous five-year period. So the influence of Jesus marches on. So men with every conceivable doctrinal background, orthodox, liberal, and with almost no doctrinal background at all, are fascinated by this incomparable Teacher who made upon His contemporaries the same overwhelming impression which He has made upon all thoughtful spirits throughout the centuries. So, to name only a few, Bruce Barton, carried away by his enthusiasm for this astonishing Man, writes "The Man Nobody Knows"; Middle Murry writes "Jesus, Man of Genius"; Dr. Warschauer writes "The Historical Life of Christ"; and Emil Ludwig writes "The Son of Man".

There is a proverb to the effect that a hero is not a hero to his valet, but it has been explained that this is not because of any lack in the hero, but because of a deficiency in the valet. The hero is always a hero to every one who has within himself any love for heroism. Naturally, therefore, one who has any capacity for the understanding of greatness, or any reverence for that which is supremely good, or any regard for that which is superlatively generous, bows his head with wonder and amazement in the presence of Jesus and before the spiritual ascendancy of His character. Here greatness is at its height and the lesser greatness that is in other men acclaim it. Familiarity with the story of the Gospels does not lessen man's wonder at or reverence for their central figure, but rather increases it. With the great men of history Time is usually unkind, but during the passing of the years man's admiration for the fascinating hero of Palestine has suffered not the slightest reaction. Thus the swing of the pendulum of popularity which brings a general weariness in the wake of a popular enthusiasm, has no influence upon man's regard for Jesus.

Therefore gifted men who express their inmost thoughts and emotions easiest in writing, irresistibly attracted to this greatest master of human hearts, feel that they must let others see what they have seen as they have silently thought upon the Teacher and Physician of men's spirits. Moreover, these illustrious writers feel that they can achieve no greater fame than to be associated through their art with the splendour and greatness of Jesus Christ. No matter how widely they differ from one another, or how far they are from what is usually called the traditional position, the biographies which these men have written are unanimous in their testimony to the truly amazing power of Jesus to attract men of varied gifts and insight. What think ye of Christ? we ask these writers, and whatever else they answer, on this they all agree with a mighty emphasis: "He is one who has made the greatest and most lasting impression on human minds and hearts that has ever at any time been made. When one thinks of Him everything noblest in the depths of his nature and everything finest in his emotions rushes forward in definite action, just as the seed in the dark ground pushes upward toward the light."

This, too, was the considered verdict of the great writers of a generation back. Almost the last words of Carlyle were a tribute to Jesus: "The tidings of the most important event ever transacted in this world is the life and death of the Divine Man in Judea, at once the symptom and cause of innumerable changes to all people in the world." With the writers of today John Ruskin agrees for he says that he dedicated his life not to "the study of the beautiful in face and flower in landscape and gallery, but to an interpretation of the truth and beauty of Jesus Christ." Unlimited, too, the reverent admiration of Matthew Arnold: "Christ came to reveal what righteousness really is. For nothing will do except righteousness; and no other conception of righteousness will do, except Christ's conception of it—His method and secret."

This power of Jesus to capture the hearts and imagination of all kinds of men, and to fill their lives with a new quality of goodness, is the most amazing part of the New Testament record, even as it is the most amazing part of human experience through the centuries; that is, until we know who Jesus is. As peasant, fisherman, financier or employer accompanied this magnetic man on one or more of His preaching tours, as they stood near Him and listened to the burning eagerness of His strong persuasive voice, as they observed the luminous beauty of His stern yet gracious character they felt within themselves the surging urge of great and noble desires responding to His appeal to them. Even the sordid men and women of that day felt His cleansing and transforming influence and became as men and women who knew no sin. It was all so marvelous—the overwhelming impression which He made on every mind, and the purifying influence which He exerted over every hungry heart.

Moses gave men laws by which to regulate their conduct, but alas, men somehow found that laws of goodness but aggravated the evil desires within which mockingly would not be governed. Socrates, with stern truthfulness, set forward honorable principles of integrity and rectitude, but there were few who paid him reverence. In Christ, for the first and last time in all the ages, winsomeness and goodness were blended together in such splendour, majesty and attractive simplicity that women as base as Mary Magdalene and men as mean as Zacchaeus were drawn towards Him by cords they could not resist and bowed before Him humbly, reverently and hopefully. Jesus touched the imagination and imagination is in control of conduct.

Today the time appears to be at hand when Jesus may become Master of all of life, and Master of the whole world. On all sides there is a decided movement towards Him. Into other religions His teaching is being boldly incorporated. In Christian countries commerce and industry are acknowledging their responsibility to seek a solution for their problems in the light of Christian principles. The spokesmen of the nations, with the approval of their peoples, are making a serious effort to outlaw war. Everywhere there is a greater appreciation of the worth of human personality and a greater horror of all that degrades and impoverishes life. Jesus is capturing the imagination of the nations and His principles are penetrating into all departments of living. We who love Him can, if we are daring enough, place Him on the throne of the world and make Him lord of the whole of life.—Canadian Churchman.

On Being Cheerful.

Louis Deschamps.

Cheerfulness is a fine art, more beautiful than sculpture, more lasting than fleeting melodies, and more available to others than the paintings of great art galleries. It is one of those virtues that are not necessarily inborn, but may be an acquired trait that proclaims the success of patient effort, just as prosperity rewards thrift. It is commonplace, yet rare; superficial, yet profound. A smile may be ever so bravely assumed, yet it is accepted at face value. Cheerfulness means warmth and courage contrasted with cold indifference and fearful indecision. Though it disguise a heavy heart and a frail will, yet it is worthwhile because it means a challenge of self, rather than a surrender. Despondency and grouchiness are largely due to self-pity, or the conclusion that one's self is hopelessly unfortunate. Cheerfulness is a consciousness of being superior to one's misfortunes, like the captain of a disabled ship who relies upon his will and efficiency as separate and superior to the handicaps against which he must make the voyage.

Every one has respect and admiration for the sterling character that can achieve the habit of cheerfulness. It is an ideal worthy of devotion. The advantages are too obvious and well known to enumerate without incurring the criticism of triteness. The world wants cheerfulness, but the price in terms of character building is too exacting. To picture one's self guarding every thought and impulse with Puritanical severity seems too drab and commonplace. There is nothing but silence and obscurity to witness the sharpest encounters in the battles for self-control. No parades, banners, heroic action, nor decorations. Besides, there is a malicious satisfaction in the indulgence of a gloomy mood, a pride of martyrdom exceedingly dangerous for all of its apparent sincerity. But cheerfulness should not be considered as the forced compliance with arbitrary rules. It can not flourish against the will of the person striving to attain it. In the last analysis, it is a recognition and expression of latent virtue, rather than the artificial grafting of outside material. Cheerfulness is natural, being overcome by the cares and woes that darken the outlook of mature people who seem to have lost it.

Being cheerful does not require an irresponsible attitude of mental laziness or indifference to the need of forethought. Nor does it imply a lack of sympathy and gentleness. Boisterous humor is not to be confused with cheerfulness. It means the ability to give the mind a rest from excessive concentration upon one's own petty problems and woes. It is the mental counterpart of straightening one's shoulders, taking a deep breath, diverting the attention from the narrow focus of vexing thoughts, and thanking God in silent prayer for His goodness in making life so large, diversified, and wonderful. Even cheerful persons become discouraged and sad at times, but it is not a habit with them to brood over troubles. They step aside from self and voluntarily seek happier thoughts. Others are spared the contagion of gloomy appearances, frowns, and distemper.

The greatest aid to cheerfulness is an enthusiastic love of the ideal itself. There must be a fire of inspiration, a morale that equals the esprit de corps of an army. It is as if one's spirit and will were separate from one's imperfect human self, and allied with the spirits of great men of all time in a passionate devotion to the Cause of idealism and happiness in human progress. Individual faults and weaknesses are not essentially a part of one's self, but merely defects in the human nature with which the voyage of life must be made, handicaps to be overcome rather than fatal woes to be endured sadly and bitterly. The ideal of cheerfulness must be associated closely with sunshine and the songs of birds; the unfailing recurrence of the dawn; the sublime serenity of a star-lit night, and the beauty of Nature's silent adaptability to every condition. Cheerfulness is name for all the many thoughts, emotions, and actions that harmonize with the buovancy, persistence and order of the universe. It is the sheer joy of being alive, independently of the particular circumstances that would imprison us within the narrowness of self. It permits no scoffing and skepticism, but makes it natural to be courageous before the great ideal of making the world a better place for those who are to follow.

IN ME YE SHALL HAVE PEACE.

Long days and nights upon this restless bed,
Of daily, nightly weariness and pain!
Yet Thou art here, my ever-gracious Lord,
Thy well-known voice speaks not to me in vain,
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

The darkness seemeth long, and even the light
No respite brings with it; no soothing rest
For this worn frame; yet in the midst of all Thy love revives. Father, Thy will is best,
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Sleep cometh not, when most I seem to need
Its kindly balm. O Father, be to me
Better than sleep; and let these sleepless hours
Be hours of blessed fellowship with Thee.
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Not always seen the wisdom and the love;
And sometimes hard to be believed, when pain
Wrestles with faith, and almost overcomes.
Yet even in conflict Thy sure words sustain,
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Father, the flesh is weak; fain would I rise
Above its weakness into things unseen.
Lift Thou me up; give me the open ear,
To hear the voice that speaketh from within,
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Father, the hour is come; the hour when I Shall with these fading eyes behold Thy face;
And drink in all the fulness of Thy love.
Till then, oh! speak to me Thy words of grace,
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

(This poem is believed to be the last ever written by Dr. Horatio Bonar and was found amongst his papers after his death.)

Imagination.

One day last winter my six-year-old boy ran to me and said, "Come out and see a bird's nest with four blue eggs in it."

In surprise I took his hand and walked beside him through the garden to a leafless wintry rosebush to which he pointed triumphantly. "But where is the nest?" I asked.

"Right there," he insisted indicating a bleak branch with not so much as a straw on it.

"But there is no nest," I insisted.

Then he withdrew his hand and looked up into my face with utmost scorn. "Can't you make-believe anything?" he said.

What was my response? What should have been my response do you think? Well I believe the words that rushed to my lips were the right and true words. I said, "Why, darling, I beg your pardon for being so stupid! Of course I can make-believe and I'll never be so dull again."

The next week, however, there occurred in my household a very different kind of falsehood. A little girl of whom I had temporary charge had found a purse with a good deal of money in it. We had talked about this among our neighbors and in the child's presence until she felt very proud of herself. One day she came to me with a dollar bill in her hand.

"I certainly will make you rich some time," she exclaimed quoting a remark which we had frequently make among ourselves. "Here is a dollar I found under a rock."

I can not tell just why I did not believe her, but after accepting the dollar of which she made me a present I went to my purse. It had been taken out of that. I called her in from her play and very quietly told her I felt sure she had taken the dollar from me and asked her why she had done so.

She denied it—she even protested piously that she could not be so base as to steal from one to whom she owed so much kindness. I did not argue or raise my voice; I simply kept saying, "Why did you take it?" "I feel sure you took it." Tell me why you took it?"

Suddenly she broke down and admitted her guilt. Of course her reason was clear: She wanted to be talked about more, to hear people say, "Mabel has found more money." She had no desire for the money itself; she had given it back to me.

The first of these cases, that of the bird's nest story was an act of harmless and beautiful imagination; the second was a lie. The spirit of the first should be encouraged, the second required a punishment which would make clear to the child's conscience the baseness of her deed.

It is seldom hard to know the difference between flights of a child's imagination and his untruths. To sympathize with the former, however, we must pause for a few minutes and try really to understand children's natures.

It is very unjust to confuse this beautiful gift of childhood with the spirit of cowardice and vanity which is at the root of most lying. To be good mothers we must realize that our little children up about school years of age are like Poets and Artists and Musicians—to a great extent they live in their busy imaginations.—Selected.

WHAT IS OUR CROSS?

F. B. Stone.

Lord, help us understand Thy teaching,
"Take up thy cross and follow me."
We make a cross of every trial,
And thus Thy meaning fail to see.

A cross is not just some great burden,
However heavy that may be,
From which for us there's no escaping;
'Tis something different, we must see.

'Tis something that we love or cherish,
A something we forego for Thee,
It may be part of our own being,
As pride, that crucified must be.

It is not sickness nor yet sorrow,
To patiently be borne for Thee,
Nor is it grief at Thy great suffering
For us Thou bearest on the tree.

"Deny thyself," Lord, help us grasp it.
"Denying self, come, follow Me,"
This is the cross that we must carry;
No other cross is taught by Thee.

This cross that Thou didst bid us carry,
Thou bearest all along Thy way.
Denying self was Thy example
Thou bidst us follow day by day.

SCARLET OF THE YEAR.

Now is the scarlet of the year,
Dame Nature planned it long ago.
She took the redwood lily's cup,
She levied on the sunset glow;

Then touched the hillside with her torch,
The blueberry bushes turned to flame.
Black alder, sumac, barberry—
These mark the way that autumn came.

The flame leaped up; from tawny birch
To waiting maple swiftly spread.
The whole horizon seemed ablaze
With vivid shades of gorgeous red.

Folks cried: "Jack Frost was out last night."
To think they did not even know
That Nature planned these scarlet days
In summer hours, long months ago!

THE LITTLE BOY WHO DIDN'T WANT TO TAKE A BATH.

George Morgan Knight, Jr.

Part 1.

Daddy's Plan.

The bath water had been run in the tub and the room was ready for Jimmy Jones to take his bath.

"Jimmy, get up. Your water is already, and hurry," called his mother.

"My! Wish I didn't have to take an old bath. I hate to. You can wash yourself just as good with the wash rag," Jimmy grumbled to himself. "You bet when I get big I ain't goin' to do it. No siree!"

"Go on and take your bath, the water's getting cool, Jimmy."

"I am, Mamma," the boy called from his room. But Jimmy didn't want to do it at all. He had just washed the night before. It was a nuisance to wash all the time. People who washed and kept themselves clean, always got the diseases first. The ones who were dirty did not get them as readily. These were Jimmy Jones' ideas about cleanliness, this morning. And perhaps he was not by himself, in this opinion.

The water proved to be too hot, and when he tried to remedy matters he made the water too cold. And it had to be all let out and drawn again. Now, this water proved to be not warm enough and, in the mean while, he had gotten a scolding for this. So at last when the water was just right he did not feel very happy over it. It was just another old bath and that was all.

The bathroom was chilly, and there seemed to be a draft from somewhere blowing on him. Jimmy hated to have a draft blow on him, and to make matters worse, his mother came in and announced the room was too close! And she had let in a lot of cold air. Mrs. Jones had brought Jimmy some clean underclothes.

Turning to leave, she said to the wet, shivering, soapy little boy, who was hating to take this fine hot bath, which made him have such a fresh, boyish smell that mothers like. "I have a letter saying that grandmother is sick and wants me to come and see her for a few weeks. Aunt Marie can't do all the work and nurse grandmother, too. So I must leave tonight for grandmothers. I want you to look after Daddy, and do all the things he asks you. Be a good boy. And take your baths as regularly as if I were with you."

"I'll try, Mama. I'm going to miss you awful bad," he said, as he climbed out the fast emptying tub and hastily rubbed himself dry.

But when his mother had gone and the next day came around he did not want to take it. He did not see why he had to, he had just taken one yesterday.

"Daddy, couldn't you let me skip this time? I'm clean, honest I am. Why do boys have to take baths all the time? Can't you let me off, please? The bath room is cold and it takes so long for the water to get hot. And I am so sleepy!"

"I used to be like you, Jimmy, when I was a boy your size. I didn't like to take baths, either, at home. A swim in the pool was enough. Mother said 'that I didn't wash as well', but I could not see what she meant. So I'll let you try what I did. Father said, 'If you can go for two weeks without washing I'll give you five dollars'."

"Did you win the five dollars, Daddy?" asked Jimmy.

"I am not going to tell you, but I am going to offer you the same thing. Would you like to try it?"

"Would I? You know I'll try it!" Jimmy exclaimed joyfully. "Do you really mean it?"

"Certainly I mean it. If you can go two weeks without taking a bath I'll give you five dollars to spend as you choose."

Jimmy hurried off to school a very happy lad. He didn't have to take his bath for two whole weeks and he would get five dollars for doing this. Why hadn't his father thought of this plan before? But he was a fine daddy. And just to think that he didn't have to take any old bath for two weeks! Well, things did happen to him like he had read about. But what would his mother say? Hadn't his mother told him to do all the things his daddy told him and be a nice boy, and to take his baths regularly? But he just had to win that five dollars. Why, he could spend it when and for what he wished without asking anybody. He bet no other boy he knew could do this. No matter how hot the water got or how chilly the room was, he didn't have to take any old bath!

But Jimmy had not noticed the merry twinkle in his Daddy's eyes, when he had hurried out of the room. But really it did not worry him, what was to come. He did not have to take his bath that day, anyway!

The Dog Next Door.

Tommy didn't like dogs. He wasn't afraid of them, exactly, because, of course, boys were not supposed to be afraid of anything, but he just didn't like them. They were so big, and if they were friendly they jumped all over you and knocked you down and dirtied your nice white sailor suit with their dusty or muddy paws, and if they were little they barked so sharply and snapped at your ankles. So he really did not like them, anyway you fixed it.

That was the reason why Tommy felt so unhappy when the people next door, who moved in one day while he was at school, brought a dog with them—a great big dog with a long golden and white coat and a tail like a great soft plume. He was the friendliest dog in the world, and the Brown children played with him and rode on his back and had lots of fun, which the dog seemed to enjoy as much as they did; and Tommy sat on the fence and watched them, and longed to join them, if it only had not been for "that horrid dog". In vain they called him to "come on over". Tommy only shook his head and explained that he "didn't want to", while all the time he was wanting to just as hard as he could.

But one day something happened that changed Tommy's opinion of the big dog. He had gone down street with mother, and while she was shopping at the counter, the little boy wandered about the store, looking at the pretty things displayed.

Before he knew it he found himself at the door, so he thought he would stand there and wait for mother instead of going back to join her. It would have been all right, only that Tommy had wandered to the door opening on another street, and when mother was ready to go, she went back to the door by which they had come in, looking for her little boy all the time. But she did not find him, because by that time Tommy was out on the other street, thinking that mother had forgotten him and left the store; and only anxious to find her he ran on and on, getting farther away from her all the time, and never dreaming that mother was hunting for him as hard as she could.

So he ran on, crying, until suddenly he saw ahead of him a big white and golden dog with a tail like a plume, trotting toward him. Tommy was so glad to see something he knew that he forgot to be afraid. He just held out his hands and cried eagerly:

"Oh, King, are you going home? Please take me along!"

The big dog seemed to understand. He stopped and looked very kindly at Tommy, as if to say, "Well, I am glad you are ready to be friends with me at last. I couldn't understand why you didn't like me. Come on and we'll go home together."

Tommy took hold of King's collar and they trotted along together, Tommy feeling suddenly safe and happy and comforted. And when they reached home, King stopped at Tommy's gate, and mother, who had been dreadfully frightened, ran out to meet them and threw her arms around boy and dog together and hugged them both.

After that Tommy and King were the very best of friends.—The Presbyterian of the South.

Little Ted.

The sun was shining brightly one early spring morning, and little Ted sat on the front doorstep pondering. His elbow rested on his knees and his chubby face rested in his hands. Ted was thinking; and as he sat there keeping time with his little foot, he was softly singing a kindergarten song.

It was Saturday, and, much to Ted's dislike, there was no school, and the little boy did not know what to do with himself.

"I wish there was kindergarten every day," sighed Ted, as he longingly thought of dear Miss Alice and little Hazel and John and Paul, and of the pretty pink mat he was weaving; and then the song came again to his lips and he sang right merrily and sweetly:

"I'm small, I know, but wherever I go,
The fields grow greener still."

"That was such a pretty story that Miss Alice told us about the little stream," thought Ted, "how the little stream went singing on its way as happy as could be, watering the grass and the flowers on the banks, and the roots of the big trees, and the cows and sheep and the birds, and then there was the little boy who came after the cows—it was such a nice story!"

Pretty soon Ted was aroused from his reverie by hearing the milkman ring his bell. Ted ran down the steps and up to the wagon in a moment.

"Well, Ted," said Thomas, the driver, "you have come in good time. My leg is so lame with rheumatism that I can not get out of the wagon this morning. Will you carry the milk in to Maggie?"

"Yes, sir!" said Ted, glad of something to do; and he carried the milk very carefully to the kitchen door, where Maggie met him with a pitcher in her hand.

"Thomas is lame with rheumatism," said Ted, "and can't come in."

Maggie gave him a cookie which she had just taken from the oven, and off he went again as happy as a bird. He felt as if he had wings. He ran out to the gate and swung there for some time, the song again jingling in his mind:

"I'm small, I know, but wherever I go,
The fields grow greener still."

Very soon he saw his little friend, Kitty Culpins, coming down the walk, wheeling her baby brother. As she went to cross the street the curbstone was too high and she was not strong enough to get the carriage over. She pushed and she pulled, but it was of no use. Ted watched her for some time and then a happy thought popped into his little brown head. He ran to Kitty, and pulled while she pushed, and they got the carriage safely over. They walked up and down in the bright sunshine for a long time, and then Kitty went home and Ted went to his favorite place on the front steps.

"Sing, singing all the day," sang Ted, as he took some marbles from his pocket, and counted them over.

He heard a strange noise on the sidewalk, and looking up he saw an old blind man, who was very much frightened at a wagon which had passed quite close to him as he was crossing the street. The blind man had lost his way and was tapping with his cane upon the sidewalk, to find out where he was.

Ted ran down to see what was the matter, and the poor old man told him that he had lost his way. He wanted to go to North Street, and so Ted took hold of his hand and turned him gently around, and the old man thanked him kindly.

Just then the dinner bell rang, and Ted ran in with a light heart.

His papa said, "Well, Ted what have you been doing today?"

"Oh, having such fun!" said Ted.—Selected.

Just Plain Mary Jane.

Jessie Lee said that Mary Jane was the plainest child in school. Little Meddlesome Mattie Archer had to go and tell her about it.

Mattie thought herself a pretty little girl; and, really she was, only she spoiled it all by thinking too much about herself. Mattie was always talking about whether people were pretty or not, and she had been talking about Mary Jane herself and trying to get Jessie Lee to say that Mary Jane was not pretty. Then as soon as Jessie Lee said it away went Miss Meddlesome Mattie to tell it.

Poor Jessie Lee supposed, of course, that Mary Jane would be very angry with her, but she wasn't. She smiled as pleasantly as ever and offered to walk along home with Jessie Lee.

"Mattie says she told you what I said, Mary Jane," said Jessie Lee, "and I'm so sorry."

"Oh, that?" laughed Mary Jane; "why I didn't mind that. I sort of liked it. I thought you meant that I tell the trtuh, and say what I mean; and you know I like something that is plain and easy to read." And Mary Jane just smiled right along and really seemed pleased, when Mattie and Jessie Lee had both thought, of course, she would be mad about it.

They were all going to school together that summer and it was not such a very big school, and it would have been pretty bad if Mary Jane had sulked and been angry with the others. There were twenty little girls in Miss May's room, and it certainly would not have been pleasant if one of them had been angry with the others.

It would have been especially bad just then because the Governor of the State was coming to Greenville the next week, and not one of those little Greenville girls in that room had ever seen the Governor of their State. All the schools in town were going to dismiss school for that day. The band was going to play and the boys and girls were going to march in the parade that passed before the stand where the Governor was to speak. The schools were doing this because the Governor was a good man and had worked hard to build up the schools and make it easier for the boys and girls in that State to get an education.

Miss May thought it would be a nice thing to do if the school children would give the Governor a beautiful American flag to take back to the State Capital with him; because she worked so hard to get the flag ready the superintendent of the schools told her that she might get one of the little girls in her room to present the flag to the Governor.

"Mattie Archer would be the very one," said Miss May, for she couldn't help seeing that Mattie was indeed quite a pretty little girl.

"But no," she said afterwards, "it might be better to get Jessie Lee, because she has such a sweet voice." Miss May thought about it so much that she finally decided to let the boys and girls in the room vote on it themselves and say which one of the twenty girls in the room should be the one to give the flag to the Governor.

Mattie was delighted, for she felt very sure that she would be the one who was chosen. A lot of her friends told her that she would surely be the one, and she felt so sure of it that she began to talk about what she was going to wear.

"Oh, I think you will look lovely in pink," said Mary Jane, "and I have a pretty new pink dress I will let you wear if you want it."

Then indeed Mattie was pleased, for she knew what a pretty pink dress it was, and she could just feel how she would enjoy wearing it and knowing that she was the prettiest girl in the school. She thought so much about it that she began to be cross and unfriendly to any one who even suggested that she had better wait until the voting was over.

The Governor was coming on Friday, so Miss May thought it would be a good thing to get the voting over on Monday and give the girl who was chosen plenty of time to get ready.

She put a little blue box on the front seat and told all of the children to write their choice down very carefully on a piece of paper, fold it over once and slip it in the box. Then she would count them and tell them who was to be the fortunate little girl. It was not very exciting while the counting was going on for most of them thought surely it would be Mattie.

"But I voted for Mary Jane because she is so sweet and good," Jessie Lee whispered to Jeannie. "Of course she won't get it, but I just wanted to do it because I love her so much."

"I did, too," answered Jeannie, "just because I love her, not that I thought she'd get it. She's always so kind and tells the truth about everything, and just don't ever get mad."

Miss May, up in the front, looked up and shook her head to say that the two girls must quit talking. There was a strange and puzzled look on Miss May's face, but at last she smiled and then she said, "Well, Mary Jane, what are you going to wear when you carry the flag and give it to the Governor?"

"Why, why," gasped Mary Jane, "I loaned my pink dress to Mattie."

Then every one in the room just laughed until Mattie herself had to laugh, too.

"It's a joke on me," said Mattie at last. "You were elected, Mary Jane, and will have to wear your pink dress yourself."—The Presbyterian Advance.

A SONG FOR SLEEP-TIME.

The moon is a-pepping over the trees,
Round as a grape-fruit, yellow as cheese;
Looking for little boys who won't go to bed—
Boys who stay up with the old folks instead.

The moon doesn't like the little boys that stay Away from their beds after closing of day;
The night is the time for sleeping and rest—
Little boys grow up in that way the best.

The horses and cows and chickens and sheep
Have closed weary eyes and fallen asleep;
The robins have snuggled down deep in their nest,
A lullaby rustles from out of the west.

The folks of the daytime should all be a-bed.
Strange are the folk of the night, it is said.
Over the housetops the moon slowly creeps,
Mommy will watch while her little boy sleeps.

—Wesander.

Queer Grocery Customers.

"Mother! Mother! What do you think?" Mrs. Allen put her hands over her ears and said she could not think at all with such a racket going on. "the funniest thing in the world! It must be a mistake!"

At last Mrs. Allen felt sure that she would have to read the letter herself to get anything out of it, because the twins, Benny and Betty, made a great deal of noise but told nothing.

"John has a grocery store!" said Betty at last. "Away off there in that out-of-the-way place. Who would come to buy his stuff?"

"He says he sells nuts and apples and cabbage and lots of other things," said Benny. "I don't know where he could have a store in that little house."

"You'll soon see where and how he runs his grocery store," said Mrs. Allen. "Your father is going out that way on business next Saturday, and he's going to leave us with Uncle Richard and Aunt Laura and John until he gets back from Glenville."

"I'm going to take my money along to buy some nuts in that grocery", said Betty.

"And I'm going to have some apples," said her brother. "My! I can hardly wait until Saturday."

It was a cold day, but they were all well wrapped for the journey, and the minute the twins were out of the automobile they demanded to see the grocery store. "Come right here to the window," said John all excited. "This is the busiest time of the day. My customers are all out in force."

All they saw was an old wash bench standing in the yard that was now all covered with snow quite unlike the grassy lawn of summer. "Why, I don't see any folks," said Betty.

"My customers are not folks," laughed John. "I thought it would fool you to hear that I had a grocery."

"And they never pay you a penny for anything," said Betty watching a wild rabbit nibble cabbage and a squirrel fill his cheeks with nuts.

"Oh, yes, they pay well. They help the farmers by eating the insects, and then they are such dear little pets," John was quick to say a good word for his patrons.

"O Mother, can't you take a picture of the birds and squirrels and rabbits?" cried Benny. "We could send it in to that paper that wants pictures of birds and animals."

The customers were so busy eating and carrying away food that they never noticed the window that opened softly and the queer little box that was placed on the sill. "Click! Click!" Before they had a chance to be frightened the pictures were taken and the window softly closed.

It was spring and John had quite forgotten how he had helped save the birds and little woods animals when the snow was so deep in winter, but Betty and Benny had not forgotten. Every day they asked if the postman had brought a letter they were looking for; and when at last it came, Mr. Allen had to take them out to Uncle Richard's at once.

"Look at that!" cried Benny thrusting a paper into John's hands.

"And look at that!" cried Betty laying a crisp dollar bill on the paper.

"Why, it's my little grocery store!" cried John. "And this paper says the picture won a prize of a dollar! Is it really mine? Why didn't you tell me sooner?"

"It didn't come till this morning!" cried two excited voices at once. "The grocery did pay, and here's the money."

AN ITALIAN HOLIDAY

Paul Wilstach has won friends all over the world with his informal and fascinating travel books. Thousands climbed Along the Pyrenees with him—and the same delighted company cruised with him in Islands of the Mediterranean.

In An Italian Holiday a third and even more alluring excursion awaits one. The author-guide avoids the starred sights and follows his own fancy. The big cities—Naples, Rome, Venice—serve only to orient the traveler. A glimpse of the Bay of Naples, that front door of Italy, the panorama of Rome from the Pincian Hill, a water funeral at Venice—and you are whisked away to trace Caruso's youthful years in Naples, or Mussolini's boyhood in tiny, obscure Predappio, or to cross the Rubicon with Caesar.

At Lake Trasimeno where Hannibal dealt the Romans his deadliest blow; at Spoleto where Livy places the first repulse of the Carthaginians on Italian soil; at Certaldo where Boccaccio was born and died, the hamlet's only claim to fame being the father of Italian prose; at Miramar where the Empress Charlotte watched and waited; along the road to Rimini where Francesca passed to her illfated bridal; even in Fiume, with the insurgent poet of yesterday; in Asolo where Catherine of Cornaro found contentment, Duse found peace, the Brownings, father and son, discovered charm; in Busseto where Verdi married and composed; in Parma where Correggio painted and Marie Louise spent her unchastened maturity; —everywhere, the writer gilds the present with the past.

Italy to Mr. Wilstach is the land of memory, of delights experienced or longed for.

And just so will An Italian Holiday become to you.

Death

MRS. ANNE SOMERVILLE HAYES EACHES.

MRS. ANNE SOMERVILLE HAYES EACHES died in Ardmore, Pa., on Sunday, October 14, at the home of her son-in-law, Robert Coleman Walker. She was the daughter of James and Elizabeth Green Hayes and the granddaughter of Wm. Green, the noted Richmond lawyer, whose name, his biographer says is one "to conjure with". Mrs. Eaches was born in Fredericksburg and moved to Richmond with her parents when she was a girl. Here she lived till her marriage to the late Ewing Eaches, of Louisville, Kentucky. Since his death her home has been with her daughter and son-in-law.

Most of us who are Christians in anything more than name have some one special grace or virtue which, as a rule, is unconsciously manifested to a greater or less degree in our daily life. Patience was the grace that shone in the life of Mrs. Eaches. And what a grace! St. Paul says charity is the greatest of three virtues. But St. James says patience is the greatest of all. "Let patience have her perfect work that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." James 1:4. For several years Mrs. Eaches was an invalid confined to a rolling chair, dependent on the will, or the service of others. Yet never a murmur, never an expression indicative of divine injustice; no word of anger or of worry, but submission to the will of the Everlasting Father, who doeth all things well, and doeth them in love. No wonder there should break upon her eyes just before they closed for the last time a vision of angels calling to the soul made perfect by patience.

So they laid her body to rest in beautiful Hollywood, with the falling autumn leaves and the dying flowers and the setting sun reminding her loved ones of the end of all things earthly, but at the same time calling them to faith and to patience till the leaves and flowers come again and the sun rises on the morrow—to faith and patience till the eternal "day shall break and the shadows flee away". She was a member of St. Paul's Church, Richmond.

EDWARD CARTER.

One of the Immortal Six Hundred.

Entered into the Life Eternal, at Carter Hall, Warenton, Virginia, on October 3, 1928, EDWARD CARTER, eldest son of Major Richard Henry Carter and Mary Welby, DeButts, of Glen Welby, Virginia, at the age of eighty-five years.

Captain Edward Carter was born at Glen Welby August 19, 1843. He was a cadet at the Virginia Military Institute, but left there at the beginning of the Civil War and joined the Eighth Infantry under Colonel Eppa Hunton. He was in the battles of Ball's Bluff, seven days' fighting around Richmond, second battle of Manassas and Gettysburg; was in the immortal charge with the bravest of the brave of Pickett's Division, where he was severely wounded and left on the field with the dead. Later he was found and taken to the hospital at Chester, Pennsylvania, then in prison at Fort McHenry, later Fort Delaware, from there he was sent with 600 Confederate officers to Morris Island, S. C., and placed under fire of the Confederate guns; he was sent to the hospital at Fort Beaufort, S. C., from which place he was exchanged, returned to Virginia, reaching home just before the surrender.

Captain Carter came home on crutches and used them the remainder of his life. In September, 1867, he married Jane Peter Turner, of Kinlock (daughter of Edward C. and Sarah Beverley Turner), who died about a year ago. He is survived by four children, Rebecca Welby, Mrs. William A. Stewart, Jr., of Baltimore, Mrs. Mary DeButts Foster and Mrs. Nina C. Heinekin, six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Captain Carter was commander of Joe Kendall Camp, Confederate Veterans, he was the highly esteemed cashier of the Fauquier National Bank, also a director. He was a vestryman of St. James Episcopal Church, of Warrenton, Virginia.

Captain Carter came of a noble family, was a devoted husband, a loving father, a true friend and neighbor and a man of the highest probity of character, greatly loved and universally admired and trusted by all who knew him in every walk of life. His exemplary Christian life was an inspiration to all with whom he was thrown in contact, a splendid example of the Virginia gentleman, unassuming and unselfish, given to an honest and faithful performance of every duty; he was content to live his life of faithfulness and trust and all of his life to walk humbly with his God.

MRS. GILLIAM WILLSON ANDERSON.

The death of MRS. GILLIAM WILLSON ANDERSON, at her home, in Blackstone, Va., October 7, 1928, brought sadness to many hearts. Virginia Cary Claiborne Anderson was born in Lawrenceville sixty years ago, the daughter of George and Virginia Cary Claiborne.

After coming to Blackstone to live Mrs. Anderson was soon identified with all that goes to improve and uplift a community. She was busy in all its religious, social and civic activities, having been a member of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, of the Woman's Auxiliary and at one time President of the local chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Her husband and one sister, Mrs. Alice Cardozo, survive her, together with two daughters, Mrs. James T. Miller, of Norfolk, and Mrs. Russell S. Perkinson, of Petersburg, and five stalwart sons, Edward Randolph, Richard Drewry, Gilliam Willson, Jr., George Claiborne and Robert Turnbull. Her children "rise up and call her blessed".

Mrs. Anderson had been an invalid for eight years, but she met pain and weakness with the same patience and unfaltering courage with which she had met the vicissitudes of life. From her chair she directed the affairs of her household and kept the home sunny and sweet for her husband and children. Her cheerfulness and friendliness were remarkable and possibly accounts, in a great measure, for her large circle of friends.

The funeral services were at the home, her rector, Mr. Thomas G. Faulkner, read the beautiful ritual of the Episcopal Church. As the sun was sinking in the west the frail body was laid to rest in Lakeview Cemetery there to await the Resurrection Morn.

"Say not good-night,
But in some brighter clime
Bid me good-morning."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

oughly repaired during the past summer; the walls inside and out were painted, and a new furnace placed in an enlarged cellar.

The work was finished in time for the Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity, when the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, D. D., preached and offered a reconsecration prayer. The Twentieth Sunday after Trinity the Rev. C. Aaylette Ashby, of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Fla., returning to the home of his boyhood, preached and was welcomed by his many relatives and friends.

The last issue of St. Mark's Parish paper contains a summary of the parochial and financial statistics and some events in the history of the fifteen years the present rector has served in this parish. The report is encouraging in showing the results of constant and general cooperation by the parishioners.

Rappahannock Valley Convocation.

The fall meeting of the Rappahannock Valley Convocation was held at St. John's Church, Warsaw, Va. of which the Rev. F. D. Goodwin is the rector), on the seventh and eighth of November. The Rev. Page Dame preached the sermon at the opening service Wednesday morning, and the Rev. Dr. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., addressed the convoeation Wednesday afternoon on the outstanding events of the General Convention. Personal Evangelism was discussed at the evening service by members of the Church Army.

Bishop H. St. George Tucker was the principal speaker on Thursday. He told the convocation of the Church's program for 1929, and said that if the budget of $196,050 is not met the work of the diocese will have to suffer for no deficit will be allowed.

At two o'clock on Thursday there was a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The final services on the program for the convocation were opening mission services conducted by members of the Church Army at St. John's Church, Warsaw, and St. John's Church, Tappahannock.

NEW YORK.

William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, Suffragan.

Diocesan Conference.

At Lake Mahopac two hundred clergymen of the Diocese of New York met for a two days' conference which Bishop William T. Manning, in the opening session on November 7, described as a meeting for prayer, study and fellowship.

On the first day Bishop Darst, of East Carolina, Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism, issued a call for an evangelical movement "to meet the challenge of a distracted world". He said that plans have been made for next year for a preaching mission in every diocese in the United States. He said in part that "people are hungry for the pure, simple Gospel of Jesus".

"The nation stands in the sunlight of a deadening prosperity. Less than fifty million of our 100,000,000 people are today connected with any definite form of religion. America is traveling toward the crossroads of her destiny and she will go with the majority unless the Church exerts itself.

"Last year, for the first time, the growth of our Church failed to keep pace proportionately with the growth of the country. Back of the seeming indifference of the age and the wild laughter that has no joy behind it, I believe there is a real hunger for something finer. The Church must heed the call of God to a reconsecration to the Gospel of Jesus."

Bishop Creighton, of Mexico, discussed the position of our Church in relation to the religious laws of Mexico. He said that Article 24 of the Mexican Constitution definitely sanctioned religion and that only one of the new laws interfered with our Church's work there. This law makes it impossible for Mexican candidates to be confirmed in Mexican churches.

He said that the Protestant Episcopal Church is the only Church working with the English-speaking people in Mexico, and that it has gone into Mexico at the invitation of the Independent Mexican Episcopal Church, which had come voluntarily under the jurisdiction of the Church of the United States.

The Rev. Dr. James O. S. Huntington, Father Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross, concluded the evening session with a discussion on the personal life of the clergy.

This was the first diocesan conference of the kind, but it is hoped that it will become permanent, as it is thought to be the best way to offset the partisan prejudice and suspicion between high and low churches.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop

Fifty-sixth Anniversary.

The fifty-sixth anniversary of the Long Island Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council was commemorated today at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. There were about two hundred women present, though the morning was very rainy. The Most Rev. John Gardner qMurray, D. D., Presiding Bishop, celebrated Holy Communion and preached. In his sermon he paid high tribute to the Woman's Auxiliary, with special reference to the remarkable Thank Offering of more than a million dollars recently presented at the Convention in Washington. He lauded the memory of Bishop Littlejohn as the founder of the Auxiliary, and spoke with high praise of the work of Bishop Creighton of Mexico, and of certain other missionaries who have gone forth from Long Island.

At the afternoon session Bishop Stires presided. In introducing Bishop Colmore of Porto Rico, Bishop Stires bade him welcome most heartily to Long Island, and urged the Auxiliary to help Porto Rico generously in this time of their great need. Bishop Colmore told most graphically of the terrible tornado and the havoc it had made. He spoke with pride of the fine behavior of his native workers in the face of the calamity, and he had much praise for the Red Cross relief work. He was grateful for the action that had been taken at General Convention to assure the rebuilding of the Church in Porto Rico. Bishop Stires warmly approved the intention to make a special offering for Porto Rico on Sunday, November 18, whereupon Bishop Colmore announced that he and Mrs. Colmore would on that day be celebrating their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary on board ship, returning to Porto Rico. Bishop Stires urged this as an additional reason for making a generous present to the Bishop for his work.

Armistice Day.

One hundred men are to march to church behind the Cross and the national flag on Sunday morning, November 11, at the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill, "to show their allegiance to our Captain, Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, and in honor of those who in 1916-1918 marched away to France, believed that through their sacrifice mankind would achieve an endless peace".

New Church Beautified.

A chancel window of three lights, and a fine new organ have been ordered for the new Church of the Epiphany, Brooklyn. The window will be made by J. E. Tarbox, of New York, and the organ by Austin. The building is progressing toward completion, and will be ready for occupancy perhaps by Christmas.

"Month of Sundays."

Many of the churches of the diocese are following the "month of Sundays" plan in preparation for the every member canvass. Many parish dinners will be held this month. It seems to be generally expected that Long Island can and will do better than it has yet done in support of the Church's Program.

DOMINUS FLUSTRA ISIN 1835

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 24, 1928. No. 47.

Bishop W. T. Manning, of the Episcopal Church, has well said: "The present movement does not mean only rejection of the Virgin Birth, or this or that miracle of the Gospel. As Bishop Gore has so ably shown, it has its roots in a determined presupposition against the possibility of miracle, against the supernatural as such, and so against the very message of the Gospel as declared in the New Testament. A Christ who was not born of the Virgin, who did not rise in the body on the third day, and did not ascend into Heaven, is not the Christ in whom this Church believes and has always believed."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

It is impossible to be in tune with Christ and out of harmony with His Church.

Love in the heart takes the rasping tone from the voice.

"Sin is really the only thing to fear in life; and Christ saves us from sin."

"Because you have occasional spells of despondency do not despair. The sun has a sinking spell every night, but it rises again all right the next morning."

"A little child on a summer morning stood in a great Cathedral Church. The sunlight streamed through the beautiful stained glass windows and the figures in them of the servants of God were bright with brilliant color. A little later the question was asked, 'What is a saint?' and the child replied, 'A saint is a person who lets the light shine through'."

When John G. Paton read to an old heathen chief in the New Hebrides some life-giving passages from the first Bible printed in the native language, he shouted with great joy: "Give me that book! It tells me about myself and about the way I want to go. Give me the book! Oh, give it to me!"

"This life would be impossible without the possibility of another life."

"Who would like to have this epitaph graven on his tombstone: 'He made a great deal of money'?"

We cannot exaggerate Jesus Christ.

Thou shalt not fear these waters,
Though disappointment, disbelief, ill-health,
Hatred, or jealousy, or fear of pain
For some dear loved one closed thine eyes with dread.
Thou shalt not fear these waters; There will come
One precious moment troubling them with life
And dowering them with beauty in the dawn
That thou may'st bathe and heal thy sores and wounds.

Sing a song of thankfulness!
Rest and peace are thine to bless.
God has given you His own;
All you are is His alone.
Oh! forget not, busy one,
Toiling on from sun to sun,
Rest and heaven shall end your way.
Now on this Thanksgiving Day
Let your whole of love arise
In adoration to the skies.

—B. F. M. Sours.

In life troubles will come, which seem as if they would never pass away. The night and the storm look as if they would last forever, but the calm and the morning cannot be stayed; the storm in its very nature is transient. The effort of nature, as that of the human heart, ever is to return to its repose, for God is Peace.—George MacDonald.

Error is none the better for being common, nor truth the worse for having lain neglected.—John Locke.

THANKSGIVING

Holidays, fast days and feast days are intended to make us think apart from and beyond our usual routines. As we are entrusted with mind and will power, it is for each of us to decide for ourselves whether he shall use or waste such days. Thanksgiving Day comes next week—the day set apart by law and custom for public acknowledgment of our dependence, as a people and nation, on the Divine power and mercy and for humble praise and thanks for blessings bestowed upon us. The conception of a hundred and twenty million people, the strongest, richest, most virile, the world ever has seen, occupying a great continent and with far-flung possessions, uniting to worship the Invisible, known only in their hearts and souls, is majestically, magnificently, beautiful. Unhappily, the purpose for which the observance was originated and established is too much forgotten. The splendid conception is by our actual conduct too often degraded. Probably it is sadly true that with many families and individuals there is less real thanksgiving and worship on Thanksgiving Day than on any other day of the year—except, perhaps, on Christmas, the supreme day of all for gratitude and adoration. Instead of enlarging and widening our views and horizons to the nobilities and splendours to which history and the time invite us, we narrow and compress to petty and sometimes squalid and ignoble things—sports, household preparations, amusements, little pomps and vanities and displays.

Habits bind us, conditions change, the ways of our neighbors and neighborhoods govern us. We cannot hope nor expect to have Thanksgiving Days now like those of a century, or a century and a half ago, when people consciously lived in constant jeopardy, in presence of necessities ever pressing, were led to feel the need of Divine protection, to beg for it and be grateful for it. In prosperity and with continuing progress and apparent safety, we tend to become insolently self-confident, negligent in recognition of the Giver of all the good that comes to us and for which we hope. It is a very, very old story. Jeshurun, found in the howling wilderness, led as the young of an eagle to eat the increase of the fields, suck honey and oil from the rocks, waxed fat and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation. Some parts of that chapter of Deuteronomy read almost as if intended to be direct warning to us of the United States now. The Thanksgiving Days for which the Church service and some family reunions made all have vanished in most parts of the country. Yet all of us, wherever we may be and whatever the requirements of our surroundings and situation, can think and pray and offer our thanks—think and pray and be thankful not only for ourselves but as citizens of the mighty republic.

Tremendous facts and a wonderful story of preservation and guidance invoke our consideration. We have been brought safely through every peril that could beset a nation, most of them resulting from criminal blunders or blundering crimes of our own voters and political leaders. Feeble, scattered over howling wilderness, poor, hampered by incompetence, and inexperience, treachery and foolish divisions, we won wars against the earth's proudest force, through means unforeseen, given us without the contrivance of our statesmanship and regardless of the merits of our cause. We have survived years of internal clashings of interests and sentiments. One of the fiercest, bloodiest, most vindictive and inexcusable of civil wars brought us unity and tranquility. Enforced participation in the greatest of all wars enabled us to end it quickly, mercifully and justly and has given us first place among world powers, left us revelling in unexampled prosperity and opulence. In this recent general election the overwhelming victory of one party brought us from the brink of a precipice which few of us saw. Neglect and selfishness of congress in failing to obey the Constitution and reapportion the electoral college and the election methods in some States threatened us, if the result had been close, with a repetition of the conditions of 1876, when we stood through tremulous weeks at the verge of a new civil war worse than that ended eleven years before.

So we have been brought, as a people, through more than a hundred and fifty years. In that time, religion and Christianity, assailed by more intellectual strength, more insidious argument and treachery, fiercer rancor, than ever before, have gained steadily. In our country, by the census of 1926, 54,000,000 of the estimated population of 96,000,000 fourteen years and over are members of religious organizations. Deducting four million Jews, fifty of the ninety-two millions of us of reasoning ages are, at least nominally, Christians. Our membership of Christian churches is fourteen million more than the unprecedented vote in the election of this month.

Official statistics and studies of the old records and newspapers prove that crime and social offenses, in proportion to population, decrease steadily. Increased facilities for distributing news and journalistic avidity for "scandals in high life" parade before us daily horrors which formerly were unreported or suppressed.

National Thanksgiving Day is the appropriate time for recalling and recognizing our big national blessings. Each of us has reason to be grateful to the Almighty and All-Merciful God for daily blessings we surely have not earned or deserved. This coming day is consecrated for us as a nation to unite in humbling our hearts, sending up to the Supreme Ruler one great outpouring of gratitude, of confession of unworthiness, of supplication for continued guidance and help in leading mankind upward, for preservation and prosperity in years to come as have been granted us in the years gone. It is the day for us to pray devoutly that we may not, like Israel of old, grown fat and thick with abundance, forsake the God who has made and kept us, go to the worship of the strange gods of riches and ostentations, intellectual vanities, standards and courses forbidden by the Commandments and the teachings of the New Testament.

Deuteronomy and Kipling are separated far in time and circumstance, but it will be good for us to couple them in our thoughts, even if but a little while, this coming Thanksgiving; how Jeshurun, "lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation":

And—

"The shouting and the tumult dies;
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
A broken and a contrite heart—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

"If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe,
Such boastings as the Gentiles use,
And lesser breeds, without the law—
Judge of the nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget."

Alfred B. Williams.

A. B. Williams

[To make room for the discussion below, which may have some general interest, publication of the chapter of Early Church Conventions prepared by Mr. Williams for today is postponed to next week.]

Through several weeks I have been trying to supply for the readers of The Southern Churchman a condensed history of the Triennial Conventions of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America. In course of this undertaking I referred, incidently, to the Loyalist, or Tory, leanings of many, or some, of the clergy of the Church of England in Virginia in the Revolutionary war. To my regret and consternation, this aroused energetic agitation in the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, Historiographer of the Virginia Diocese. Apparently in wrathful mood, he sent to The Southern Churchman a communication, which was published, disputing hotly the accuracy of my assertions. As my narrative progressed, Mr. Brydon sent another communication indicative of increasing asperity. Thereupon, I submitted to him a proposition intended to save space and time. It was that we try to dispose of the discussion by having him submit, in one article, briefly as possible, his argument and evidence on the subject, let me submit mine and so end it.

Responsive to this proposition, Mr. Brydon writes me, under date of November 12, a letter in which he says: "I hereby very promptly and emphatically accept your challenge to furnish the proof that the great body of Virginia clergy were loyal to the Revolution. I send it herewith, and as you have made this challenge publicly I demand that you carry out your promise," etc.

Now, I am an ageing citizen, intent on ambling about amiably and innocently on my own small affairs, retaining a whole skin and respectable character. Consequently, I am alarmed and startled by this resounding clash of arms, sudden sabre rattling, talk of challenges and demands, obtrusion in my quiet sunset time of the wrinkled front of grim visaged war; am frighted from my few feeble wits by direful proclamation of pugnacity, left wondering, in vague and dim bewilderment, what the row about.

Unquestionably many substantial, well-bred, well-born persons in this country were Loyalists—Tories—in the Revolutionary war. As late as 1760 an individual named George Washington wrote his uncle-in-law, Mr. Dandridge, in London, begging that London business men give all their influence to hold the American colonies to Great Britain. It seems to be established history that but for the fiery eloquence of Patrick Henry the Virginia convention might have held for the king. In the recent Triennial Convention of the Church, in Washington, an honored bishop, who said his ancestors fought in the Continental army, declared bluntly that, from his study of conditions in 1775-6, he doubted which side he would have taken. As a matter of cold fact, there is no more reason to hold in contempt or abhorrence all the Tories of 1775-6 than there is to pull down the statue of Henry because in 1763 he fought the claim of the Virginia parsons, twenty-five years later opposed acceptance of the Constitution and was overcome, by narrow majority, only by the power of Washington and the reasoning of John Marshall. The seventy-nine members of the Virginia convention who voted, against eighty-nine, for the rejection of the Constitution are not eternally disgraced. Many of us yet revere the memory of ancestors who fought for the Stuarts, although we now know that the Stuarts were vile scoundrels, and we may allow good intent to those who stood for King George, although we see in present-day light that the king and his ministers were dull, besotted fools. Men who voted thirty-two years ago for unlimited coinage of silver are yet at large and respected members of society. Instances might be multiplied indefinitely. So, what's the row about?

Mr. Brydon sends me a printed list announcing itself as telling the status of the Virginia Church of England clergy in 1774-5-6. It gives sixty-seven as "loyal to the American cause", nine as "Tory" and sixteen as "Political affiliation unknown." Of those who were on the American side thirteen were chaplains, four served in the army, twenty were members of county committees of safety, nine being chairmen of such committees.

The list is said to have been compiled by the Rev. Jos. B. Dunn in 1907, from "after-discovered evidence", part of it apparently in an almanac of 1787.

It is not important, but in Sabine's "Loyalists in the Revolution", I find the Rev. Thos. Johnson, Cornwall parish, Charlotte County, added by Mr. Brydon to Mr. Dunn's list of Virginia clergy loyal to the Americans, described as banished from Virginia because "with a great bowl of grog in his hands, he drank success to the British arms". Also, the Rev. John Wingate, St. Thomas' Church, Orange County, listed by Dr. Dunn as a patriot, and "member of the association for his county", recorded by Sabine as having all his books burned by his neighbors because of his pro-British proclivities. Personally, I confess to admiration for the Rev. Alexander McRae, Littleton, Cumberland County, Tory, who, according to Sabine, was "mobbed, whipped, threatened with death" but stuck to his parish and did as he could—a valiant, hard-headed, sturdy Scot.

It seems to my poor understanding that in considering the history of our Church in Virginia in the fifty years from about 1770 we are forced to one of two conclusions: either the clergymen, most of them British born, were incompetent or neglectful, or the laity was remarkably impervious to religious influence. Certainly there was a period of triumphant atheism and irreligion.

Bishop White, in his "Memoirs", written about 1816, when the facts were fresh in his memory, says of Virginia:

"Even in the old parts, members were leaving the Church to attend the administrations of preachers who had recently availed themselves of the very little regard entertained for the clergy to produce a popular desertion of the Church itself. It was becoming more and more unpopular, with some, because it was not considered as promoting piety and with others, because they thought the provision for it a useless burden on the community. After the fall of the establishment a considerable proportion of the (Virginia) clergy continued to enjoy the glebes without performing a single act of sacred duty, except that, perhaps, of marriage. They knew that their public ministrations would not have been attended."

The Rev. Dr. S. D. McConnell, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, in his "History of the Episcopal Church", published in 1897, says: "Even in faithful old Virginia Dissenters were two to one. The results of the fatal breach between clergy and people had already appeared there. Religious indifference prevailed everywhere; churches were falling into neglect and ruin; many of the clergy had withdrawn; still more could have done so to advantage; the few faithful men that remained lamented and despaired."

The Rev. Charles C. Tiffany, D. D., Archdeacon of New York, in his History of the Protestant Episcopal Church, says, of the Revolutionary war, and Virginia: "During the war the sufferings of the loyalist clergy were, of course, many and grievous. Whereas at the beginning of the war Virginia contained ninety-five parishes, one hundred and sixty-four churches and chapels and ninety-one clergymen, at its conclusion twenty-three parishes were entirely extinguished, and of those remaining thirty-four were without clerical ministration. Only twenty-eight of the clergy survived and of these not more than fifteen had been able to remain at their posts. The churches and chapels in almost every parish had fallen into ruin," etc.

But why go further? And, after all, what's the fuss about? Certainly it was not disgraceful for clergymen of the Church of England coming here from Great Britain to see fit to adhere to the Royal cause.

Dr. Lyon Tyler, mentioned by Mr. Brydon, in his letter to me, as being kind and accurate in his treatment of the early Virginia clergy, recites several incidents in his History of Virginia. One is that two clergymen, professors at William and Mary, got drunk and led the college boys in a fight with the town boys and were dismissed. This was in 1760. The same year, Mr. Tyler tells us, the clergyman acting as commissary, or manager, for the college was indicted by the grand jury for drunkenness and defended by Governor Fauquier, who said the poor man should be excused for drinking to excess, because he was driven to desperation by persons of his own cloth.

"NOBODY'S DOG"---THE REPUDIATION OF RESPONSIBILITY

By Arnold N. Hoath

THERE had been an incident and ac rowd had gathered about something lying on the road. It was the blood-stained body of a common mongrel dog, fatally injured by a passing motor car. Few had any interest apart from curiosity in the little creature whose life-strength was ebbing away with every heart-beat. Few had any compassion for the little suffering body, distorted, broken. "Whose dog is it?" The questioning murmur ran around the crowd. And from the rear came a gruff voice of some unthinking man, "'Taint nobody's dog".

"Nobody's dog"—it was the cry of the repudiation of responsibility. Nobody need fix the responsibility for the accident, nobody need care for the wounds of the suffering animal, nobody need see that the misshapen bones, when life had sped, should be decently interred—it was nobody's dog and it mattered not what happened to it.

As the repudiation of responsibility is the twin brother of thoughtlessness, it is one of the most treacherous and dangerous companions that life can give us. "Father, give me the portion that falleth to me," for the young man desires to leave his father's house, to admit of no further responsibility within it—to repudiate all obligations to his aging father and mother. "There be many servants nowadays that break away every man from his master." Although David had protected Nabal's flocks and herds from plundering marauders and raiders, yet Nabal repudiated all responsibility for sharing in the maintenance of David's men. The rejection of responsibility is the rejection of manhood or womanhood, and the repudiation of responsibility is the repudiation of character, as Coleridge, the most piteous figure in English literature, wrecked through his love of ease and his refusal to acknowledge responsibility, bears witness. And the tragedy of the professional tramp and hobo is that he is content with irresponsibility.

But of those who at heart are restless tramps with no loyalty to the civilization that the past has given to them, and acknowledging no responsibility to uphold or to improve that civilization or in any way to contribute to it, there are few who dare carry out their recklessness and carelessness to a logical conclusion. Among thoughtful men and women there are only a few who will repudiate their responsibility to their nation when that nation is in distress and needs their assistance; only a few who will deny their duty to share in the selection of a sound government and to labor for the passing and observance of just laws.

Yet within Church circles there are always many who repudiate all responsibility, and within any community there are numbers of Church tramps and spiritual hoboes. But when our young people rightly understand the Church and her challenge, they will realize that the Church offers just the inspiration for chivalrous service that has always appealed to them.

Jesus was a young man. The disciples whom He gathered about Him were largely men of an age similar to His own. His little group of idealists possessed the ardour, the eagerness, the originality of youth. And to these young men of His own day, Jesus entrusted the organizing of His Church. To youth, as to all ages, Jesus gives the opportunity to accept responsibility in the greatest adventure upon which any one has ever entered—the adventure of letting the life of God flow through His life and the adventure of finding happiness in chivalrous service. For young people or for any one to refuse to accept this responsibility that Jesus offers them, and to draw back from entering upon this adventure of the Christian life is for them to turn their back on life and to say "No" to the offer of the comradeship of the Immortal Christ.

When we refuse to accept the responsibility that is rightly ours we do not destroy the force of its obligations; all we do is to play the traitor and as far as we are concerned we leave the responsibility stranded. Closing our eyes when we look at it will not make the responsibility vanish. The responsibility remains whether we stoop to bear it or whether we pass it by unheedingly.

As part of our spiritual responsibility two obligations towards the Church rest upon each one of us. These two obligations are concerned with our worship of God. First, our worship of God by our contributions towards God's work as it is carried on in our own Church and among the missionary neids of the world; second, our worship of God by the energy and ability which we throw into the necessary work of the Church. Our responsibility to God is that we should contribute toward the work of the Church. (1) by our earnings, (2) by our own active participation in the furthering of some Church aim and purpose.

(1) It is not necessary to say more than a word about our responsibility in supporting the work of our Church through our gifts. It is God's work we are supporting and it is the worship of God in which we are taking part. To give to God is to worship Him, to pay not merely the tribute of our wealth, but the tribute of our love also. Our responsibility to worship God by our gifts we may fail to acknowledge, but the responsibility is ours, nevertheless, and we are cheating God—"God who gave us life and the vast universe for our home, the sky, the winds, and the clouds, the hills, the trees, and the grass under our feet"—we are cheating God, not man, when we make our offerings meagre.

But God's work is not limited to the work that our own local Church is carrying on. God's work is a world-wide work. The Kingdom of God is to extend over the earth. Therefore, every Christian must have the missionary's spirit of love for all mankind, and an ardent eagerness to spread the Gospel throughout all heathen countries. Some of us look at the vast opportunity confronting the Christian Church in the Mission Field with the same vision with which the small boy saw the baseball game when he looked at it through a knot hole in the fence. It is not a perfect vision. Lacking the vision that sees in a broad and honest sweep we sometimes fail to contribute regularly to the Church's missionary work, and by this we are repudiating our responsibility as Christians and are refusing to take up the obligations that are truly ours. Were we to understand our own religion there would not be a member of any Christian congregation who would not be contributing every week to the Missionary activities of his Church. People who are interested in the spread of Christian principles and in the inspiration that comes from loyalty to the spirit of Christ are not the kind to repudiate their responsibilities and he who fails to give his weekly offering to missions has simply failed to think the matter through.

(2) Every Christian has a responsibility also toward the active work of the Church. He has a responsibility to attend the corporate worship of God—and nothing but serious sickness can lessen that responsibility. "There is a little plant called reverence in my heart," said Dr. Holmes, "that I dearly love to have watered once a week." All our nobler feelings are strengthened by our Sunday worship. We have been torn by the struggles and temptations of the week and our ideals have become sadly battered, and so on Sunday we bow our head in the presence of God and we test our character by the life and ideals of Jesus our Lord. All our strange longings to be great in heart and mind are intensified by the inspiration of our fellowship with God. The hour of Sunday worship is a protest against the little meagre life, the selfish and short-sighted life. Therefore, we cannot afford to miss our Sunday worship. We can afford to miss an opportunity to earn some extra wages, we can afford to miss an automobile trip in the country, we can afford to miss the presentation of the world's famous moving picture, but we cannot afford to let our faith starve, or our ideals smother. Our responsibility to attend the weekly worship of God is not only an obligation to be loyal to God, it is also an obligation to be loyal to the very best of our own nature.

No one comes to church because he likes the clergyman and members of the congregation, nor does any one absent himself from the worship of God because he does not like the clergyman or some members of the congregation. A rector had occasion to differ from a member of his congregation on some matter of policy, and so emphatic had each been in the presentation of his opinion that the clergyman was afraid he had offended the parishioner. But the following Sunday the old lady was in her pew as usual. After the service the clergyman spoke to her as she was leaving. "Mrs. X, I am glad to see you here. I somehow thought you might not come." "My dear man," replied the lady, "my quarrel is with you and not with the Lord." The worship of God is the reason for our gathering together on Sunday—and our personal opinions of other members of the congregation, or our affection or lack of affection for the officiating clergyman, is not a matter for consideration. Our responsibility is to God and to God alone.

Besides our responsibility for the upkeep of God's work and for the maintenance of the beauty and reverence of His worship, every Christian has a responsibility to some organization within the church. One person may elect to spend all her thought and energy in Church School work, another may become a faithful worker in one of the women's organizations; one may spend his time in promoting the welfare of the Men's Club or the Boy Scouts, and still another may take his place in the great work of the church choir. The responsibility for service in some church organization calls loudly and we cannot help but hear unless we muffle up our ears.

The repudiation of responsibility: "Nobody's Dog," said the rough, unthinking man. But a small boy pushed his way through the crowd and with a sob stooped to pat the dying mongrel. It was somebody's dog, after all! And it usually is. If we refuse to carry the responsibility that is ours, some work will be hindered, some heart will be heavy, and the progress of the Kingdom of God will be retarded.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

MORNING VI.

O GOD, our Father, the Fountain of all wisdom and goodness, the Giver of life, of health, and of safety; our Creator, Preserver and continual Benefactor; we humbly thank Thee for Thy tender care during the past night. Thou hast been the dwelling place of our fathers from one generation to another: Thou hast sustained us in infancy and guided us in youth: Thou hast delivered us from many and great temptations and dangers: Thy loving kindness has been always about us. Thou hast been our Sun and Shield, and Thy mercies have been more than we can number or express. Consecrate, we beseech Thee, our bodies, souls, and spirits to Thyself and let our whole lives show forth Thy praise.

O Lord, Thou hast searched us and known us, all our most secret thoughts and desires are open to Thee. Look on us in tender mercy and pity. Forgive us all that we have thought or said or done amiss. Create and make in us new and contrite hearts. Let our eyes look to Thee and our hearts wait on Thee. Guard the earliest movements of our souls. Set a watch over our tongues and keep the doors of our lips. Grant that by Thy blessed Spirit we may think and desire and do only such things as shall please Thee, and may we be kept pure and blameless to the coming of our Lord. Save us from blindness and hardness of heart, from self-conceit, ignorance, and error, from idle words and vain conversation, from worldly desires and covetous practices. Let the fear of Thee keep us from every kind of evil, and the love of Thee move us to all good deeds and holy conversation. Let us seek Thy face in righteousness. By Thy presence, enlighten our darkness: refresh us and cheer us in our weariness: visit and comfort us in our desolation: and be Thou always our Light and Life and Peace. In our adversity let us look to Thee for help. In our prosperity let us give Thee all the praise.

Be with us in all the duties and business of this day. Make us to be just, sincere and faithful. Make us watchful, wise, prudent and discreet. Make us earnest, diligent, and untiring and fearless. Make us to be gentle, patient, pitiful and courteous. Let us do all things under Thine eye, and in the light of Eternity. Let us live and move and have our being consciously in Thee, that in all our works begun, continued and ended in Thee, we may glorify Thee, the ever-living, true, and faithful God.

Have pity on all who are in trouble, and comfort and relieve them.

Bless all who are laboring in behalf of Thy Kingdom, to relieve suffering, to repress crime, to diffuse the knowledge of Thy truth, and establish Thy Kingdom in the earth.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Our Father, etc.

What Happens at Calvary Church in the City of New York

By A. S. R., a Member of the Staff.

Each Sunday night in summer the cross over the door of Calvary is lighted an hour before the evening service begins. Young men carrying signs that read, "The Church Has Come to You." Will you come to the Church"? "Jesus Christ changes Lives" stand in the doorway ready to fall in line when the clergy and a robed volunteer choir march out to Madison Square. A trumpeter, playing familiar hymns and the clergy reckless of their voices, lead the singing.

Friendly police hold up traffic on Twenty-third Street, holiday-makers returning home, hang out of motors to see what it is all about. Everywhere at the sight of the great wooden cross, men uncover. Working women with little children clinging to their skirts, stand aside and let us pass. A drunk, swaying on unsteady legs, made the sign of the cross as he tried to keep up with the procession.

At Twenty-fourth Street, in an open place under the trees, a young Jew, converted three years ago, climbed up onto a glorified soap box and, flapping his arms, covered by the vestments of a lay reader, grinned at the crowd.

"Come up nearer, you fellows," he cried, "or you won't be able to hear us."

The shifting group closed in; about two hundred of them.

The service in the Square is for the men on the benches and the passers-by, but on this special Sunday I saw standing in the crowd the Bishop of Nebraska, the acting rector of a fashionable New York parish, several young bloods, and what a bum called "a couple o' gents in dog collars". There was also a woman of wealth who had come all the way from Tennessee. She had come to find out what kind of people we were, who so openly rejoiced in what God had done for us that we were willing to tell the world from a soap box. There were some pretty girls with their "boys".

During the singing of "Jesus Calls Us", two men shared a leaflet on which the words of the hymn were printed. One was an old fellow with broken shoes and no hat, the other a bronzed young giant. They sang so lustily, with such abandon, that I wondered when last they had sung that tune, so evidently familiar to them.

The testimonies came from as widely, diversified a group as the listeners. A man who had spent twenty-seven years in prison, told of how he had wandered into Calvary Mission, hoping for a warm place to rest. He found Christ there.

A Princeton man told of a sense of inferiority that had driven him to the verge of suicide, and how "Sam", for so the rector, the Rev. S. M. Shoemaker, Jr., is called by members of the fellowship, had helped him to find both joy and direction for his life. A stenographer told how she had been a petty thief, undiscovered all the twenty-five years of her life, and how out of her small earnings she was making restitution. Only through confession and restitution had she been able to reach the saving power of Christ. Mr. Shoemaker was the last speaker. A reporter for the New York Herald-Tribune quotes him in the news columns on August 20:

"We fix flats," he said, "or rather Christ fixes them. If any of you are flat tires running on your own rims, come with us and Christ and let us help you pray."

Then an old saint of God who years ago was Mr. Shoemaker's rector at home in Maryland, gave the benediction.

The crowd usually is very quiet, but this night a woman talked loudly with great scorn to a companion about "these religious speakers; they are all kookoo". Finally a policeman turned to her and said, "Madame, if you want to listen, listen. But if you don't, move on, for other people do".

The light was beginning to fade as the clergy and choir formed again to march back to the evening service. That night, among others, about fifty men from the square fell in, and singing with us marched through the city streets, then up the steps and through the wide-open doors of Calvary. As the volunteer choir fell in behind the regular choir, and filled the stalls in the chancel, the crowd slipped into the pews among the members of the regular congregation. Nobody was too badly dressed or too unfamiliar with the service to feel at home. The pages where the psalms, prayers and creed are to be found are always given out, and the hymns are familiar ones.

At nine o'clock on the church porch, the staff made friends with those who were strangers. An hour later I saw sitting in widely separated pews, the rector talking to a boy, a lay member of the staff talking to an out-of-town clergyman, and a middle-aged woman in prayer with a girl on whose face the lines of defeat and despair were fading out.

There is nothing vague or theoretical preached at Calvary. Just the plain fact, that only in complete surrender to the will of God can the power of Christ to take away sin be found. This fact goes home to young and old, bum and fine lady alike. This is why Calvary goes out to those who do not come to her.

JUDGES.

The Name given to this short, sad history of Israel for three hundred years, is like the words "But God" in Eph. 2:5, which speak of the marvelous intervention of God's grace in man's behalf.

Subject.

The theme of this book is the failure of Israel to possess the promised land, resulting in oppression by unsubdued enemies, and the faithfulness of God's grace in raising up deliverers to give Israel victory, whenever they confessed their sins and cried to Him.

I. Chs. 1-2. Israel's failure to fully possess their inheritance by not driving out their enemies who led them into the sin of idolatry.

1. Ch. 1:1-26. The presence and power of the Lord manifest in behalf of those who sought to possess their inheritance.

2. Ch. 1:27-36. Indifference and failure of many tribes of Israel to drive out their enemies.

3. Ch. 2:1-10. Rebuked by the Lord's messenger, the people of Israel wept and worshipped, but did not teach their children to know the Lord nor His works.

4. Ch. 2:11 to 3:4. Sold into the hands of their enemies because of idolatry, when delivered by God's grace, Israel heeded not the Lord, but went a whoring after other gods, therefore He left some of the nations to prove them.

II. Chs. 3:5 to 16:31. Seven periods of captivity and oppression of Israel by their enemies, and the seven Judges raised up to deliver them.

1. Ch. 3:5-31. Israel's intermarriage with Canaanites, and oppression by Mesopotamians, Moabites and Philistines, and deliverance by the hand of the Judges, Othniel, Ehud and Shamgar.

2. Chs. 4-5. Mighty oppression of Israel by the king of Canaan, and faith's great victory under the leadership of Deborah and Barak.

3. Chs. 6-8. Oppression of Israel by the Midianites, and the Lord's wonderful deliverance through Gideon, the man who judged his own house first.

4. Chs. 9-10. The frightful misrule and sure retribution of Gideon's son Abimelech.

5. Chs. 11-12. Deliverance of Israel from the oppression of the Ammonites by the hands of Jepthah.

6. Chs. 13-16. Oppression of Israel by the Philistines and miraculous deliverances through Samson.

III. Chs. 17-21. Israel's fearful depravity the result of "every man doing what was right in his own eyes".

1. Chs. 17-18. The idolatry of Micah and the Danites.

2. Chs. 19-21. The shameful treatment of a Levite resulting in the destruction of almost the whole tribe of Benjamin.

STAR ATTRACTION OF RADIO PULPIT.

Mr. Editor:

From the Free Press it is noted that Dr. S. Parkes Cadman delivered an address at Sexton's River, Vermont, on October 31. Nothing is said of the nature of his address but I believe it a safe venture to state that it was along some semi-religious lines and I, therefore, take the liberty of intruding upon your time to present some comments upon this decorated preacher who has been chosen as the star attraction of the radio pulpit of this country.

Some one has said that knowledge is a stewardship. To this might be added a paragraph from this week's issue of The Watchman-Examiner, which says: "Controversy for the better establishment of the truth is not only a privilege but a duty." It may remain to be proved that I have the spiritual interests of the Baptist young people at heart when I take time to write this letter, but it will require no searching to learn that I can always be found on the side that stands for the truth of the Word of God and that no one has ever found me traveling with those who have to apologize for the Bible.

As Sexton's River, in days gone by, stood for the faith once delivered, I assume that one of its principles today is that its religious policy coincides with that of the Baptist denomination which, in this age of liberalism on one side and fundamentalism on the other, may be determined by the trustees of the institution or the personnel of the faculty. As one who is much interested in the spiritual values of Vermont as well as one who follows with considerable interest the general religious trend I do not hesitate to say that there is no more dangerous purveyor of religion before the American public today than Dr. Cadman. His popularity is attested by his being selected for the radio pulpit above referred to. His liberality is attested by the fact that the committee which selected him is composed of semi-Protestants, Catholics and Jews.

The Daily Counsel column which he runs in the Herald Tribune is, from the standpoint of one who believes in the Bible, about thirty per cent correct. As illustrating this today's Tribune carries one of his replies which tends to prove that the sayings of our Lord in three passages in Matthew's Gospel, are spurious. The inquirer is asking if Christ taught there was a hell. That Dr. Cadman does not believe in a place called "hell" is not only seen in this reply, but a recent issue of a Brooklyn paper in reporting the address which Dr. Cadman gave at the laying of the cornerstone of the Temple Methodist Church gives prominent mention that hell and damnation are myths. Later on in the same article it further stated, "following his statement that he did not believe in a real hell, he said he did believe in a heaven". Here is the characteristic attitude of the modern preacher christened by Bunyan as Mr. Facing Both Ways. An explanation of his opinion may be found in a reply which appeared in the Tribune of October 5, 1927, in which he says in reply to a question about authority for prayers for the dead. "The fate of those who have not accepted Christianity before bodily death occurred is not at human disposition, but in the keeping of the all-knowing and all-loving Father. I, for one, cannot conceive His love as defeated in its final purpose. The dead are not beyond the influence of the prayers of the churches. God never yet struck down an upraised hand imploring help, whether in time or eternity." Here then may be found the teachings of that variegated doctrine of the Second Chance commonly known as Russellism. Dr. Cadman is the spokesman for an ever increasing group of preachers whose modesty is tested by their disposition of any Biblical truth which does not conform with their own ideas. In such cases they little realize that it is the infallible Word of God which is testing them or that it is the unbreakable anvil upon which they are shattering their puny blows of infidelity.

But Dr. Cadman's modesty is not only tested by his disagreement with our Lord, with all that is taught in the true meaning of Calvary, but his acceptance of the Old Testament's teaching is reduced to that of the rationalist of today. In one of his recent "counsels" he ventured some enlightening information concerning the age of Methuselah, saying that it was obvious that the method recorded in the Bible referred to lunar months, thus making the age of this patriarch seventy-five years instead of what the Bible records as nine hundred and sixty-nine years. The Moody Bible Institute, in commenting on this, sent a shaft winging to its mark when it commented on this policy of computing the ages of the patriarchs and showed that Abraham was only seven years of age when he begat Isaac, if Dr. Cadman's reply is trustworthy. This learned divine is entitled to some praise for having solved the problem of the phenomenal increase of the children of Israel in Egypt to the satisfaction of the rationalist.

Dr. Cadman's modesty again manifests itself in taking issue with the Apostle Paul. In the Tribune for October 19, 1928, an inquiry is made concerning man's downfall. Here is the reply: "What do you mean by 'man's downfall'? If the phrase is intended to indicate a catastrophe reducing him at a stroke from moral perfection to degradation, it is misleading." Here is the logical answer of the evolutionist, but the Old Book, upon which I base my hopes for eternity, says that God created man in His image and through sin he fell from that lofty stage. Paul further affirms, Rom. 5:12, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."

Lest I shall be charged with being biased in my opinion of this noted divine, may I direct your attention to a recent book entitled, "Pastors, Politicians, Pacifists", which deals with the Federal Council of Churches, which heads up in Dr. Cadman. On page 34 I read the following: "In the language of a clergyman, Dr. Cadman outlines a platform for a clerical political party. Evidently he thinks that this country is ready for the creation of a new third party by himself and the group that controls the Federal Council. Nothing in the realm of secular affairs and politics is excluded in his program. Under his plan the Federal Council would not only take charge of the nation's foreign relations and write treaties, but the administrative council of his organization would prepare tax, tariff, river and harbor, good roads and public building bills. Eventually they would plunge into state politics and ward politics." In contrast with the doctrine of the separation of Church and State as our constitutional privilege, hear this utterance by this renowned seer: "There is a new consciousness abroad that Protestantism has too easily surrendered to the State in the decision as to great questions which, while in one sense political, are at bottom moral", thus advocating for Protestantism what it has condemned in Catholicism.

The Lutheran Church of America says, amongst a number of significant things about the Federal Council: "The Federal Council shows strong tendencies, if not clear purpose, to foster and promote certain things which involve unfaithfulness and compromise in full testimony to the truth. These two things we name: (1) Unionism, and (2) the Community Church." Most significant is this statement of a Methodist pastor: "While they claim to represent the churches, let me say positively that they do not speak for all the churches nor for all the preachers. My judgment is that many of their utterances border upon sedition." Another pastor says: "There are plenty of red-blooded Americans among the membership of the churches who are being grossly misrepresented by this organization." The force of this charge is understood when it is noted that the Federal Council, in their numerous hearings before Congressional Committees, have never supported one measure of preparedness for the army, navy or reserves aside from chaplains. In the light of the foregoing, which is only a fraction of what can be produced, it is inconceivable to me, if patriotism and Christianity are considered, how Dr. Cadman could be selected to address a Christian school.

BETHANY HOME.

Mr. Editor:

Our needs are again pressing and the winter is approaching. Some of our friends helped us through the summer and the farm is becoming more of a support.

Please remember us in the Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons. Our chief need is money for current expenses.

The home is for unfortunate children of both sexes and is non-sectarian. The children are comfortable and happy and go to public school at Bon Air. There is no waste for any sort of luxuries.

Faithfully,

Thomas Semmes,
Vice-President.

COLONIAL CLERGY.

Mr. Editor:

* * * * * * *

Mr. Alfred Williams in his article "Earliest of Church Assemblages in America", in your issue of November 3, presents a picture of the Established Church in Virginia at the time of the Revolution which actual records prove to be seriously incorrect. May I call attention to some of his statements?

Speaking (perhaps) of America as a whole in his first paragraph Mr. Williams says "A large proportion of the clergy and lay membership held to the side of the Crown", "perhaps the majority of the clergy returned to England". "A number of those who joined with the Americans found themselves without congregations."

It has been estimated that there were about three hundred parishes of the Church of England in the Thirteen Colonies, about one hundred of these were in the Colonies north of Maryland, the rest were in the five Colonies—Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina and Georgia. About ninety-five were in Virginia. I am not sufficiently familiar with the Church life of the Northern Colonies to be able to express an opinion, but the above statements are absolutely incorrect as regards the clergy and laymen in Virginia.

In the next paragraph Mr. Williams says "The Church there (i. e. in Maryland) was in better condition toward the close of the war (Revolution) than it was in Virginia where the losses by defection to the Royal Cause had been very heavy and many church buildings were destroyed or dismantled". We have in our Diocesan Library the names of all the clergy in Virginia at that time as published in the Virginia Alamanac of 1774. There were something over ninety in 1776. We have the dates based on original records as to the attitude of seventy-four of these ministers towards the Revolution. There were just exactly nine Tories in the lot; sixty-five were loyal to the American Cause. Of the remaining eighteen or twenty of whom we have as yet no record, my conviction is that most, if not all, of them were loyal to the American Cause. There would almost certainly have been some record made of any who were actively sympathetic with the Royal Cause. Of the nine Tories several returned to England, one was sentenced to five years in prison for giving aid and comfort to the enemy and the remainder stayed in their parishes. These facts simply explode the statement of "heavy losses by defection to the Royal Cause".

Again, in a later paragraph Mr. Williams writes: "In Virginia, where in 1776 there were ninety-five parishes, one hundred and sixty-four churches and chapels, and ninety-one ordained clergymen, in 1782, the end of the Revolutionary war, found twenty-three parishes extinguished, thirty-four without rectors, but twenty-eight clergymen surviving." The acual facts are as follows:

No parishes were extinguished in 1782. The State Legislature established at least two new parishes during the Revolution: Fluvanna in 1777 and St. Asaph's in Caroline County in 1779. The vestries had civil duties as well as ecclesiastical and they performed these duties until the State, about 1784, transferred these civil duties to new officers called overseers of the poor. I have no idea that any vestry was extinguished as long as it had civil duties to perform.

Instead of there being only twenty-eight clergymen surviving, when the Convention of 1785 was held, there were thirty-six clergymen present, sixty-three parishes were represented by lay delegates and seven more were represented by their ministers alone—a total of seventy parishes represented out of the ninety-eight in existence. The Virginia Almanac of 1787 publishes a list of ninety-eight parishes in Virginia and gives the names of the ministers still in the parishes. There were fifty clergymen reported as rectors of churches in that list, and I know from other records of at least four more who were still in active pastoral work, a total of fifty-four. When it is remembered that the taxes for the support of the clergy were remitted after 1776 and no salary could be assured any minister after January 1, 1777; that no new ministers could be ordained for America after 1776; that inevitably in ten years to 1786 a number of clergy died; the fact that there were fifty-four clergymen still at work in their parishes in 1787 with no assured salary, but earning their living as best they could, is exceedingly strong testimony to their loyalty and devotion to their Church. All honor to them.

Every statement I have made can be proven from records in our Diocesan Library. And these records are available to any one who desires to use them.

Richmond, Va., November 12, 1928.

Mr. Alfred B. Williams.

My Dear Mr. Williams: I have received this morning a carbon copy of the note you say you intend to print above your next article in The Southern Churchman. I hereby very promptly and emphatically accept your challenge to furnish the proof that the great body of Virginia clergy were loyal to the Revolution. I send it herewith, and as you have made this challenge publicly I demand that you carry out your promise and have this published in The Southern Churchman. My statements as to the numbers of clergy resident in parishes in 1787 were based on a report published in the Virginia Almanac for that year, a copy of which is in the Congressional Library.

This list of the attitude of the clergy toward the Revolution was compiled about 1907 by the Rev. Joseph B. Dunn, some time Historiographer of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, and was compiled from original sources many of which are in the Congressional Library. You will note that I have added to it two or three names of men concerning whom authentic information has come to light since 1907.

I acknowledge with becoming meekness the fact of enthusiastic loyalty to our Church and to the State of Virginia. I think you will find that my statements as Historiographer are based upon information, and not enthusiasm.

I note the historians you mention, Bishop White who died in 1835, Drs. Tiffany and McConnell and Mr. Lodge, and Dr. Lyon G. Tyler. With the exception of Dr. Tyler, who has been a lifelong student of Virginia history, the others were men from outside the state who necessarily had to take the information about the Church in Virginia from sources available to them, and not from direct information. It was in the sources available to them that the misstatements occurred of any general defection of the clergy in Virginia to the Royalist Cause, and they of course, could not be blamed for using the best information that they had. Certainly I think that this list I send you proves that any statement as to the general disloyalty to the American Cause of the Virginia clergy when first made must have been made through ignorance or an intentional desire to hurt the reputation of the Established Church.

You will find, I am sure, as I have, that Dr. Tyler's treatment of the Virginia Church and the clergy is sympathetic, and he protests against the general impression that has been given of the character of the Virginia clergy.

You will note, however, that all these men whom you mention except Dr. Tyler wrote their histories before the year 1900. The evidence upon which I have based by statements has come to light in very large measure since that year, and consequently was not available to these historians.

In view of this fact I think that any quotations you make from these historians as to the loyalty of the Revolutionary Virginia clergy will be discounted by the fact that the evidence showing their loyalty was not known in their day.

Instead of confining your studies mainly to the historians who wrote from one to three generations ago, may I suggest that you read also Colonial Churches in Virginia, published by The Southern Churchman in 1907 and 1908 and The Colonial Church in Virginia, by the Rev. E. L. Goodwin, D. D., published in 1927. These two writers have the advantage of using information that has been discovered since the former histories were written.

Very sincerely yours,

G. MacLaren Brydon,
Historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia.

Thanksgiving Day Proclamation

"By the President of the United States.

"A Proclamation.

"The season again approaches when it has been the custom for generations to set apart a day of Thanksgiving for the blessings which the Giver of all good and perfect gifts has bestowed upon us during the year. It is most becoming that we should do this for the goodness and mercy of God which has followed us through the year, deserve our grateful recognition and acknowledgment.

"Through His Divine favor peace and tranquility have reigned throughout the land. He has protected our country as a whole against pestilence and disaster and has directed us in the way of national prosperity.

"Our fields have been abundantly productive; our industries have flourished; our commerce has increased; wages have been lucrative and contentment has followed the undisturbed pursuit of honest toil.

"We have prospered in material things, so have we also grown and expanded in things spiritual. Through divine inspiration we have enlarged our charities and our missions; we have been imbued with high ideals which have operated for the benefit of the world and the promotion of the brotherhood of man through peace and good will.

"Wherefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, do hereby set apart Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer and I recommend that on that day the people shall cease from their daily work and in their homes and in their accustomed places of worship devoutly give thanks to the Almighty for the many and great blessings they have received and seek His guidance that they may deserve a continuance of His favor.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the United States.

"Done at the City of Washington this twenty-third day of October in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and fifty-third.

Book Reviews

AN ITALIAN HOLIDAY: Paul Wilstach. The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis, Indiana. Price, $4.00.

Scores of books have been written about Italy, but never before one like "An Italian Holiday", by Paul Wilstach.

Mr. Wilstach has already shown himself a human and delightful historian in his Potomac Landings, Jefferson and Monticello, Mount Vernon and Patriots Off Their Pedestals, and a sprightly traveller in his Islands of the Mediterranean and Along the Pyrenees.

Nothing can be said to be really unknown about Italy, else An Italian Holiday might well have been called Unknown Italy. It takes the reader all over the fascinating peninsula from the Calabrian toe, where Italy was once Greece, the length of the geographical boot to the mysterious new Italy beyond the Adriatic.

There is no lingering in stuffy old churches and art-galleries. That has all been done before. It is life and people that interest this spontaneous writer, the odd and unusual and amusing. He has found novelties everywhere, traditions, anecdotes, diverting characters, and odd customs.

He gives us Naples and its Bay and Vesuvius; he gives Venice and its canals and gondolas. But he gives Naples in terms of a hunt he made to find the haunts of the great tenor, Caruso; the house where he was born in the street of "Saint Johnny of the Eight Corns", where he studied and sang before he became famous, and the extraordinary first-night at the San Carlo which caused him at the beginning of his career to swear that he would never again sing for his beloved Naples, which he never did.

Wilstach hunted Venice over for something the guidebooks had not mentioned. He found it, a universal experience, but different in Venice from anywhere else in the whole world; a Venetian funeral, where the hearses are gondolas, which for the rich are superb barges, sixty feet long, decked in black velvet and silver bullion, with a bow-sprit of the Angel of the Resurrection and at the stern a huge silver statue of Father time, scythe and all; a lofty catafalque in the center, and many gondoliers at the sweeps.

As one such cortege moved down the canal, a poor but philosophic woman, through a reticent smile, gave the author this bit of local wisdom: "We may be too poor to afford a gondola while we live, but there is not one of us but eventually has his gondola ride, at least once."

The chapter on The Golden Powder of Parma gives a delectable account of how the Italians make Parmesan Cheese, and that called The Town of a Hundred Horizons turns out to be Asolo where Robert Browning first wrote poetry and the great actress, Eleanor Duse, at last found peace.

There is a whole chapter devoted to Taranto, where the tarantella comes from. But what most amused this life-loving writer there was the irresistible humors of a provincial operatic performance; and one is left laughing, but wondering whether the gyrations of the musical director, the whisperings of the prompter, the artists or the audience, were the more diverting.

In a remote valley, near the Adriatic, he found miles and miles of trulli, the most unusual houses imaginable. They are the conical houses of Puglie, houses built throughout of stone, but without a scrap of mortar, and every roof a high cone, and a high cone for every room in each house, so that there one can, from the outside, by counting the cones on a single house, tell exactly how many rooms it contains!

"Seen alone each trullo, with its squat side-walls and its roof one or several cones, presents a sufficiently curious appearance, as if it were a cairn, a prehistoric tomb, or a fabulously gigantic bee-hive. Here, however, one does not find the isolated specimen. They are everywhere about, as far as the eye can see. In the little commune of Martina Franca there are nearly two thousand trulli.

"Seen in the bewildering multitude of this strange landscape, a cone or a group of cones every few hundred feet in all directions, for miles and miles, the effect is without parallel. It suggests not only a world of queer tombs or giant bee-hives, but a world of petrified haystacks or a vast camp of ancient Roman tents, abandoned and turned to stone. The effect is elfin and unreal, and indescribably fascinating, some fantasy of an illustrator of a fairy story come to life."

Nothing could be more alive or alluring than his description of a market day at Rimini, the city of Paolo and Francesca; his visit to San Marino, the smallest republic in the world and its capital 2,500 feet above the sea, where the proud native assured the writer: "Other countries may be larger than mine, but no other is so near heaven"; the rugged country where Mussolini was a boy, with many anecdotes of those obscure days; a festival in the Alban Hills near Rome, where a whole hill-side street was painted in four hours, and the colors used were the petals of fresh flowers, and called by the pious natives, The Pathway of Our Lord; a holiday among the medieval hill towns of Tuscany and Umbria, and a sortie out of Milan to the life-long home of the great operatic composer, Verdi, with anecdotes of how and where he wrote Rigoletta, Il Trovatore, Aida, La Traviata, Othello and all his matchless masterpieces.

Such are but samples of a holiday which makes the reader feel that he has been traveling with a wise, experienced and yet light-hearted companion, who knows those secrets of Italy which tourists would prefer to know, if only they knew where and how to find them.

Such a book as An Italian Holiday shows the new way to make travel interesting, for its humanism and reality give one the color and charm, the personality and humor, as well as the art and history of one of the most alluring countries in the world.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by the Rev. Frank Nuttall Cockcroft, of Holy Innocents' Mission, Lahaina, Hawaii:

> "Keep innocency, and take heed unto the thing that is right: for that shall bring a man peace at the last" (Psalm 37:38, Prayer Book Version).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

FOURTH ANNUAL CATHOLIC CONFERENCE

Gerald V. Barry.

The Fourth Annual Catholic Congress of the Episcopal Church was held at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York City, November 13-15. Approximately 2,000 clergy and laity attended from all parts of the country.

The general subject of the Congress was "The Catholic Life". The object, as expressed by the Chairman of the Congress Committee, the Rev. Shirley C. Hughson, O. H. C., was to increase in every member of the Church a love for Jesus Christ and a desire to serve Him more fully.

The Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of New York, opened the gathering with a brief address of welcome, in which he stressed the necessity of recognizing the presence in the world of a great longing for a deeper and more personal expression of religion. This, he said, could never be satisfied by either preaching, organization or controversy—the individual consecration that the Catholic Church throughout the ages has sought for her children will alone suffice. Later, at the Dinner, Bishop Manning pointed to evidences of a growing harmony within the Church. "The old voices of partisan prejudices and controversial bitterness are still heard sometimes, but have little following. The Protestant-minded and the Catholic-minded can live and work together in Christian unity and love. The ideal of a great freedom for different views and practices within the Church—not as a compromise, but deliberately and on principle—is beginning to be recognized."

Throughout the whole Congress, true catholicity was urged again and again. In the opening paper, on the Creed, read by the Rev. Frank S. Gavin, Professor of Ecclesiastical History at the General Theological Seminary, and one of the Church's great scholars, he said: "How necessary it is for the Catholic (with a capital C), to recognize the need of being catholic (with a small c). Partisanship is impossible—he cannot be narrow or bigoted, nor deadened in understanding, nor slow in sympathy, nor reluctant in admiration, nor sluggish in interest." The words, "I believe" pre-eminently specify an affirmative belief; we are called upon, not so much to deny what others may believe as to engage upon our own positive adventure for God. In that undertaking convictions are necessary but prejudices are a heavy hindrance.

In the paper following Dr. Gavin's, the Rev. Richard H. Gushee, California, showed the need of a fitting ceremonial for the Church's chief act of worship, the Holy Eucharist. Though such a paper necessarily contained "dangerous material", it was presented in such a manner as to prevent any possible arousing of party bitterness.

The second day of the Congress was begun by a Corporate Communion in various churches throughout the city, and special Celebrations of the Holy Eucharist later at four of New York's leading churches, St. Paul's Chapel (Trinity Parish), St. Mary the Virgin, St. Ignatius, and Transfiguration ("Little Church Around the Corner"). At these the following Bishops pontificated: the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, New Jersey; the Rt. Rev. John C. White, Springfield; the Rt. Rev. Robert E. Campbell, Liberia; and the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, New York. The offering made at these services was divided between the Order of the Holy Cross, for work in Liberia, and the Community of St. Ann, for work in the Virgin Islands.

The afternoon session was opened by a paper on Prayer, by the Rev. George P. Christian, Orange, N. J. He pointed out that prayer was not a method of getting God to do things, but of changing lives to conform to His will. In addition to being a mental attitude—directed thought—it is a spiritual science, and like all sciences, calls for work far more than for sentiment.

The Rev. Frederick W. Fitts next spoke on Communion. It is, he said, "a communication of the actual Life of Jesus Christ by the Holy Spirit". Speaking of the Real Presence, he said that it was not carnal, but spiritual, and urged that little time be spent on the "how" of this Mystery, but much on the "what" and the "why". Proper preparation and thanksgiving were both shown to be necessary if one is to derive full spiritual benefit from the Sacrament.

At the Congress dinner, on Wednesday night, the speakers were Bishop Manning, Dr. Ralph Adams Cram, and the Hon. Robert L. Luce, former Justice of the Supreme Court. Judge Luce traced the damage done to the Episcopal Church by Puritanism and Calvinism, and urged a restoration to the fullest possible extent of the Divine Aids which have been the Church's heritage for nearly two thousand years. Dr. Cram, a world authority on Church Architecture, spoke of the development of that art in this country during the past fifty years. It was his judgment that, though fifty years ago the lowest level known in the history of man had been reached, today American structural beauty surpasses anything that has been produced in the world for the past three hundred years.

"The Catholic and His Neighbor", was the title of the first paper Thursday, by the Rev. Frederick O. Musser, Easton, Pa. The important distinction between holiness (a relationship toward God), and righteousness (a relationship toward man), was made. A Catholic was defined as "a human soul in whom Christ lives". This emphasized a remark made earlier by the Rt. Rev. Sheldon M. Griswold, Bishop Coadjutor of Chicago, Chairman of the Congress, to the effect that if the members of the gathering before him were Catholics, so were all the members of the Episcopal Church. The business of such, Fr. Musser continued, was to witness for Christ in such a manner that the romance, the poetry and the joy of their life will so appeal to others that they will want to draw near the Fire (Christ) from whence it came, and themselves be warmed.

In the next paper, the Rev. James M. Niblo, Norristown, Pa., the two predominant notes of the Congress were sounded forcefully and clearly. If, said the writer, depending less on ourselves and more on God, we maintain a lively missionary spirit and a true charity toward our fellows within as well as without the Church, we will bring to pass on earth the "Splendor of God"—a united Christendom.

At noon on Thursday about eight hundred made a Pilgrimage to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. This was conducted by the Bishop of New York, and was of a devotional as well as of an informational nature.

The afternoon papers were by the Rev. Granville M. Williams, SSJE, and the Chairman of the Congress, Bishop Griswold. The first dealt with penitence, and pointed out the great blessing that awaits those who make proper use of the Sacrament of Penance, and the responsibility for its continued use. In dealing with the Interior Life, Bishop Griswold advocated having a few simple and elastic rules for one's spiritual conduct, but laid stress on the necessity of being meticulous in their observance. Six considerations should be made in drawing up that very necessary thing, a Rule of Life: Penitence and Fasting, Eucharistic Worship and Intercession, Sacramental Communion and Meditation.

The evening session was opened by a paper on the Priesthood, by the Rev. Robert J. Murphy. In it comment was made on the present situation regarding candidates for Holy Orders, and valuable suggestions were made regarding the sacred ministry. The last speaker of the Congress was the Rev. William B. Stoskopf, Chicago, who urged the loyal support and emulation of the men and women who constitute the Religious Orders of our Church. Against the ideals of a luxury-seeking, extravagant and avaricious civilization, they hold the ideal of poverty. Against a lowered sex-morality, they advance chastity of body, mind and soul. Against a disregard for authority never before paralleled in this nation, they observe a simple obedience.

To say that the papers read were received with enthusiasm is to put it mildly—especially those portions advocating Christian Charity and Catholic sanity. Some idea may be had of the immediate effect of the Congress upon those who attended by the fact that when the Chairman pronounced the final Benediction, and dismissed the session, no one seemed to care to leave, but like Oliver Twist, wanted to stay for "more".

Day of the Golden Rule.

International Golden Rule Sunday, is December 2. It gives opportunity for an expression of practical religion, which James in his epistle defined as including remembering the fatherless in their affliction.

On this day we are urged to partake of a simple meal, such as the orphans in the Near East are grateful to have on each of the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year. Having in some measure entered into fellowship with their sufferings, we are asked to make an offering for their welfare, such as we would wish to have made for our children or loved ones if conditions were reversed.

Presiding Bishop Asks Prayers for National Council.

December 11-12, 1928.

The regular meeting of the National Council will be held in New York, December 12 and 13, with department meetings December 11.

May I again ask my brethren of the clergy and laity to remember us in their prayers—both public and private.

John Gardner Murray,
Presiding Bishop and President of the National Council.

New Bedford Celebrates Bunyan Tercentenary.

A community celebration of the Bunyan Tercentenary was held on Wednesday evening, November 14, at the City Library, New Bedford, Mass., under the auspices of the New Bedford Council of Churches and the New Bedford Bible Society. Dr. William H. Matthews, General Secretary of the American Tract Society, who made two visits to the Bedford Country, England, and has written many articles on Bunyan, was the speaker of the evening. Nearly all the ministers of New Bedford are preaching a series of sermons on Bunyan, Old Bedford, and "Pilgrim's Progress". New Bedford was named after "Bunyan Town".

Every Member Canvass.

The Every Member Canvass for this diocese is scheduled for Sunday, November 25. At this time each member of our Church will be visited by another member, and asked to contribute, so far as he or she is able, to the dioecesan budget for the Church's work, which for the coming year of 1929 has been placed at $196,050.

Detailed explanation of the budget was given by two clergymen and thirteen laymen in various churches throughout the diocese last Sunday. The apportionment allotted each parish for the General Work of the Church is determined on a percentage basis of the parish's "personal" or "overhead" expenses.

Mr. Gardner L. Boothe, of Alexandria, having given a clear, concise explanation of the budget to the congregation of St. James' Church, Richmond, said that at the present date St. James' Church has contributed more than any other church of the diocese for the work of the General Church for the year 1928.

The other speakers were: the Rev. George P. Mayo, the Rev. Dr. Cary Montague, and Messrs. R. Carter Beverley, E. J. Carruthers, R. W. Hilleary, James M. Lewis, Murray M. McGuire (chairman of the lay speakers' bureau), John B. Mordecai, Rosewell Page, Archibold G. Robertson, Alexander Sands, F. E. Saunders, Lewis C. Williams and W. A. Wright.

Though the amount of the budget may seem large, the board of apportionment has cut each item to the lowest figure possible to obtain good results. As it stands now only eight per cent of the amount asked for is allotted to foreign missions. If the budget apportionment is not pledged by the individual members of the Church each item will have to be cut down even further and this will mean that the work of the Church in each field will be seriously hampered.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Annual Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Maryland held their annual meeting in the Cathedral of the Incarnation on Wednesday, November 14. Bishop Murray celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by Bishop Helfenstein and Canon Arrowsmith. Immediately following the service luncheon was served in the parish house and the afternoon session was opened by Bishop Helfenstein, with very complimentary remarks of Mrs. Albert Sioussat, President of the Auxiliary. The Rt. Rev. Shirley H. Nichols, Missionary Bishop of Kyoto, Japan, made a splendid talk on the work in the schools and hospitals and he emphasized the necessity of having Japanese priests, thus building up the native ministry and strengthening the Church in Japan. Miss Katie Woo, principal of a Church School under the English Church in Hankow, China, also gave an enthusiastic account of her English training.

The Junior Daughters of the King held their Annual Convention in the Church of St. Michael and All Angels on Friday evening, November 16. Bishop Helfenstein made the address.

Beautiful Memorial.

Hot Springs, Va., November 11, 1928. —Today in the lovely little Church of St. Luke's, and following morning service, took place a simple ceremony, marked by dignity and beauty, in which two memorial windows in the chancel were set aside to the glory of God and to the memory of Mr. Lanier Dunn, long-time a resident of Hot Springs Valley, and one who was beloved and is well remembered throughout this section; and of his daughter, Lanier.

The two windows each contain four medallions illustrative of scenes from the life of Our Saviour; in the left window are represented the Adoration of the Magi, the Flight into Egypt, the presentation of the Christ Child in the Temple, and the young Saviour disputing with the learned doctors. Between the two upper medallions and the lower appears the text: "Jesus Increased in Wisdom and Stature and in Favor with God and Man." At the foot of the window is the simple inscription: "To the Glory of God and in loving memory of my father, Lanier Dunn, 1851-1915, and of my little sister, Lanier, 1893-1910."

The window to the right matches in harmony and loveliness the memorial first described. The four medallions therein represent respectively the Baptism, our Lord setting apart St. Andrew to be an Apostle, the Sermon on the Mount, and lastly, the Saviour, in perhaps one of the most moving scenes in His earthly life, calling the little children to Him. In the center of this window are the words: "In Him was Life and the Life was the Light of men." The inscription below reads: "To the Glory of God and in loving memory of my husband, Lanier Dunn, 1851-1915, and of my little daughter, Lanier, 1893-1910."

These exquisite memorials, as the inscriptions quoted suggest, are the gift respectively of Mrs. Lanier Dunn, and of her daughter, Mrs. George Cole Scott.

In the carrying out of this artistic work, which comes from the studio of Powell and Son of London, these conscientious artists-craftsmen have happily caught something of that spirit of "Sad Sincerity" in which their brethren of medieval days wrought so enduringly. When the morning light floods through these windows the effect is like the opening of a jewel-basket—lovely juxtapositions of delicate blues and greens and reds and purples and golds, flash on the eye, the whole being caught together in a conventionalized palm tracery, the effect of which is one of rich harmony and quiet beauty.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

Joint Meeting of Columbia and Greenville Convocations.

The clergy of the Columbia and Greenville Convocations, comprising the whole Diocese of Upper South Carolina, held a joint meeting at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, November 7 and 8. The first day was devoted to a retreat, conducted by the Rev. Malcolm S. Taylor, rector of Christ Church, Greenville. He took for his starting point the words, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand", and followed by speaking in his three addresses on Repentance, Faith, and Obedience. Mr. Taylor has a background of experience and of a ministry in his own parish which emphasizes the devotional life, which helped to make the retreat most helpful to the clergy of the diocese. The retreat closed with a celebration of the Holy Communion on the morning of November 8.

The remainder of the joint meeting was taken up with a consideration of the Church's Program. The conferences were led by the Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Columbia, who acted at the request of the Field Department of the National Church and the Bishop of the Diocese. He gave helpful information as to the work of the National Church and of the Diocese. He urged especially that emphasis be placed on the work to be done rather than on the amount of money to be raised.

At short business sessions the following elections resulted:

Columbia Convocation: Dean, Rev. L. N. Taylor, Columbia; Secretary-Treasurer, the Rev. A. E. Evison; members of the Executive Council of the Diocese, Hon. R. I. Manning and Mrs. J. R. Cain.

Greenville Convocation: Dean, the Rev. A. R. Mitchell, Greenville; Secretary-Treasurer, the Rev. R. C. Topping; members of the Executive Council of the Diocese, Dr. T. C. Stone and Mrs. Alexander Long.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. J. I. B. Larned Elected Suffragan Bishop.

The special convention called by Bishop Stires to elect a suffragan bishop met in the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, on Wednesday morning, November 14, at 9:30. The Bishop celebrated Holy Communion and was assisted by the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, S. T. D., as epistolar, and the Rev. St. Clair Hester, D. D., as gospeler. Dean Sargent, Canon Duffield and others were in the chancel. Bishop Stires preached from the text, "Led by the spirit of God". A very large proportion of the members of the convention received the Sacrament. The offering was given to the relief of the Florida and Porto Rico hurrican sufferers.

Upon the organization of the convention for the business of electing a suffragan bishop, the resolution which was passed at the May convention, requesting the Bishop to make a nomination to the convention, was introduced, but after a good deal of discussion was laid on the table. The Rev. J. I. B. Larned was then nominated by the Rev. Robert Rogers, Ph. D., and seconded by the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, S. T. D., and by several others. The Rev. Roy F. Duffield was nominated by the Rev. Frank M. Townley, D. D. Other nominations were made: The Rev. Wm. R. Watson, the Rev. Geo. E. Talmage, the Rev. Charles H. Ricker, the Rev. Jeffrey Jennings, D. D., the Rev. Frank M. Townley, D. D., and the Rev. Charles A. Brown. The two last mentioned immediately withdrew their names. The first ballot gave no majority in the clerical vote, but gave Mr. Larned a majority in the lay vote. A second ballot was taken at once, and the convention adjourned for luncheon. Upon reassembling the result of the second ballot was read, and a concurrent majority for Mr. Larned was disclosed. The election was promptly made unanimous. A committee was appointed to notify Mr. Larned of his election. A motion was made to fix the salary of the bishop suffragan at the same figure as voted in the convention of last May. The certificates of election were then signed. Affectionate greetings were sent to the senior priest of the diocese, the Rev. Edward M. McGuffey, who was seriously ill at his home. The doxology was sung and the convention adjourned.

Armistice Day.

The tenth anniversary of the close of the World War was commemorated in our churches last Sunday morning. Many congregations stood in silence at the hour of eleven. The manner of the commemoration, other than the silent interval, differed in various places. The service used at St. George's, Flushing, seems to have been particularly effective. A special liturgical form was printed for the occasion. Instead of psalms, "promises of the prophets" concerning peace and righteousness were read antiphonally. Then followed the interval of silence. The flags of the fifteen nations who signed the Paris Peace Pact were assembled in the chancel, and the Preamble of the Pact was read. The congregation was then called upon to rise while the two articles of

NOVEMBER.

1. Thursday. All Saints.
4. Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity.
11. Twenty-third Sunday after Trinity.
18. Twenty-fourth Sunday after Trinity.
25. Sunday next before Advent.
29. Thursday. Thanksgiving Day.
30. Friday. S. Andrew.

COLLECT FOR SUNDAY NEXT BEFORE ADVENT.

Stir up, we beseech Thee, O Lord, the wills of Thy faithful people, that they, plenteously bringing forth the fruit of good works, may by Thee be plenteously rewarded; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR THANKSGIVING DAY.

O Most Merciful Father, Who hast blessed the labors of the husbandman in the returns of the fruits of the earth; we give Thee humble and hearty thanks for this Thy bounty; beseeching Thee to continue Thy loving kindness to us, that our land may still yield her increase to Thy glory and our comfort; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. ANDREW'S DAY.

Almighty God, Who didst give such grace unto Thy holy Apostle St. Andrew, that he readily obeyed the calling of Thy Son Jesus Christ and followed Him without delay; grant unto us all, that we being called by Thy Holy Word, may forthwith give up ourselves obediently to fulfil Thy Holy Commandments; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A THANKSGIVING PRAYER.

God of the passing year! to Thee
Our hymn of gratitude we raise;
With swelling heart and bending knee
We offer Thee our song of praise.

We bless Thy name, Almighty God!
For all the kindness Thou hast shown,
To this fair land our fathers trod:
This land we fondly call our own!

Here Freedom spread her banner wide,
And cast her soft and hallowed ray;
For Thou our country's arms did'st guide,
And led them on their conquering way.

We praise Thee that the Gospel light
Through all our land its radiance sheds;
Scatters the shades of error's night,
And heavenly blessings round us spreads.

When foes without and foes within
With threatening ills our land have pressed,
Thou hast our nation's bulwark been,
And, smiling, sent us peaceful rest.

O God! preserve us in Thy fear;
In troublous times our Bulwark be;
Diffuse Thy truth's bright precepts here,
And may we worship only Thee!

Occasions for Thanksgiving.

Israel was a chosen nation. So is America. God has given us a veritable land of milk and honey. He has led us and blessed us. We are chosen to establish God's kingdom throughout the earth.

Our country has the most just government the ages have developed. The people of no other nation enjoy the privileges and blessings we enjoy. True, our government is not perfect. Many must struggle for a bare existence. But I would rather be forced to pay the highest prices for everything I use, than to be tortured by tyrants. And a better day is coming.

Freedom is our blessed heritage and possession. And our freedom of person, of thought, of speech, our free press, our free schools, our free churches, all are worth preserving, even though it costs us much.

Our country is a land of distributed plenty. There is enough for all and to spare. Never before in any land could so many millions share meals of more than one course, and pass their plates a second time. We live better than did kings five hundred years ago.

In many countries a large percentage of the people have no opportunity to get an education. But we have public schools, colleges, books, papers, magazines, libraries, lectures, music and art for every one. We should be thankful that, while trusts may oppress the people, all can afford to buy oil and read up on their wrongs.

Formerly men were honored for their power, their wealth, or their learning. But our people are beginning to realize that better than all these is Christian character. This means the safety and perpetuity of our country. As long as Greece and Rome had men of virtue and of valor, they were world powers, and just so long as we make Christian character the chief thing, our country will be the mightiest nation upon the face of the earth and have her place under the sun.

For all of these blessings we should thank the Lord.—Rev. Eugene L. McLean.

THE PROCESSION.

A Woman's Reflection on Churchgoing

By Jean Mitchell Boyd.

Just before he started for Sunday School, my small son discovered that a button on his coat was hanging by a thread. It had to be sewed on. So many Sundays there seems to be a stitch that has to be taken. Invariably I think of my Great-aunt Sarah, who firmly believed that every stitch which one took in this world on the holy Sabbath would have to be ripped out with the tongue in the torrid zone of the next world.

As I sewed on the button, I saw the family across the street drive off in their car for an all-day picnic. I knew that at ten o'clock the people in the next house would depart to the golf links. The couple in the brick house would send their children to Sunday School, and then spend the morning in the depths of voluminous newspapers. The family in the gray house would find its spiritual inspiration over the radio. Aunt Sarah would have classed them all as benighted heathen, doomed to eternal fire and brimstone; but in this enlightened age they are not even criticized.

I put the coat on the small boy, tied his necktie, passed around Sunday-school money and clean handkerchiefs, found my daughter's lost Quarterly and started my flock to Sunday School. Then I washed the dishes, made the beds, picked up innumerable garments, peeled the potatoes for dinner, put the roast in the pan and changed my dress.

And all the time I wondered why I should rush every Sunday morning to go to church, when I might stay at home in a bungalow apron and hear a sermon over the radio. It really wouldn't make any difference to any one whether I went to church or not. It seemed to me that religion was more or less a man's affair. All doctrines and dogmas and creeds were written by men. All prophets and priests and reformers have been men. I couldn't see that women had ever played any particular part in the religious life of the world. As I reached the decision that I would not go to church again until Christmas (all the neighbors go at Christmas and Easter), my husband called that it was time to start. Saturday night I would tell him that my Sunday morning rushes were to be eliminated. I locked the back door, emptied the ice pan, put the roast into the oven, put on my hat. We started.

The church was very quiet, very peaceful, and I was glad to be there. I remembered that I would not be there again until Christmas and knew that I should miss it. The children came and sat with us. Suddenly the thought came to me that if I didn't go to church the children wouldn't go. So many people have said that churchgoing is a habit. I thought of all the mothers who had taken their children to church in order to form that habit—mothers in taffeta and brocade, mothers in hoop-skirts and crinoline, mothers in powdered wigs, mothers in caps and kerchiefs. And back of the mothers of this country were mothers of other lands—a procession of mothers that went back across the years to the beginning of time. A thousand years ago, some mother of mine led her children beneath the druid oaks to where the priest stood with a golden sickle to cut the sacred mistletoe. A thousand years ago some mother of mine brought her children to the strange stone altars of the Norse gods. There were mothers who walked in the shade of the pyramids and in the olive groves of Greece, guiding young feet to the shrines of their gods. There was a lovely young mother of Palestine who carried her little Son into the temple. A wonderful procession of mothers, sign and symbol of the sweetness that makes life sweet!

"Lift up your hearts," said the minister. And, after all, no radio speaker has an appeal quite the same as that of a minister who is also a friend.

As I stood, I looked at the high arched window in the front of the church. The morning light shone through the stained glass, coloring softly the figures of the risen Christ and the women at His feet worshipping. Women have always had a part in the religious life of the world, and I wanted a share in it. I knew that I should always go to church—for my own sake, for the children's sake. There must be no gap in the procession because of me.—The Congregationalist.

Once More.

Thanksgiving once more! Blessed be God who has brought us through heat and cold, wet and dry, sickness and health, prosperity and adversity all along life's journey, and at the close of another bountiful season has given us the spirit of worship in the dark gloomy days of the year. The days may be filled with November gloom, or the fleeting pale sunshine of late autumn, but God's smile is upon us as a nation, as communities and as individuals. "What shall we render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward us?"

Thanksgiving brings some happy memories as we think of our high aspirations and resolutions of a year ago. Truly we meant to be more grateful, more faithful, more devoted, more courageous and more active in the service of the Master as we bowed our heads in the church last Thanksgiving morning. Our hearts were tender and overflowing with praise as we reviewed the twelve months past, even as they overflow now as we count our blessings. How is it that weak human beings evermore fail in the face of the goodness and mercy of God! How often we have stumbled, how often been careless, how often have forgotten our obligations to the father of us all! But with a rush of humility and penitence there follows the comforting thought that God knows our frailities. "He remembered that we are dust!"

So once more on our knees with the great review of a bountiful year passing before our eyes, and our record of private blessings more than can be numbered we renew our promises, pour out our thanksgiving, humble ourselves in gratitude and rise refreshed, renewed of spirit and ready for the work of the coming year. Praise God from whom all blessings flow!—Presbyterian Banner.

THANKSGIVING.

Thanksgiving! as I breathe that word
My soul with reverence is stirred.
O Father God, read Thou my heart,
And find my gratitude a part
Of life itself, a stream that flows
And giveth drink as on it goes.

I have not gold; yet I may share
The sunshine as it gilds the air;
I have not turquoise, rubies, pearls,
Yet yonder heaven each jewel unfurls;
I own not diamonds, yet the stars
Reflect my thanks across life's bars.

I have my share of care and pain,
I know defeat e'er I attain,
Oft disappointment marks my way,
And life takes on a drab, dull gray;
Yet grief and sorrow ne'er annoy,
With gratitude they fill life's joy.

My home is humble, yet I feel
A touch of love, God's precious seal,
For there is mother, patient, kind,
And father with his noble mind,
And all the rest so loyal, true,
That life is ever fresh and new.

And so I count my blessings o'er,
Revealing quite a goodly store.
What joy it is to be a part
Of earth's great, throbbing, trembling heart!
Yet, Father, should all blessings flee,
I'd still be thankful just for Thee.

—Mildred S. Albert.

Prayer in Our National Life.

"He hath not dealt so with any nation," Ps. 147:20.

This nation has been set apart as no other nation ever was for Divine uses, and from the moment that, on one October morning in 1492, Columbus looked over the side of the ship and saw the carved staff which made him think he was near an inhabited country and also saw a thorn and cluster of berries, type of our history ever since—the piercing sorrows and the cluster of national joys—until this hour our country has been bounded on the north and south and east and west by the goodness of God, and He will guide it through all the perplexities of the future.—Selected.

A BOY'S WISH.

I wish that I had been the boy
Whose lunch the Master used,
To feed that throng, five thousand strong,
I would not have refused,
But gladly let Him have it all,
Nor any part held back,
When Andrew said he wished my bread
And fish, there'd be no lack.

The Master seemed to be so glad
Some helper He had found.
And then, you know, just row on row
They sat them on the ground.
A pause, and then with thankfulness,
The Master's voice arose,
He blessed His God who understood,
Whose mercy overflows.

He broke the bread and gave it out.
The miracle began,
The fishes, too, though they were few,
Just spread from man to man.
A wondrous thing, ne'er seen before,
When broke it multiplied,
Nor stayed until they had their fill,
And all were satisfied.

I wish that I—but then you know
I'll give this heart of mine,
My hands and feet will run to meet
The Master's call divine.
I'll give my body and my tongue,
I'll tell the story, too,
How Jesus came and bore the shame
To live and die for you.

Perhaps the Master so can use
What little lunch I have,
That many a soul will reach the goal
Across death's dark, cold wave.
Should Jesus take my little store,
How happy I would be
I'd sing His praise through endless days
Because He could use me.

—John F. Todd, in Christian Evangelist.

A New Thanksgiving.

David Martin and his mother were spending a year with Grandmother Gordon while David's father was on a business trip in China. They had left their own Eastern home in the spring, and now it was late fall, almost time for Thanksgiving, though in the Kentucky town where grandmother lived there was yet no hint of winter in the air.

"What a different Thanksgiving this will be," sighed grandmother one morning at breakfast, "with your father in China, David! It is the first time there hasn't been a home-coming, but Aunt Isabel writes that she and her family can't possibly come home this year, there are so many of them, and fares are so high. Usually it's twelve at the table for Thanksgiving dinner."

"Why don't we have twelve this year?" asked David.

"But I've just explained," said grandmother.

"Oh, yes, the family," said David, helping himself to a hot muffin. "But does it have to be families always that eat dinner together on Thanksgiving?" Without waiting for an answer he went on: "Why does it have to be families?"

"Why?" said grandmother benignly. "Why, because all the families do eat Thanksgiving dinner together, so who would be left over?" Mother remained a silent listener, looking first at grandmother and then at David.

"Why," said David, in great surprise, "not everybody eats Thanksgiving dinner with his family. Lots of my friends right here in this town aren't going to have any Thanksgiving dinner at all, not turkey and cranberry sauce and mince pie and nuts and raisins. How do I know? Oh, we talk about everything. Who do you s'pose will invite father to Thanksgiving dinner? Do they have any Thanksgiving dinner for Americans in China, mother?" he asked, turning to mother with a new anxiety in his voice.

"They might at some hotel," said mother. "Father will remember it's Thanksgiving, anyway. He'll think of us here having the nicest Thanksgiving dinner in the world with grandmother."

"Let's have a tableful, so when he remembers what it was like, it will be like it," said David. "Don't you hope somebody nice will ask father to Thanksgiving dinner in China, grandmother?" Though the drift of David's thoughts was not clear, grandmother must have caught it, for she said:

"A tableful? Truly, I'd like to, David, but truly I wouldn't know any one to ask on that day."

"Oh!" answered David, joyously. "How big can you make the table, grandmother? Just twelve? When may I ask them? Today's a good day, because it's Saturday, and I can see everybody."

Grandmother smiled at his excitement. "Why, David, you've only lived in this town six months, and I've lived her for twenty years. You have friends who would be glad to come, when I have none. Who are they? I can't imagine."

"Well," began David, eagerly, and hesitated. "There'd be only nine I could ask, wouldn't there? It would be hard to pick out just nine when there are so many," and he puckered his forehead in a perplexed little frown. Grandmother looked across to smile at mother, but mother was smiling straight at David.

"Well," began David, "I guess I'd ask old Mr. Parsons first. You know, he drives the wagon for Howe's Market. Sometimes I ride with him. He lets me drive. And I asked him if he was going to have a turkey for Thanksgiving, and he laughed and said he was going to deliver most of the turkeys in town, and he guessed that was most as good as having one. I'll ask him first, grandmother!"

"Oh—Mr. Parsons," said grandmother, blankly. "Hasn't he a family? He has brought my provisions to the door for years."

"Not a family," said David, gayly. "He lives all by himself in a room over the market."

"Oh," said grandmother again, and added a little weakly: "Who were the other guests you had in mind.

"I was thinking," said David. "I think I'd ask the policeman next, the one at the railroad crossing at school-time. He's a particular friend of mine. Didn't you know he was in the war? He was. He has a wound stripe. Sometimes when I have two cents I give him one piece of chocolate. There's a penny-in-the-slot machine at his corner. And once he gave me three marbles—said he found 'em and saved 'em just for me. And once he let me stand on his little island with him for five minutes. Did you ever stand on an island with a policeman, grandmother, and count the automobiles that went by, both ways?"

Mother, who was quietly drinking coffee, set her cup down hastily and wiped the corners of her mouth with care.

"No," said grandmother, "I never did."

"There were one hundred and fifty-nine, exactly," said David. "It's pretty hard to count them both ways."

"Who else?" asked grandmother, tersely. "I suppose he hasn't a family either?"

"Not a family, either. He has brought himself up since he was twelve. He said so. Well, of course, there's the postman. You see him every day. Course you know all about him."

"I know him at the door," said grandmother, uncertainly.

"He's just as nice inside the house," said David, literally. "I had him in the kitchen a minute one hot day, and Nora and I gave him iced lemonade. Maybe you were out. He lives with his sister, though, so maybe we couldn't ask him."

"We might ask the sister, too," said grandmother, and for the first time she laughed outright and went to her desk for pencil and pad. "David, dear, I'm for it!" she said in a voice new to David. "Isn't that what you and your chums say, 'I'm for it'? You see, I'm not too old to learn. This is your Thanksgiving dinner, and I shall feel honored to receive your guests. We'll have a Thanksgiving dinner such as never was, too, to the last frill. Tell me the names and I'll write them down, and then I'll write my prettiest notes, and off you scamper to deliver them. Mind now, I'll not take no for an answer from any of them—you'll see to that?"

It was mother's turn to laugh aloud. "Oh, David, won't your father wish he were here!" she said.

"I know," said David, a little wistfully. "Father always does like my friends, doesn't he?"

Mr. Parsons. Delivers for Howe's Market.

Mr. Dan Downing. Soldier-policeman who takes care of school children.

Mr. Jones. Postman.

Mr. Jones' sister. Didn't know he had one till David told me.

Lauretta Fowler. Schoolmate of David's, crippled for the last three months. I never heard of her, but David says he often goes to see her to play checkers. She can come in an automobile.

Johnny Fowler. Newsboy. Brother of Lauretta. Helps support the family. David thinks his earnings would not permit a turkey. He is two years younger than David.

Mrs. Fowler. Mother of Lauretta and Johnny. She can't go out to work, because Lauretta needs care during the day. She helps Johnny support the family, since the death of Mr. Fowler. Does sewing at home when she can get it.

Miss Maria Green. Keeps a tiny shop on the avenue, where the children all buy toys and marbles and pencils and notebooks and popcorn. David says he never saw a grown-up in the shop. I've never seen her. David says she lives over the shop.

M. Francois Dinet. Cobbler. French. Plays the "fiddle". Tells fairy stories to children while they wait if their shoes aren't quite ready. Also a war veteran, and disabled for more active work. Drifted to this country in search of distant relatives, whom he hasn't yet found.

"That's twelve, counting us," said David, regretfully.

"Do you know more, if the table were larger?" asked grandmother.

"Of course!" said David, all enthusiasm. "Lots more! Do you mean—"

"Not this time," said grandmother, gently; then added with a spirit that matched his own: "But there are more Thanksgivings coming, remember!"

What a Thanksgiving it was, to be sure! Shy at first, David's guests were soon put at ease and also put at their best by grandmother's charming hospitality and mother's instant friendliness, so that long before they went in to dinner (what Thanksgiving dinner was ever on the dot?) every one was talking and laughing around the open fire. And the dinner itself! Was ever a Thanksgiving dinner better? David and mother thought not. The guests thought not. From crisp brown turkey to the last nut and raisin, it was perfect.

"My fiddle?" M. Francois Dinet smiled happily as grandmother asked the question. "But, yes, David insisted that I bring my fiddle."

Songs which every one knew, mother at the piano, the fiddle singing the melody with the voices.

"Mercy!" laughed grandmother, after the last guest had gone, "how the family would have loved the fun! Why, we never had a better time when all the family was here, did we?"

"How they will love it!" corrected mother. "I'm going to write to one member of the family in China this minute." Near the end of the bulky letter that next morning sped on its way was: "I never saw my aristocratic mother look so happy; no, not even at a purely family reunion. All unconsciously David has been a daily eye-opener to her, but this Thanksgiving dinner was the climax. Of course, she never would have thought of it, but in the end her spirit equaled his—"

In far-away China father's eyes shone boyishly as he read the letter. A part of his reply was: "David is no genius except in one thing, but he is a genius in the matter of friendship. He'd find friends, countless friends, and interesting all, in the desert of Sahara. And if that's the kind of Thanksgiving parties Grandmother Gordon is going to have hereafter, I'm never going to miss one! You tell her—will you?—that even if I wasn't there, it was the best Thanksgiving I ever had."—Selected.

THE LITTLE BOY WHO DIDN'T WANT TO TAKE A BATH.

George Morgan Knight, Jr.

Part II.

"The Lucky Boy."

Jimmy arose the next morning. He was happy. The day before he had skipped taking his bath and if he could go for two whole weeks without a bath his father would give him five dollars!

Wasn't he the luckiest boy in the world?

Jimmy dressed for school; he could dress quicker when he didn't have to but wash his face. He was very happy. He fairly danced downstairs.

"How did you make out without your bath?" asked his father, when he entered the room. "I suppose you mean to win that prize I offered you?"

"Sure I do! It will be very easy to win. I need not worry of being late now. I only have to wash my face!"

When Jimmy got to school he told his chum about the prize he was working for.

"Listen, boys," called John Smithe to the crowd of boys in the school yard; "did you ever hear of making five dollars an easier way?"

"An easy way?" asked the group in chorus. "How? Please tell us?"

"Jimmy doesn't have to take any old bath for two weeks and will get five dollars if he can wait that long! He's the lucky boy!" explained his chum. "Wish I could do it!"

"Is somethin' the matter with the water?" asked Jack Feilds. "Nothing ever happens to our water!"

"No."

"Well, what's the matter with it?"

"He don't have to take any bath and if he can go without taking it, he'll get five dollars for trying, from his father."

"Lucky boy, I call him," Robert Edwards said. "I'd do it for less!"

Many envious glances stole toward Jimmy Jones from his classmates. And Jimmy did his lessons better! He felt better. He could think better.

"How is your plan working, Jimmy?" asked his father, coming in one night after he had read the evening paper. "Do you want to bathe tonight? Aren't you very dirty? Wouldn't you like to have a nice hot bath?"

"No. I like to be dirty!" Jimmy answered promptly. "But two weeks is a long time to wait for five dollars. All the boys in class say I am very lucky. You are a wonderful daddy!"

"I thought my dad was, too, when he made me this offer!" laughed his daddy. "I hope that you can stick it out."

A whole week had passed. Jimmy Jones had not taken a bath. The neighbors were being worried by their boys into letting them do the same, as Mr. Jones had done.

"He's very wrong!" cried one mother. "The very idea of letting his child do such a thing!"

"Why, the boy must be black by now! A whole week without a bath! My! My! And he has made such an impression on the boys around him; why they act as if James were a hero! And the way he lords it over them! I don't want him coming near me," Mrs. Edwards spoke as she entered with a friend at a club meeting.

"Surely he can't be right in his head," Mrs. Feilds announced as they took chairs. "I have a good notion to tell him so."

"Last night John was going to bed and wanted to know did he have to wash, 'for Jimmy doesn't and will get five dollars if he doesn't by the end of this week'!" said one mother, glancing at the other parents who were facing the same problem. "My husband said he thinks it a very good thing, but all men are just alike. He even smiled over it!"

And so the neighborhood discussed the famous Mr. Jones and his bath-less son. But Jimmy was enjoying it. And his father had many chuckles over it. He had not believed that his son could hold out this long. But he knew when a boy of his son's age made up his mind to a thing he usually stuck it out. He also laughed at the sober faces of the men he met who were his neighbors. Some had expressed themselves to him and he had laughed and said the boy would not stick it out. He was only trying out an experiment.

Just one more week to go without a bath, and then the five dollars to spend as he wished. And the things he would buy! Jimmy thought of them as he lay down to sleep on Monday night. And the week days did pass so fast last week! Would they this week?

Jimmy looked up at the stairs. He was still happy, but dirty, very dirty, and he didn't care! You can easily wash dirt off. And at the end of that week he would get his five dollars! Far below he heard a rooster crow, and then another far off. He was soon fast asleep.

If we are separated from a friend for years and never talk to her or write to her, we are apt to lose interest in her and seldom think about her. So people who do not pray are really giving up their friendship with God."

Under Whose Wings

By ZENOBIA BIRD

Are the young people in your Sunday-school class earnestly seeking to know God's plan for their lives? Is that bright young girl longing to go into the Master's service—perhaps in the mission field—but unable to find how to make the start? Is that splendid young man in your church somewhat unsettled in his faith since he went to college, and is he uncertain as to the way back?

You can help them by putting into their hands this charming story gripping to the last page. They will find here a beam of clear light on the path—and they will thank you for it.

Death

CHAMBERS: MARGARET FRANCES died in Washington Sunday, November 11, wife of the Rev. B. Duvall Chambers, Millwood, Clarke County, Va., daughter of the late Benjamin and Rosalie Tomes, of New York. Funeral services in Calvary Church, New York, Bishop Lloyd and Dr. Sedgwick officiating.

MISS MARY PAGE LEE.

Miss Lee was a member of Christ Church, Millwood, Clarke County, Va. The interment was in the old English graveyard, Clarke County.

She is survived by her sister, Mrs. James R. Winchester, the wife of Bishop Winchester, of Arkansas; Rev. William Byrd Lee, of Gloucester, Va., and Rev. Charles Henry Lee, of St. Simons Islands, Georgia.

WM. B. LEE.

MARGARET FRANCES CHAMBERS.

A Tribute by the Woman's Auxiliary of Christ Church, Millwood, Virginia.

Rarely have autumn winds sighed a requiem to a gentler or purer spirit than when that of MARGARET FRANCES CHAMBERS passed through the heavenly gates into eternal rest and peace.

Four years ago we welcomed her as wife of our Rector to Cunningham Chapel Parish, and, as she had been in Calvary Church, New York, so here she became a devoted and helpful worker, and as a member of our Woman's Auxiliary, we now mourn her loss.

She had a passion for the conquest of souls; she longed that all might be brought to share the good things of the kingdom, and her sympathy and help were outstanding and comprehending.

We are grateful to Almighty God for the example of her life in our daily walking together, and in the midst of our own loss, we would convey to her husband and her family our deepest sympathy.

"Peace, Peace!" She is not dead—
She doth not sleep—she hath not died.
She hath AWAKENED from the Dream of Life."

MRS. ELIZABETH W. CARDOZA.

In Memoriam.

Entered into rest on All Saints' Day, November 1, 1928, ELIZABETH WORMELEY NORRIS, the widow of the late Edward Singleton Cardoza, and the daughter of John Byrd and Alice Griffith Latimer Norris, in the seventy-ninth year of her life at her home, Virginia Beach, Virginia. Mrs. Cardoza was born at "Mantua", Clark County, Virginia, and spent her early girlhood during the stirring times of the War Between the States at "Rosemont". She was married November 15, 1870, in Meade Memorial Church, Manchester, Va., where she had ben baptized and confirmed. For many years her home was at "Riverdale", until after her marriage, when she lived in Richmond. During the last fifteen years she has lived at Virginia Beach for her health. Mrs. Cardoza was the mother of nine children, of whom five survive her: Hunter McGuire, of Chicago, Ill.; William Harris, of Camaguey, Cuba; John Byrd, of New York City; Elizabeth Wormeley, of Virginia Beach, and Edmund Randolph, of Norfolk, Va.; also her brother, John Byrd Norris, of Baltimore, Md., and two grandchildren.

The interment was in Hollywood, Richmond, Va., on Saturday, November 3, 1928, at 12 o'clock.

"Father, in Thy gracious keeping,
Leave we now Thy servant sleping."

MRS. WILLIAMETTA SCHOOLER PAGE.

Died, in Richmond, Va., November 8, 1928, MRS. WILLIAMETTA SCHOOLER PAGE, daughter of the late Samuel Schooler, Esquire, and Mary Eliza Fleming, of Edgewood, in Caroline County, Virginia, and second wife of the Rev. Frank Page, D. D., of Fairfax County, Va.

The death of this dear lady, after a lingering illness of several months, removed from a host of friends one of the most charming and delightful of women—learned, elegant and deeply religious.

Inheriting great talents from her forefathers, and descended from the mother of Patrick Henry through her first husband, Colonel Syme, Mrs. Page acquired by her friendliness and personal charm a host of friends who ever regarded her with admiration and affection. Known as "Miss Millie" by many of the leading men and women of Virginia who attended her school in Fredericksburg, she bore ever their love and affection. To her husband and his family she was the most lovable and very dear; in the church in which her husband had ministered she was a zealous worker; and in all good works everywhere she was interested as one who felt a genuine sympathy with all who are desolate and oppressed.

Attended by a large concourse of friends, her remains were taken from Zion Church, Fairfax, where the service was held by the Rev. Mr. Marshall, the Rev. Mr. Mason and the Rev. Mr. Zachary, and buried in the cemetery there by the side of her husband, the former rector of the church. Of her it may be truly said, "Blessed are they that die in the Lord".

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

the Treaty itself were read, and the congregation was asked "to pledge allegiance to their country in its pursuit of peace". Appropriate prayers were offered, "for the spiritual union of mankind", "for wisdom and courage to promote peace", and for those who laid down their lives in the Great War. The preacher was the Rev. Murray Bartlett, D. D., President of Hobart College.

At the Church of the Nativity, Brooklyn, Brigadier-General Sydney Grant made an address at a special service in the evening. The national airs of the five principal allied nations were played. The congregation came to the altar and each one laid a flower there in remembrance. Holy Communion was then celebrated. The flowers were distributed to hospitals next day.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Young Episcopal Rector in City.

The Rev. Hulbert A. Woodfall, who has resigned as rector of St. Philips' Church, Laurel, Md., to become rector of St. Mark's Church, will be instituted in his new charge on Sunday, December 2. The Rev. Mr. Woolfall was born at Yonkers, N. Y., in the parish in which Bishop James E. Freeman of Washington was then rector. After completing his studies at a New York City preparatory school he entered college, but before finishing his course matriculated at Virginia Theological Seminary. He was graduated from there in 1927, and while still a deacon, was appointed to take charge of St. Philip's Parish. Mr. Woolfall, who is not yet thirty years of age, will be the youngest rector of any Episcopal Church in Washington. While still at the Seminary, Mr. Woolfall was actively interested in the Toc H movement in Washington, and is the first warden of Toc H to be appointed in this country.

Sunday-School Institute.

The monthly meeting of the Sunday-School Institute of the Diocese of Washington was held in St. John's Parish Hall, Sixteenth Street, on Tuesday evening, November 20. Canon Freeland Peter delivered an address on the topic, "Can Religion Be Restored to the Home?" The Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Church, Washington Parish, spoke on: "The Teacher's Influence With the Pupil." The Rev. Franklin J. Bohanan, rector of St. Paul's Parish, Rock Creek, is the Chairman of the Department of Religious Education in the Diocese of Washington and will preside, usually, at these monthly institute meetings.

The Rev. Joseph E. Williams Welcomed to Diocese.

The Rev. Joseph E. Williams has resigned as rector of Christ Church, St. Paul's and All Saints' parishes, Calvert County, Maryland, to accept the rectorship of the Church of the Advent, and has already taken up his new work.

Mr. Williams was a student at William and Mary College and the Virginia Theological Seminary and was ordained by the late Bishop Harding at St. Thomas' Church in Washington in 1909. A little later, he went to Idaho as a missionary. After several years there, he returned to Washington and served as assistant to the rector of St. Thomas' Church.

At the autumn meeting of the Laymen's Service Association, held in the parish hall of the Church of the Advent on Wednesday evening, November 21, Mr. Williams was accorded a hearty welcome to his new work by the laymen of the diocese. At this meeting, the Bishop of Washington delivered an address and Mr. Busey Howard, president of the Laymen's Service Association, outlined the plans of the Association for the coming year.

The Consecration of the Rev. Norman S. Binsted, elected at the recent General Convention to be Bishop of a new missionary jurisdiction in Japan, will take place on Monday morning, December 3, in St. Alban's Church. Mr. Binsted went out to his work in Japan from St. Alban's Parish and has been the particular missionary charge of that parish ever since.

The Huguenot Society of Washington held a special service in St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street, on November 18, at four P. M. Dr. Florian J. C. Vurpillot, French Vicar of the French congregation of St. John's Church, which holds a service in French every Sunday afternoon, preached the sermon on "The Tolerance and the Intolerance of the Gospels". The occasion was the formal celebration of "The Edict of Toleration", signed by King Louis XVI., of France, November 17, 1787. The diplomatic corps resident in Washington was invited to participate in this service.

Contrary to the usual custom of these services for the French congregation, the sermon was delivered in English.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop

Fall Meeting of Executive Council.

Plans for joining with the Diocese of Atlanta in conducting the Fort Valley High and Industrial School, situated in the Diocese of Atlanta, were reported by the Bishop of Georgia at the fall meeting of the Executive Council of his diocese held in Savannah, November 9. Action on this matter was taken at the annual convention of the Georgia Diocese when the proposition of the Bishop of Atlanta was presented. Bishop Reese stated at the Savannah meeting Bishop Mikell had written that the Board of Trustees of the school had received with pleasure the decision of Georgia's convention, and that provision had been made in the by-laws to have an equal number of members on the board from each diocese. The representatives from the Diocese of Georgia will be elected at the next diocesan convention.

The day preceding the meeting of the Executive Council the six departments held their meetings and brought in their reports and recommendations the next day to the Council. The Department of Missions reported all missions supplied. The Department of Religious Education, among its other activities, brought in a report of the training school now being conducted in its diocesan headquarters in Savannah, which is receiving recognition outside of the diocese. A young woman from the Diocese of North Carolina is receiving training, and there have recently been three other applications for entrance. The Department reported having had a creditable exhibit at the General Convention, and that it is emphasizing adult study and teacher training throughout the diocese.

The Department of Social Service will cooperate with the conference to be conducted in Savannah in February by the State Department of Public Welfare to which will be invited a representative from the Department of Social Service of the National Council to have a place on the program subject to confirmation by the State Department of Public Welfare. The Field Department reported a successful Missionary Conference held in Savannah in the early fall, the visit to the diocese of the Rev. Arthur M. Shreman, D. D., of Wuchang, China, and the designation of Sunday, December 16, as "Pay-Up Sunday". The Publicity Department reported that "The Church in Georgia" will be published monthly instead of bi-monthly as heretofore, with the exception of the summer months, and a plan to use the members of the Department as a working force in trying to inaugurate publicity committees in every parish and organized missions in the diocese. The Finance Department reported a total objective of $31,240 as the budget for 1929, $12,000 of which is the quota from the National Council, this amount being an excess of $1,200 over previous years.

The Council passed a resolution pledging the amount of its quota to the National Council.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop

In Memory of the Rev. Rollin A. Sawyer.

By unsolicited subscriptions, the parishioners of St. Stephen's Church, Harrisburg, the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., rector, made a gift to the church on the anniversary of the death of the late rector of the parish, the Rev. Rollin A. Sawyer. It consisted of a large almsbasin and four others of smaller size for the reception of the alms at the church services. The basins are of sterling silver, and were made by the Kirk Company, silversmiths, of Baltimore, Md. The inscription on the rim of the smaller basin reads: "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up as a memorial before God". That on the larger basin, "My soul doth magnify the Lord and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour". On the back of all the basins is inscribed: "To the Glory of God and in loving membory of the Reverend Rollin Alger Sawyer, rector of this Church 1905-1925. Presented by the congregation of St. Stephen's Church, Harrisburg, Penn." The basins are of a beautiful design.

Personal Notes

The Rev. J. Howard Gibbons has resigned, after eight years' service, the rectorship of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, Kentucky, and the diocesan office he holds, to take effect December 31, 1928. He will become the assistant to the Rev. J. S. Douglass, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Louisville, Kentucky, with especial charge of Emmanuel Mission of said church, effective January 1, 1929.

The Rev. Carlos A. Aveihle, lately of California, is assisting the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, D. D., at St. Mary's, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Rev. Robert B. H. Bell, M. A., has resigned the rectorship of St. Thomas' Church, Denver, where he has served for fourteen years, to devote his entire time to mission work. He will go out from Colorado under the auspices of the Society of the Nazarene and the Bishops of Colorado, teaching the Life Abundant Movement. An itinerary is now being mapped out and arrangements can be made by writing to Mr. Bell at 2205 Dexter Street, Denver, in care of Society of the Nazarene, Mountain Lakes, N. J.

The Ven. William Holden, D. D., rector of St. James' Church at St. James, Long Island, retired from the rectorship October 1, after having been rector since 1900. Dr. Holden has also been Archdeacon of Suffolk for many years, and that position is vacated by his retirement. He and Mrs. Holden will live in Smithtown Branch, within the limits of the parish where they have so many friends.

Mr. Philip Mauro, well-known Bible teacher and member of bar of the United States Supreme Court, has made careful study of questions that are confusing many Christians.

Can You Answer These Questions?

1. Was it any part of the work of Christ:
   a. To revive and reconstitute the Jewish Nation?
   b. To re-establish that people in the land that was once theirs?
   c. To revive their system of worship, etc.?
2. When the times of the Gentiles are ended, what then?
   a. Will the "day of the Lord" then come?
3. Will Christ appear suddenly as a thief in the night; as the lightning that lighteth from one part to another under heaven?
   a. Will the door of salvation then be shut?

Though we carry a large stock of Altar Brasses, Alms Basins, Sanctuary Lamps, Baptismal Fonts, Ewers, Stoles, etc., available for immediate selection, all wood work, and most of the other productions are executed to Special Order only. Some of the smaller and simpler pieces can be executed in a few weeks or a few months, but the larger commissions may take four to six months or even a year to complete. It is not too early, therefore, to take under consideration memorials to be placed this coming Easter, All Saints' Day and Christmas of next year.

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., DECEMBER 1, 1928. No. 48.

ADVENT.

Rejoice, rejoice, believers!
And let your lights appear;
The evening is advancing,
And darker night is near.
The Bridegroom is arising,
And soon He will draw nigh;
Up! pray, and watch, and wrestle!
At midnight comes the cry.

See that your lamps are burning;
Replenish them with oil;
Look now for your salvation,
The end of sin and toil.
The watchers on the mountain
Proclaim the Bridegroom near,
Go meet Him as He cometh,
With alleluias clear.

O wise and holy virgins,
Now raise your voices higher,
Until in songs of triumph
Ye meet the angel choir.
The marriage feast is waiting,
The gates wide open stand;
Up, up, ye heirs of glory!
The Bridegroom is at hand.

Our hope and expectation,
O Jesus, now appear;
Arise, Thou Sun so longed for,
O'er this benighted sphere!
With hearts and hands uplifted,
We plead, O Lord, to see
The day of earth's redemption,
And ever be with Thee!

—L. Laurenti, A. D. 1700.

It was not for these that I came;
For every night from a new hill-crown
The stars are moving westward;
Then all through the darkness wind and branches
Whisper syllables that stir me;
And always, as I journey, the moves on before me.
It is good that my tent is light,
And my spirit strong,
So that I shall come at last to my mountains,
And look upon the sea!

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

What will the fault-finding Christian do in heaven?

Men who serve only when they feel like it never do a full day's work.

The frosts of age do not cool the fires of Christian love.

All God's giants have been weak men, who did great things for God because they reckoned on His being with them. —J. Hudson Taylor.

"Ask of Me," is the one appeal of the Most High. It is not enough that we should be able to vindicate a promise signed by the divine hand; we must plead it.—F. B. Meyer.

I thank Thee, Lord for lavish love
On me bestowed;
Enough to share with loveless folk
To ease their load!
Thy ill to me I ill could spare,
Yet dearer is the love I share.
—Outlook.

"Beyond the land, beyond the sea,
There shall be rest for thee and me,
For thee and me, and those we love,
I heard a promise gently fall,
I heard a far-off shepherd call
The weary and the broken-hearted,
Promising rest to each and all."

A passing cloud
Within the sky
Will make the blue of deeper dye;
A single tree within a field
Will make it a new beauty yield;
And one white sail upon the sea
Will break the dull monotony;
An kindly word in grief's dark night
Will fill the soul with hope and light.
—W. E. Mountain.

It is the last step that wins, and there is no place in the pilgrim's progress where so many dangers lurk as the region that lies hard by the portals of the celestial city. It is when heaven's heights are full in view that hell's gate is most persistent and full of deadly peril.—A. B. Simpson.

Prayer clears the vision, quiets the nerve, defines duty, strengthens purpose, sweetens the spirit and fortifies the soul. The unused forces of nature are great; the unused forces of prayer are still greater. Prayer relates the soul to the infinite resources of the divine.—Charles L. Goodell.

"Love thyself last. Look near, behold thy duty
To those who walk beside thee down life's road;
Make glad their days by little acts of beauty,
And help them bear the burden of earth's load."

Oh, when shall we learn the sweet trust that our children teach us every day by their confiding faith in us? We who are so mutable, so faulty, so irritable, so unjust, and He who is so watchful, so pitying, so loving, so forgiving. Why cannot we, slipping our hand in His each day, walk trustfully over that day's appointed path, thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace and home.—Phillips Brooks.

STRANDED

On the shores of harbors, coasts of the open seas and lakes and the banks of rivers and canals old boats lie stranded. Forsaken and neglected, in various stages of ruin, they are pathetic remnants and reminders of hopes and histories that have passed. Some of them represent short and uneventful voyages in placid waters, others long buffets with tempest and whelming wave. Some have been worn out in service, some victims of sudden disaster, others abandoned as unprofitable.

Every neighborhood of city, town and country has some stranded men and women. Their stories are more varied than those of the boats—physical mischances and infirmities; mental defects; wrongs and crimes of others; follies and sins of youth; opportunity neglected or misused; unavoidable misfortune; faults of temper and disposition permitted to continue uncured. The catalogue of causes and combinations of causes might be continued indefinitely. The lepers are the most conspicuous and pitiful of the stranded of whom the Bible tells us; but judging from remarks of King Solomon, the sluggard who would not plough because it was cold and, therefore, begged vainly for food at harvest time and the sluggard wise in his own conceit and continually talking, were not infrequent three thousand years ago. Wine and strong drink and becoming surety for another contributed to the human wreckage of that time, as they do now. Shakespeare, master observer, makes King Lear stranded by excessive parental fondness and Wolsey by inordinate personal ambition. We have now the same contrasts of causes and contrasts of situations. Our stranded are to be found all the way from the county almshouses to palatial homes, all alike dependent, useless, purposeless, sorely needing comfort. Many of them have no access to books or magazines. Many have no pleasure in reading, find no other interest in life and inertly decay, like the forgotten hulks.

Most of them crave kindly companionship and evidences that somebody cares for them, sympathizes with their troubles and pain, sorrows, disappointments. Those of us who yet are strong, active and hopeful, can do nothing finer or more generous than to try to satisfy that craving sometimes, even at cost of discomfort, annoyance and deprivation for ourselves. Many of us who in line of duty might face the fires of martyrdom or any danger, shrink abjectly from being bored. Unquestionably, the stranded often are difficult—morbidly cynical and bitter, clinging to absurd vanities and assumptions of superiority, whimpering over real or supposed wrongs, servile in seeking gifts or favors or insolently boastful. Yet, all of them in their hearts yearn for attention and good will. Nothing demands human respect more imperatively than human misfortune and misery. Nothing appeals to us sinners for tolerance so strongly as suffering incurred through sin. One of the greatest of of English preachers, saved from ruin barely in time, pointed once to a cringing, drunken, begging vagrant and said that but for the infinite mercy of God te himself would have been as that man.

Too much of our charity is cold, formal, machine-directed, reaching many bodies but no hearts or souls. The stranded dwelling among us rarely are suffering for food or clothing or shelter. They suffer from the lingering, bitter, ceaseless, gnawing of heart hunger and soul hunger, often unconscious of why they suffer and for what they long. The more disagreeable they are the more they need your help because the more they are shunned. After all, the surrenders of time and inclination you make to be kind to them will not damage nor incommode you very seriously; and the good you may do and the consolation and soothing you may carry may mean much light and lifting for desolate hearts and lives and souls harboring ugly, embittered, dismal and sacriligious thought. Seek and help the stranded. Pure religion and undefiled, St. James tell us, is to visit the fatherless and the widows in their afflictions. In this country the fatherless and the widows usually have many friends. It is the stranded who so many times are left friendless and forlorn, the sting of knowing contempt, dislike, begrudges refuge, derision, avoidance, neglect, biting relentlessly.

Seek them out—the lonely shut-ins, the worn-outs, the rusted-outs, the failures, the betrayed, the unfortunate, women and men, down to the relics and waste of humanity in the almshouses. Submit cheerfully to what they do and say that is unpleasant, meet with good humor occasional attempts at impositions and wretched little hypocrisies, from some kinds; blatant misanthropy and hates from others. You can feel that you are soothing some suffering, helping at least a little. Show honest interest and desire to be helpful, satisfy wants and desires when you can. The tougher the task, the more approval of your conscience you will win, the more clearly and honestly you will have done your duty to God and your neighbor.

Like the old boats along the shores and coasts and banks, each of these stranded represents a history. Each has come from a youth of hopes and dreams and ambitions to the fading of them all and the awaiting of the call hence. Those splendid brave hearts which meet the condition gallantly, despise despair, illustrate the beautiful courage, resignation, deserve, and should receive, constant proofs and demonstrations of the honor we have for them. Usually, those who by folly or sin or neglect have incurred the fate of the stranded are most violently resentful of it, most malignantly intent on blaming others, even the Almighty. These are the most urgently needful of all for all the consideration and kindness we can give them, with the hope of bestowing consolation; of helping to make the twilight time of the stranded peaceful, giving for it brighter dreams and higher aspirations than at the dawning.

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA

Alfred B. Williams

TWO BISHOPS CONSECRATED.

Late in the summer of 1786 letters from the Archbishop of Canterbury gave notice that the necessary authority for consecration of additional bishops for this country had been given by act of parliament and saying he was ready to consecrate three bishops. Four had been elected meanwhile—Dr. Griffith, of Virginia; Dr. William Smith, of Maryland, really the first person to be chosen as bishop of a State; the Rev. Samuel Provost, New York, and the Rev. Dr. William White, Pennsylvania. An adjourned meeting of the Philadelphia Convention was held at Wilmington, Delaware, October 10, 1786, six States represented by nine clerical and eleven lay delegates. This fragment of a Convention was one of the smallest, shortest, fastest working and ablest in the history of the Church. Probably its compactness gave it speed and force and it had brains, zeal and definite purpose and object and was not, like its predecessors, compelled to stumble against a maze of doubts and uncertainties. Its business was to comply with certain requirements of the Archbishop as conditions for recognition of the American Church before consecration of its bishops. This was not difficult. Much of the work of the first Philadelphia Convention had been rejected by the respective States for various reasons, South Carolina alone having accepted the proposed Prayer Book entire. The essential parts of the Archbishop's requirements were found orthodox. The descent into Hell was restored to the Apostles' Creed. The Nicene Creed was restored and the Athanasian Creed rejected. Changes to meet changed conditions and relations of the two countries and governments were made and final revision of the liturgy was committed to a General Convention to be held in the future.

Three weeks after the adjournment of this little Convention at Wilmington the bishops-elect of New York and Pennsylvania sailed for England. Dr. Griffith, of Virginia, did not go with them and never was consecrated bishop. It was learned afterward that poverty prevented him. The two were received most affectionately and were presented by the Archbishop himself to the king, who received them kindly. It is to be remembered, in this connection, that there was strong and growing belief everywhere that in a short while the United States would split and the sections of it would be racing with each other to get back under the protection of the British government. The most friendly French observers believed a division of the republic inevitable. The Marquis de Chastellux, as early as 1783, predicted at least two republics from the thirteen States. The slavery question was not then broached, but the Marquis based his prediction on the conflicts of commercial interests and the racial and religious differences between what he called "East" and "West". Prevalence of this belief in England may explain the promptness of parliament in granting leave for consecration of American bishops and the cordiality of the king and archbishop.

Septuagesima Sunday, February 4, 1787, the first two American bishops with unquestionable authority were consecrated at Lambeth Palace by Dr. John Moore, Archbishop of Canterbury, presented by Dr. William Markham, Archbishop of York, with four other English bishops participating in the service. The two were Dr. White, Bishop of Pennsylvania, and Dr. Provost, Bishop of New York. These new bishops sailed for home February 18, and were seven weeks on the voyage, reaching New York Easter Sunday, April 7.

The conditions of the Church in Virginia at that time may be judged from the recorded fact that it was impossible to obtain in the State subscriptions to send Dr. Griffith, of Fairfax County, to England for consecration.

The two new bishops, classed in the contemporary discussions as "of the South", held off from recognition of Bishop Seabury, who, beginning with six clergymen in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, conducted many large confirmations and a number of ordinations and, in September, 1787, consecrated St. James' Church at New London, wearing a scarlet doctor's hood and a mitre, which gave some offence.

FIRST SUNDAY IN ADVENT

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

"Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which Thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last day, when He shall come again in His glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise to the life immortal, through Him who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. Amen."

This collect for the first Sunday in Advent reminds us of the two Advents—His coming long ago in great humility, and His coming in His glorious majesty in the last day to judge both the quick and the dead.

Says Bishop Coxe: "This feast of the Advent, which opens the Advent season, is one which strongly mingles the most joyous with the most appalling thoughts; for it strikes the keynote of our Christmas rejoicing; it dwells on the first Advent with especial reference to its bearing on that Advent which is yet future, and for which we are called to prepare. Our 'song is of mercy and of judgment' (101st Ps., v. 1). How salutary to the soul this annual awakening and setting forward toward immortality The Advent season should always be made one of discipline, and of solemn meditation and reading on the four last things, viz: Death, Judgment, Heaven and Hell; for all time is but the prelude to judgment and eternity."

THE Epistle for the First Sunday in Advent is Rom. 13:8-14. Of this says Bishop Coxe: "Reflect especially on the language of the Epistle, that 'it is high time to awake out of sleep', that 'the night is far spent, and the day is at hand'; and connect it mentally with the beautiful imagery of the prophet Isaiah: 'Watchman, what of the night? . . . The morning cometh, and also the night.' The resurrection draws nigh, though we must first sleep in the night of death. First awake, and fill the vessel with oil, and replenish the lamp, and then we may lie down in our graves and have no fear that our lamps will have gone out, when the cry is made and the Bridegroom comes." Note the words of the Epistle: "Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent; the day is at hand." Here, as in other places, the writer of the Epistle (St. Paul) is expecting an early return of Christ. Other writers are likeminded, notably the writer of the Revelation, who gives us in next to the last verse of the last book of the Bible the last promise and the last prayer recorded in Scripture: "He that testifieth these things sayeth: 'Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, Come, Lord Jesus.' (Rev. 22, 20). This belief must have much comforted them under persecution, when (as the writer of Hebrews says of the Old Testament martyrs), they were destitute, afflicted, tormented." (Heb. 2:37.) At the opening of the fifth seal, by the Lamb of God, described by St. John in the sixth chapter of the Revelation, the "martyred remnant", the "souls of them that were slain for the Word of God", which were "under the altar", cry out to Him for judgment against their oppressors, wondering why He delays so long.

Our Lord's immediate followers seem to have misunderstood Him and many since in the nearly nineteen centuries that have passed since His Ascension have thought His second Advent to be at hand; but He tarries still and still bids us "watch" and remember what He said, before He left His Church, "Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come" (Matt. 24:42). It is possible that it may be my privilege or yours to see that great day of the Lord and so escape the grave and gate of death. May He find us obedient and watchful!

THE Gospel for the First Sunday in Advent is St. Matt. 21:1-13. Of this Gospel Bishop Coxe says: "It is designed to contrast the meek and lowly appearance of the Great King in the days of His flesh with the royal splendors which shall surround His coming in the clouds of heaven."

His people were ready to make Him king and give Him an earthly crown and have Him deliver them from the tyranny of Tiberius, one of the most wicked and cruel of the Roman emperors. Jesus must have been strongly tempted as a man, to accept their homage and lead them to certain victory; I say certain, for though they had never seen Him use His miraculous powers to destroy any living thing (for the fruitless fig-tree dying under His rebuke, was known only to His apostles); yet they knew that He who had without the least effort fed thousands of them in miraculous abundance could heal the sick and wounded of an army at a word and even raise the slain from the dead and these Jews could fight and had fought as bravely as any soldiers in the world. What an army could have been formed of such material with such a commissariat and medical staff! Even the Roman legions under a Scipio or a Caesar could not have withstood them. In His divine nature Christ could not be tempted, but Jesus of Nazareth was also a man, a perfect man indeed, without sin and without that sinful nature to which we are born; yet He was "in all points tempted like as we are" (Heb. 4:15), and this temptation was now before Him and was just such as would appeal most strongly to a noble human nature, to a Hampden, a Washington or a Lee, a call to resist the greatest tyranny, far worse than any of modern times, such as that of a Stuart, a George III or a Lincoln.

The temptation must have been greater to Jesus even than the last and greatest of those offered Him by Satan in the wilderness; "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them", just for one act of homage; a selfish motive is apparent here; but to redeem His people from such tyranny as they endured might well seem a purely unselfish act to the man of Nazareth; as indeed it was in the case of Hampden, Washington, Lee and other true patriots of earlier and later days, who had not laid upon them, as the Son of God had, a higher and nobler duty to perform, the deliverance of not only His own people, but all mankind from the farce worse tyranny of sin and Satan.

Looked at in this light, our Saviour's refusal to do as His people wished is noble, grand, superb and patriotic with a patriotism not narrow, but world-wide and without a trace of selfishness. And looking at the whole scene in this light, it makes us more lenient in our condemnation of the Jews who crucified Jesus for failing to act as their narrow patriotism prompted. Let that be thrown off first, they might well think, and then with political freedom assured they could turn their minds to spiritual things. 'Tis a mistake into which some fall now, and in the name of "social service" give more attention to the body than to the soul of man. Let us not be too sure that, had we been there in Jerusalem on that Palm Sunday, we might not have cast palms and scattered our garments before Jesus, and then in bitter disappointment have deserted Him on Good Friday, or even joined in the cry, Crucify Him! Crucify Him!

ROBERT E. LEE

By the Late John W. Daniels, LD. D.

[The Southern Churchman commences this week the publication in series of an oration by Virginia's great warrior and statesman, the late Senator John W. Daniel, delivered at Lexington, Va., upon the occasion of the unveiling of Valentine's recumbent statue of General Robert E. Lee, one of the world's greatest Christians and soldiers, and we strongly commend the careful reading by every one of these articles as the "Lives of great men all remind us,

We can make our lives sublime."
* * * * * *
"Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."]

Mr. President, My Comrades and Countrymen:

There was no happier or lovelier home than that of Colonel Robert Edward Lee, in the spring of 1861, when for the first time its threshold was darkened with the omens of civil war.

Crowning the green slopes of the Virginia hills that overlooked the Potomac, embowered in stately trees, stood the venerable mansion of Arlington, facing a prospect of varied and imposing beauty. Its broad porch and wide-spread wings held out open arms, as it were, to welcome the coming guest. Its simple Doric columns graced domestic comfort with a classic air. Its halls and chambers were adorned with the portraits of patriots and heroes, and with illustrations and relics of the great revolution, and of the Father of His Country. And within and without, history and tradition seemed to breathe their legends upon a canvass as soft as a dream of peace.

The noble river, which in its history, as well as in its name, carries us back to the days when the red men trod its banks, sweeps in full and even flow along the forefront of the landscape; while beyond its waters stretch the splendid avenues and rise the gleaming spires of Washington; and over all, the great white dome of the National Capital looms up against the eastern sky like a glory in the air.

Southward and westward, toward the blue rim of the Alleghanies, roll away the pine and oak-clad hills and the fields of the "Old Dominion", dotted here and there with the homes of a people of simple tastes and upright minds, renowned for their devotion to their native land, and for their fierce love of liberty; a people who had drunk into their souls with their mother's milk, that Man is of right, and ought to be, free.

On the other hand, there was impressed upon the most casual eye that contemplated the pleasing prospect, the munificence and grandeur of American progress, the arts of industry and commerce, and the symbols of power. On the other hand, Nature seemed to woo the heart back to her sacred haunts, with vistas of sparkling waters and verdant pastures and many a wildwood scene; and to penetrate its deepest recesses with the halcyon charm that ever lingers about the thought of Home.

The Host of Arlington.

The head of the house established here was a man whom Nature had richly endowed with graces of person and high qualities of head and heart. Fame had already bound his brow with her laurel, and Fortune had poured into his lap her golden horn. Himself a soldier, and colonel in the army of the United States, the son of the renowned "Light Horse Harry Lee", who was the devoted friend and compatriot of Washington in the Revolutionary struggle, and whose memorable eulogy upon his august Chief has become his epitaph; descended indeed from a long line of illustrious progenitors, whose names are written on the brightest scrolls of English and American history, from the conquest of the Norman at Hastings to the triumph of the Continentals at Yorktown; he had already established his own martial fame at Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Cherubusco, Molino del Rey, Chepultepec and Mexico, and had proved how little he depended upon any merit but his own. Such was his early distinction that when but a captain the Cuban Junta had offered to make him the leader of their revolutionary movement for the independence of Cuba, a position which, as an American officer, he felt it his duty to decline. And so deep was the impression made of his genius and his valor that General Scott, commander-in-chief of the army in which he served, had declared that he "was the best soldier he ever saw in the field", "the greatest military genius in America", that "if opportunity offered, he would show himself the foremost captain of his times", and that "if a great battle were to be fought for the liberty or slavery of the country, his judgment was that the commander should be Robert Lee".

Wedded to her who had been the playmate of his boyhood, and who was worthy in every relation to be the companion of his bosom, sons and daughters had risen up to call him blessed, and there, decorated with his country's honors and surrounded by "love, obedience and troops of friends", the host of Arlington seemed to have filled the measure of generous desire with whatever of fame or happiness fortune can add to virtue. And had the pilgrim started in quest of some happier spot than the Vale of Rasselas, well might he have paused by this threshold and doffed his "sandal shoon".

So situated was Colonel Lee in the spring of 1861, upon the verge of the momentous revolution, of which he became so mighty a pillar and so glorious a chieftain.

A GOLDEN IDEA, A GOLDEN WAY, A GOLDEN STAIR

By William C. Poole

Former President of the World's Sunday-School Association.

Golden Rule Sunday has proved to be a "golden idea" for carrying people along the "golden way" of generosity. It has also been a "golden stair" up which orphaned feet have climbed to selfhood and self-respect; and only the eternities will reveal the marvellous results.

Golden Rule Sunday stands for an international benefaction. Its appeal and its response have known neither racial nor denominational barriers. It has been thought of as a legacy of a world catastrophe to be shared by the beating sympathetic heart of the world. Through the courtesy of the Near East Relief, I have had the pleasure of visiting most of the orphanages in Palestine, Syria and Greece and can testify to the splendid way in which the work is carried on. Of course, the problem has in large measure been solved, but the task at present is to conserve the gains that have been made. It is not enough to have saved these children from starvation and neglect. They must be trained for citizenship. The war seems a long distance away; the aftermath of it seems intolerably long; there is an impatience about closing up the episode; and, to our thinking, here is the danger. The job is not yet finished. We must stay with it and close it in a worthy way.

Golden Rule Sunday comes the first Sunday in December. Can we count on you to help? We do, and we know you will not fail us.

Sarma contains rice, mutton (lamb) and tomatoes.

Mix the rice, the chopped mutton and tomatoes together. Roll in cabbage leaves, which have been parboiled, into the shape of sausages. Pile in a kettle, cover with cold water, cover with a plate to hold in place and cook for about one hour.

WHAT IS INTERNATIONAL GOLDEN RULE SUNDAY?

In the autumn of 1923 an international group of social workers, meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, expressed despair of educating the world to the better day of brotherhood through the customary persuasions of war and diplomacy. Yet the aim was so infinitely to be desired! Could the persuasion of the Golden Rule be made effective If on an appointed day, say the first Sunday in December, the whole world should sit at a common table, eat bread and salt, think of the hungry and the sorrowing, and make a donation for their aid, would not a great advance be made in practical religion?

The idea fired the imagination of the world. Presidents, kings and premiers; the Pope, religious leaders and patriarchs; powerful financiers, influential statesmen, educators, labor leaders, approved and led friends and followers to a community of thought and feeling such as this old round earth has never known. On the third anniversary of International Golden Rule Sunday fifty-three countries united in its observance and contributed to the Near East Relief orphans, who are the foremost beneficiaries. The day falls on December 2 this year.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

Evening VI.

O Lord, our heavenly Father, most holy and righteous God, before whom we must all soon appear in judgment, at the end of another week we humbly bow down at Thy footstool, deeply feeling our sinfulness, deploring our unworthiness and earnestly beseeching Thee to have mercy on us.

Thou knowest all the thoughts of our hearts, and we presume to call upon Thee only in the name of Thy dear Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. We have erred and strayed from Thy ways like lost sheep; we have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts; we have offended against Thy holy law; we have done what we ought not and have left our duties unperformed. Mercifully look upon our infirmities; forgive us our sins and shortcomings; turn from us all the evils that we most justly have deserved; cleanse and purify our hearts and minds by Thy blessed Spirit; strengthen in us all holy desires and purposes; confirm our faith in Thy wisdom and power and lovingkindness; enlighten our minds more and more with the light of the everlasting gospel; make us to love Thee with pure hearts, fervently; and give us joy and peace in knowing and believing in Thee.

Grant, we beseech Thee, O Lord, that at the close of each day and week and month and year we may rejoice with ever fresh and brightening hope of joining our dear ones at home in heaven with Thee. Make us deeply sensible of the shortness and uncertainty of human life, and let us apply our hearts unto wisdom. Make us to be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord.

Keep, O Lord, Thy household, the Church, by Thy perpetual mercy, give grace and wisdom to our rulers and magistrates, that they may execute justice and maintain truth; pity the poor, the sick and the afflicted, and comfort and relieve them.

And now we humbly commit ourselves and all our dear ones to Thy care and protection for this night. Keep us from all dangers and anxieties. Give us the sleep of Thy beloved, and prepare us for the duties and privileges and sacred pleasures of the coming Sabbath day.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Our Father, etc.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate Dean of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania, 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

JUDGES.

Purpose.

The book of Judges was written to teach us the cause and result of failure to enter into the realization of God's blessings in Christ, and to reveal the grace of God that forgives, restores and encourages us to press toward the goal (Eph. 1:3; 1 John 1:9; Ps. 23:3; Phil. 3:14; Eph. 3:16; 6:10).

I. Chs. 1-2. Failure on our part to get complete victory, through Christ, over Satan, gives him unhindered opportunity to defeat us as witnesses of God's blessings (2 Cor. 2:14; Rom. 8:37; Eph. 6:10-18, comp. Rom. 8:21; 1 Cor. 3:3; Gal. 5:4, 7, 17).

1. Ch. 1:1-26. Christ is ready to give victory over Satan and sin, and to make real the blessings of God in the heavenlies to the heart wholly surrendered to Him and determined to do His will at any cost (Isa. 50:7; 64:4 R. V.; 43:13 R. V.; Eph. 1:17; Col. 1:9; Heb. 2:18; 13:8; 20, 21).

2. Ch. 1:27-36. Any feeling that we have attained the blessing, and any thought of not seeing harm in some little things, are sure ways of permitting Satan and his hosts to maintain their place as "squatters" in the heavenlies, which gives them power to lead us into sin (Prov. 16:25; Ps. 84:7; 2 Cor. 12:9, 10; Phil. 3:12-15).

3. Ch. 2:1-10. Blessing God on Sunday and cursing men during the other six days of the week does not help our children to desire, nor to have a personal heart acquaintance with the Lord (Jas. 3:8-18; Eph. 6:4; Col. 3:20, 21).

4. Ch. 2:11 to 3:4. All of God's redeemed ones who give Satan, self and sin any place in their hearts by not obeying the Lord, will find that these mighty foes are permitted to overcome them (Rom. 7:21; 12:1, 2; Col. 3:1, 2; 1 John 2:15, 16; Gal. 2:20; 6:14; 1 Cor. 6:12).

II. Chs. 3:5 to 16:31. The seven periods of Israel's declension and oppression suggest to us typically, in some measure, the seven prophetic periods and states of the Church's declension and oppression from "Thou hast left thy first love" to "Behold, I stand at the door and knock", from setting affections on some other object than Christ to shutting Him out of the heart (Rev. 2-3).

1. Ch. 3:5-31. When believers set their affections on the world instead of Christ, then the world, the flesh and the devil have power over them. From such a sad state they are delivered by the Lord through the hand of those who, like Othniel, have come into enjoyment of their inheritance, and by those, like Ehud and Shamgar, who have no strength of their own, but who trust in His strength (Col. 3:1, 2; Phil. 4:13; Heb. 11:33, 34; 2 Cor. 12:9, 10; 1 Peter 2:11).

2. Chs. 4-5. Faith like Deborah's, His faith, not only makes us victors over the god of this world, the prince of the power of the air, but makes us useful vessels in the hand of the Lord to lead others into the knowledge of their blessings in Christ (1 John 5:4; Gal. 2:20; 2 Tim. 2:21; 2 Cor. 4:4; Eph. 2:2; 6:10; Ps. 8:2).

3. Chs. 6-8. Satan's power through the lusts of the flesh is overcome by those who think not of their own comfort, like Gideon's three hundred, but who are ready to be broken like the "pitchers" that the light of His life may shine out, and who gave out His Word like a clear trumpet (Rom. 13:14; Phil. 2:3, 4; Rom. 8:13; 1 John 3:16; Gal. 2:20; 1 Cor. 14:8, 9).

4. Chs. 9-10. When fleshly ambition, like Abimelech, rules in the Church, there is sure to be reproach brought upon the Name of Christ, and judgment must come upon these things before God's people can enjoy their blessings in Christ (Gal. 5:13-15, 24; 6:7-10).

5. Chs. 11-12. Though men of faith, like Jepthah, are used to help others to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord, foolish vows, which are not of faith, may cause very great sorrow and spiritual loss.

6. Chs. 13-16. Some mighty believers separated unto God, lay their heads in Delilah's lap in their love for the lovely things of earth, and are shorn of their strength to lead others into the possession of the heavenly blessings (Jas. 4:4; 1 John 2:15; 1 Cor. 9:25-27).

III. Chs. 17-21. The standard of conduct for the unregenerate world has never been higher than to do "what was right in their own eyes", and such is the standard of the Apostate Church, but worst of all such is the standard of most believers. Their own desires, not the Word of God, is the guide for conduct.

Little wonder that few Christians know that they have been blessed in Christ, to say nothing of knowing what the blessings are. How can the Spirit use such ones to lead others into the place of blessing?

1. Chs. 17-18. Like Micah and the Danites, the preacher that pleases, who tickles the ears, is the choice of the Apostate Church, not the man of God who feeds the flock. as well as seeks the lost (2 Tim. 4:3, 4 R. V.; Acts 20:28, 32).

2. Chs. 19-21. Unrestrained by the Word and Spirit of God, sin and shame find fertile soil in the hearts of thousands who profess the Name of Christ. But thank God, there are those who are doers and not forgetful hearers of God's Word, and through them the Holy Spirit will consummate the testimony which will win the Bride for God's Son (Jas. 1:22-25; Rev. 3:8).

Book Reviews

WHEN THE SONG OF THE LORD BEGAN: By Rev. Dr. William E. Biederwolf. Cloth. Pp. 126. Price, 75c.; paper, 50c. Published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Ill.

The book takes its title from the first chapter; but the whole contribution has such a stimulating impulse that the caption is more to be prized. Dr. Biederwolf has had a long and rich experience in dealing with the presentation of Scriptural truths and the souls to whom that presentation has been made. There is a cheery, optimistic ring in this volume which captivates one. Good, sound sense; keen penetrability into the recesses of the heart; the challenge of the Gospel to the modern mind, devoid of the controversial; the author seeks to win back those who may have been lax in their devotional life, to enrich those who feel their spiritual poverty, to strengthen those who recognize the power of temptation, to restore the joy of God's salvation to all who have missed the goal.

We welcome any message that puts the song into hearts that are mute for want of reality. Undoubtedly, there would be a great revival of New Testament Christianity, if we could arouse the believers to the conviction that the secret of a happy life is within the reach of all, and that the contagion of spiritual gladness is acutely catching. At the nativity in Bethlehem, the heavenly messengers praised God for the gift; at the close of our Lord's sad life, which He so skillfully hid from His disciples, He sang a psalm with them, that dark, dread night. Conquest is within the reach of us all, if we will but catch the strains of "heavenly music" that ever make the better land ecstatic with hope.

And we mark the Doctor's point of view, for it was when "the burnt offering began" the symbol of our dedication, that the song of the Lord rang out. Verily, a good book to stow away for a Christmas gift to some dear one.

BIBLICAL ALLUSIONS IN POE: By Prof. W. M. Forrest, of the University of Virginia. Cloth. Pp. 298. By the Macmillan Company, New York. Price, $2.50.

A veritable thesaurus of this remarkable man of singular destiny. Prof. Forrest has brought to his undertaking not only consummate skill, but an ideality which will be welcomed by all lovers of Poe. While the poet was not at all identified with the Christian Church, indeed, perhaps in his mature life never entered a church building for the purpose of worship, his whole being must have been saturated with the knowledge of the Christian Scriptures. The appendix in this book contains over forty pages showing the parallelisms of Poe's writings and the Biblical texts which reflect his absorption of the Word of God.

And this contribution wins us to a lenient atitude towards this so-misunderstood man. Neurotic, temperamental, visionary, introspective, living quite in a world of his own creating, shy of the enthusiasm of fellowship, having strange vagaries, he seemed to touch the circumference of every odd thing that came within the range of his perspective. An unconscious mystic, steeped in occultism, peering into spiritism and other uncanny avenues of adventures, he had moreover what we most prize in ourselves and those we admire, a deep spirituality which needed but the guiding hand of gentle and winsome leadership. Had that been given him in his formative years, who can tell what might have been his splendid contribution to the Christian faith which he beheld with the intellect but failed to appropriate in his life?

And this leads us to meditate upon the fatalistic attitude which almost intoxicated him in his later years. Was it the result of his residence as a child in the home of Mr. Allen, his foster-father, after the death of his mother in an alms house? For the atmosphere of that home was charged with Calvinistic predestination written large and bold. Such were the times and so were many lives engendered by those times. Only Poe was so sincere that he took seriously and whole-heartedly what more superficial minds would have thrown off. Hence, he was a ready prey to those subtle influences which lead one off the beaten path of accepted truth into realms of the speculative and venturesome. So we find him espousing Pantheism, reincarnation, philosophizing as to the future life with no purpose to make provision for that life by the intervention of Saviourhood of our Lord Jesus, though he does refer passingly to "Our Saviour", "the Redeemer", "our holy religion", and once admits "a strong argument for the religion of Christ". Capable of a bleeding heart, as all poets are, he felt most keenly the griefs which crowded into his early life, among them the death of his manifestly loved young wife. The world came to be to him a sorrowful place and he was passionate in his desperate utterance as his life closed, "My best friend would be he who would blow out these damned wretched brains".

One cannot lay down this informative volume, inspirational as well, without a heart hunger that Poe may by the mercy of God, who knoweth our frame, be tenderly folded in the world of forgiveness, where joy abounds over "one sinner that repenteth". We may not pierce that realm, but we draw a kindly mantle of love over this weird life and leave it in the hands of Him, and "Where the work of life is tried, by a juster Judge than here".

MODERN RELIGIOUS DRAMAS. Edited by Prof. Fred. Eastman, of the College Theological Seminary. Cloth. Pp. 324. Published by Henry Holt and Company, New York City. Price, $3.00.

The elasticity with which the word "religious" is involved in this attractive volume is at once problematical. In the play called The Valiant, while the hero is a remarkable man for stolidity and the adherence to a brave purpose to hide himself from the knowledge of his family, while it is quite consistent that he should refuse any religious consolation ere he is hanged for murder, we cannot see where real religion enters into this otherwise strikingly written production. For him to declare that he was glad he had killed his victim; that the murdered man got all he deserved; that he regarded him as unfit to live; that he had felt it his duty to kill him, is far from the ideality of that form of religion which we are wont to call Christianity. To philosophize that "repentance is the sick-bed of the soul", when we all know that repentance is to be exercised for the joy it gives God to forgive and restore, is alien to the spirit of the Lord Jesus.

But this one play may not be considered more than "a fly in the ointment". There are some fine ethical dramas, which Prof. Eastman may think religious. That again may all depend upon the viewpoint. El Christo is a strong historical sketch and will be of value. The Color Line may well make us sensitive to our problem of the Oriental within our borders. The magnum opus of the book (indeed there are two) will be found to be Dr. Bowie's The Christmas Pageant of the Holy Grail, added to which we may note the final by Fred. Eastman, himself, America's Unfinished Battles.

The plea for this work is that the public now so intimately associated in the sphere of sight pleasure by means of the movies, needs a presentation of more serious and thought-provoking productions which will arouse the emotions and yet stimulate the sacrificial elements in the lives of the beholders and hearers. So current has become the need for plays that may be exhibited in parish houses or even churches, that Prof. Eastman feels the obligation to meet the situation by this collation.

Many will feel a repugnance to the movement. But in justice to the men and women who are sponsoring it, we should frankly admit that before the age of printing, Christianity itself was made known to the illiterate public by this very means. So that to read a book is now as familiar a way, as the play was then. Some of us find no special attraction towards it. But we may not legislate for others who see only good to be attained. Those who would make commendable use of the opportunity to bring strong acting before the audience, will find in this contribution a satisfactory ally.

THE GOSPEL BEFORE THE GOSPELS: By Burton Scott Easton, D. D. Charles Scribner's Sons, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Price, $1.75.

This book gives a clear account of the history of German criticism and of its followers during the past generation.

It has been dominated by men who reject the Divinity of Christ, so that we may know what to expect of its conclusions. We can see, too, why much of our preaching has been dry and fruitless, if it has fed at such sources. No hypothesis can be too extravagant to escape debate with ponderous seriousness. The Gospels are treated more unfairly than a criminal before a court. His innocence is presumed until his guilt is proved, but the various passages of the Gospels are viewed with suspicion until they have commended themselves to the approval of the individual critic.

Dr. Easton's conclusions are far more conservative than the majority of the men whom he quotes, but his stand is weakened by the fact that he accepts their main position, witness the title, "The Gospel Before the Gospels". The idea suggested is that the Gospels, contrary to the age-long Christian view, do not give us a true picture of Christ's ministry, but that the ingenuity of the critic has to excavate their true teaching from under the mass of legendary or mythological material with which the original picture was encrusted. If he happens to be conservative, his views may not lead so far astray, but should he be radical, there will be but little of the original pictures left.

But little more than twenty years elapsed between the Crucifixion and the beginning of St. Paul's journeys. We now know that the Sunday-school figment of a tradition orally delivered until near the death of the Apostles, was not according to the facts as recently unearthed, but that literary activity abounded. There is not the slightest a priori reason to deny that the facts of the Gospel were written down immediately after they occurred. Yet we are asked to believe that in these few short years the Apostles wove together a tissue of mythical and legendary material, not being able to distinguish truth from error, although they were disciples of Truth Incarnate, giving themselves for the highest moral cause the world has seen, and living under the influence of the Pentecostal outpouring. Was God so circumscribed that with all these influences, He could not have relayed to us a clear account of His own greatest Manifestation of Himself?

The sanctified common sense of the ordinary believer revolts at such a conclusion. To him the Gospels are not a lot of literary fragments to be dissected at the will of every one, but are fragrant with the individualities of their authors. Mark, and Peter, and Luke, are to him disciples, not names. Above all, the ordinary believer remembers the presence of the Spirit who spoke through the writers, whose activity is never once mentioned in all the dissecting.

Speaking, not as an expert along technical lines, but as an humble pastor who must teach and use God's Word in his own personal and ministerial life, the reviewer can find little help in these mechanical substitutes for a devout and reverent study of its teachings.

OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR. By the Rev. Peter Green, M. A., Canon of Manchester, Chaplain to H. M. the King. Longmans, Green & Co., Ltd., New York. Price, $1.50.

It is good to read a book by a genuine Christian, one to whom Jesus Christ is both Lord and Saviour. There is no adulteration here. Canon Green is himself a Christian; and to him the faith that is written is more than the "poetry of emotion"; and the faith that is in him is far more than an assent to the articles of the Creed.

Through entering into the mind of Canon Green, one enters into the mind of Christ. And it is by seeing Christ in others that we shall grow to know Him better. "He shows Himself to those who desire to see Him."

Canon Green tells us that there is a three-fold path to the knowledge of Jesus. First, we must "see Him", get a vision of Him. Study the story of Him in the New Testament as if for the first time. Read as if to know the "why" of a best-seller. And we must find room in our hearts and minds not only for Jesus the Carpenter of Nazareth, taking little children into His arms and blessing them, or saying to the woman taken in adultery, "Neither do I condemn thee. Go and sin no more"; but also for the Christ of St. John's vision in Patmos, the Christ in whose right hand are the seven stars, and out of whose mouth goes the sharp two-edged sword, and whose countenance is as the sun shining in its strength. And along with Jesus of Nazareth, and Jesus on the Cross, and Jesus ascended and reigning in glory, we must think of the Cosmic Christ, Him of whom St. John writes that "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made", etc. . . . Then there is the Christ of the Epistle to the Hebrews, the Great High Priest . . . and the Christ who meets us sacramentally at the altar. . . . and who meets us spiritually when two or three are gathered together. . . . All these various aspects of Christ are elements out of which the single image of our Lord and Saviour is to be built up".

Next, get an Understanding of Jesus. Canon Green says: "Only that belief is worth having of which one can truly say, "I can't help believing". So we must try to understand Him and re-interpret Him in terms of our own day and age". "We shall understand Him best when we let life and literature, and the soul's experience of ourselves and our friends, illustrate His actions and words."

And the third path to knowledge of Him is discipleship. Canon Green's words are fine: "The three stages must act and re-act on one another. The more clearly we see Jesus the more He will hold our interest and wonder, so that we shall be forced to seek to understand Him and His message. And the more we understand Him the more He will claim and receive our loyalty and discipleship. And the more we try to follow Him in daily life, the more our vision of Him will brighten, and our understanding of Him will deepen. This last is specially true. Christ bears witness to this truth when He says, "If any man will DO the will of Him that sent Me, he shall know the doctrine whether it be of God". There is nothing that so helps faith and understanding as a determined effort to practice our religion".

Then he takes up Christ's Revelation of Himself. He says: "I do not think it can be disputed that for many men one great avenue of approach to Christ, of His coming to us, is the Blessed Sacrament. . . . . Communion after communion I find Christ, and He is gracious to me—gracious as the love of God Himself," such words describe an experience which millions have shared. . . . A Bishop said: "I don't believe in the Real Presence, because I believe in the Divinity of Christ. It's the other way round. I believe in the Divinity of Christ because I find Him present at the altar to meet me."

Chapters seven to ten deal with doctrine. In these Canon Green continues to impress one with the fact that he is really Christian. "If without any pre-conceived ideas or beliefs, we start with Jesus of Nazareth as depicted for us in the Gospels, we are led on to give Him such a status and dignity as forbids us to regard Him as less than God Incarnate. If instead we start with the idea of God and try to imagine how He would become man, and what manner of man He would be, we can formulate no other answer than that He would be born and live and die as Jesus did, and be in all things like Him."

The book is solid reading. It is fine and helpful not only for Christians, but it ought to make a profound impression upon Modernists who have drifted away from and given up the faith upon which the Church was founded.

THE CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT. By H. Wheeler Robinson, M. A., D. D. Harper & Brothers, Publishers. Price, $3.00.

This book is one of the series in The Library of Constructive Theology.

It is a thorough study of the subject and it will reward any one who gives it careful reading. And only so may one do it justice.

Chapter 3, on Nature of Spirit, is an exalted presentation. Among other things, it deals with the spirit's power of transformation. For instance, the "transformation of the Cross of Christ from the wooden instrument of a dreamer's death into the supreme altar of the Christian faith". He speaks of the kinship between spirit and Spirit. "In every man there is something of God which Christ claims. Loyalty to that claim means new strength of character, new power to serve men, new peace of heart with God; it makes of life a fascinating adventure, with somebody caring for us all the way."

Speaking of Jesus: "Here in some supreme sense, Spirit has found an adequate revelation in human personality, and the kinship of spirit and Spirit is confirmed.

His chapter on The Holy Spirit and the Church is fine. He speaks of the metaphors all as implying the "unity of the Church; but that of the temple also suggests its dignity, that of the body its cooperation, that of the bride its purity". He speaks of the Church as the continued Incarnation of Christ, and quotes Fairbairn: "As Christ is the incarnation of the love of God, the Church is the incarnation of Christ's Spirit and purpose . . . the Church is His incarnation as He is God's."

The chapter on The Holy Spirit and the Sacraments is reasonable and satisfying. And the whole book is a stimulus to spiritual thinking.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart", Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. Alexander Murray, of Wise River, Md.: "My God shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus."—Phil. 4:19.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

TOBACCO.

Mr. Editor:

In common with all of our prominent daily newspapers, today's issue of the Herald-Tribune has about 60 per cent of one page devoted to the celebrated blindfold test. This time the celebrity is "Millicent, Duchess of Sutherland, daughter of the Earl of Rosslyn, who is interested in social questions and is widely known as a writer of notable books and plays. She is one of the most brilliant and active women in England." Again Old Gold carries off the palm of another so-called victory over its competitors.

With little or nothing appearing on the negative side of this subject, it is not strange that young people, especially girls, are the subjects of an organized propaganda to thrust this habit on them by the friends of the Tobacco Trust in order that it may increase its dividends.

Any one who will approach this subject with an open mind will be astonished at the array of evidence which has already been compiled against the cigarette habit. With your permission I shall submit some of these facts.

As retiring president of the American Academy of Engineers, Dr. J. A. L. Waddell, D. S. C., D. E., LL. D., gave one of the clearest and most significant pronouncements against tobacco that has ever appeared from non-medical scientific sources: "While the efforts of certain scientists to prohibit the use of tobacco have proved a failure, they have succeeded in convincing thinking men that the effect of nicotine in the system is to reduce materially one's mental acumen; consequently a very large percentage of the scientists and engineers of today do not use the weed. As a direct result of this there is a small but quite appreciable augmenting of their individual output." This observation is quite in harmony with that of the celebrated surgeon, Dr. William Mayo, who on one occasion, when entertaining a company of surgeons in his home, remarked: "It is customary to pass around cigars after dinner, but I shall not do it. I do not smoke and I do not approve of smoking. If you will notice you will see that this practice is going out among the ablest surgeons, the men at the top. No surgeon can afford to smoke."

According to Dr. J. Dixon Mann, F. R. C. P., British Medical Journal, 1908, tobacco smoke contains a formidable list of poisons, among which are the following: Nicotine, pyridine bases, ammonia, methylamine, prussic acid, carbon monoxide, sulphurretted hydrogen, carbolic acid, to which the United States Dispensary adds the following: marsh gas, nicoline, lutilin, collidin, parvolin, corodin, rubidin and viridin. To these Arnold adds three other poisons, pyrrol, formic acid and furfurol. Whatever the properties of these ingredients are is not known to his writer, but the London Lancet says of furfurol that while it is less active than nicotine, yet it is fifty times as toxic as alcohol, and that one cigarette contains as much of this poison as two ounces of whiskey.

The learned editor of the Scientific American says: "If the living substance of plants and of minute animals is so strongly affected by very small doses of tobacco smoke, it is hardly creditable that saturation of the mouth and the organs of respiration with tobacco smoke, continued many years, can be entirely free from injurious effects."

Gouget (La Presse Medicale, 1906) gave to rabbits small doses of a 10 per cent infusion of tobacco which probably contained about one-half of 1 per cent of nicotine. Many of the rabbits died within a few weeks. The rabbits suffered convulsions and their blood vessels were degenerated. Says Professor Solly, an eminent London surgeon: "The profession has no idea of the ignorance of the public regarding the nature of tobacco; even intelligent, well-educated men stare in astonishment when you tell them that tobacco is one of the most powerful poisons we possess. Now is this right? Has the medical profession done its duty? Nicotine is not the only poisonous substance present in tobacco nor, bad as it is, is it the worst ingredient in the drug." The mucous lining of the nose, mouth, lungs and air passages presents a very extensive absorbing surface, an area of 800 to 2,000 square feet, over which the whole volume of the blood is spread every three minutes. It has been shown that one-half of the nicotine inhaled is absorbed. A person who smokes an ounce of tobacco daily may absorb seven to ten grains of nicotine. Gy, of Paris, as a result of extensive experiments with denicotinized and distoxicated tobaccos, presented a paper to the Societe de Biologie, in which he proved that 4 c. c. (60 drops) of a maceration of a popular cigarette would produce death. Sir Morell Mackenzie, the famous London throat specialist, is quoted by a London author as saying that: "In considering the evils produced by smoking, it should be borne in mind that there are two bad qualities contained in the fumes of tobacco. The one is the poisonous nicotine, and the other is the high temperature of the burning tobacco. The cigarette is most certainly the worst form of indulgence, people being tempted to smoke all day long, and easily accustoming themselves to inhale the fumes into their lungs and thus saturating their blood with the poison". The fifth report of the Phipps Institute of Philadelphia says: "As with alcohol, so with tobacco, the mortality was much greater among those who used it than among those who did not. During observations of tubercular tests they found that during the fourth year 18.58 per cent of those who used tobacco died, as compared with 5.15 per cent of those who did not use it." Where the normal blood pressure is 120, it is not uncommon to find a blood pressure of 160—180 in smokers. A very definite proof that tobacco is a cause of high blood pressure is to be found in the fact that the pressure drops when smoking is discontinued. A single cigarette or cigar causes a rise of ten to fifteen points in the blood pressure (Brooks, Janeway). This means an increase in the work of the heart amounting to more than 10 per cent or a waste of twelve foot tons per day if the higher pressure remains. Every smoker suffers from tobacco heart. The best trained sprinter cannot run well after smoking a cigar or cigarette because of the reaction on his heart. Parkinson, of London, a noted heart specialist, found that the average pulse rate was nine beats higher during smoking than before. Rehfisch, who made a study of hundreds of cases, found weakening of the heart muscles in 70 per cent of all cases. Vas found the red cells reduced from 5,800,000 to 2,400,000 (very pronounced anemia). The white cells were doubled in proportion. The function of the latter is to defend the body against the attacks of germs. Tobacco disintegrates the white blood cells as well as lessens their power to combat germs.

When a person smokes the poisons taken in must be eliminated somehow. Part of the poison passes out through the lungs and the odor can be detected in the breath. Some is eliminated by the skin, the perspiration sometimes staining the garments yellow. But by far the greater part is excreted by the kidneys, which first become congested and then degenerated and diseased, the condition commonly known as Bright's disease. No intelligent trainer will permit a man preparing for an athletic event to make use of tobacco in any form. A large proportion of men is refused admittance to the army because of neurasthenic symptoms due to the use of tobacco. Not a few of those who exerence this have not the power to discontinue the use of tobacco for the reason that they have become drug addicts. How true this is is seen in the present day advertisement, "I'd walk a mile for a Camel". Why? Some would walk that far for any brand when the habit is a dope.

Dr. George Fisher conducted a series of experiments at the Springfield Y. M. C. A., by which he showed that all smokers show a loss in precision in feats requiring accuracy of aim. Old smokers showed a loss of accuracy of 11 per cent after smoking one cigar. Non-smokers, after smoking, a loss of efficiency of 13 per cent. After two cigars the non-smokers showed a loss of 18 per cent. The experiments were repeated on five days and were applied to eleven subjects. Meylan, Columbia University, in a careful study of 233 students, showed that in scholarship the non-smokers exhibited a distinct advantage. Baines, who examined the class records at Harvard, showed that for fifty years not one tobacco user has stood at the head of his class, notwithstanding the fact that five out of six students are smokers. An elaborate study of the effects of tobacco upon mental efficiency was made several years ago by Dr. A. D. Bush, of the University of Vermont. The observations were made upon medical students who were subjected to more than 2,000 separate tests of the most thoroughly scientific character to determine the influence of tobacco upon the senses and upon the mental and nervous activities. The results summarized by the author are (New York Medical Journal):

1. A series of 120 tests on fifteen men showed that tobacco decreases mental efficiency 10:5 per cent.
2. The loss in the field of imagery was 22 per cent.
3. Marked losses occurred also in the fields of perception and association.
4. The greatest injury was done by cigarettes.
5. Nicotine was found in every instance in cigarette smoke.
6. Pyridine was found invariably in tobacco smoke.

Against the cheap publicity which is given to the photographs and testimonials of these misguided dupes who are classed as celebrities, but whose knowledge of the tobacco is in inverse ratio to the almost vulgar display to which they lend their names, we have the statement of two outstanding men in the industrial world, Henry Ford and Thomas A. Edison, who collaborated in preparing a brochure on the cigarette habit entitled, "The Little White Slaver", which was circulated in tens of thousands. Although a number of years have pased since I read that brochure, yet it is my recollection that neither of these peers in their realm would employ a man who was addicted to the use of cigarettes. May not the observations of Dr. Bush explain this?

In the Journal Physicians, Volume 13, page 44, Dr. Lombard, Professor of Physiology at the University of Michigan, summarizes a series of observations as follows: The record of these successive observations shows that the effect of one cigar of moderate strength was to lessen the work of which the subject was capable from seventy-five-foot pounds to fifteen-foot pounds, and the number of times that the weight could be lifted being reduced from eighty-six to twelve. The influence of the tobacco was not felt until more than five minutes after the subject began to smoke, and it increased throughout the hour that the smoking was continued. Dr. Seaver, for many years physical director at Yale, said: "Under the influence of tobacco the young man is less alert, less steady and has less endurance." Data gathered by Dr. Frederick Pack, of the University of Utah, from fourteen State universities and colleges, led to the following significant conclusions:

1. In the tryouts for football squads only half as many smokers as non-smokers are successful.
2. In the case of able-bodied men smoking is associated with the loss of lung capacity amounting to practically 10 per cent.
3. Smoking is invariably associated with low scholarship. Smokers furnish twice as many failures and conditions as do non-smokers.

The medical director of a great life insurance company told Dr. J. H. Kellogg, to whom I am indebted for much that appears in this article, that he and the statistician of the company had independently arrived at the conclusion that tobacco is responsible for about 10 per cent of the deaths which occur in smokers.

Inasmuch as the great majority of the blindfold, cigarette-smoking tests carry the testimonial of so-called prominent women, it is but fair to say that women have just as much right to smoke as men, provided, however, that the question of motherhood is omitted. Space does not permit the presentation of scientific facts on this phase of the topic.

It is singular, if cigarette-smoking has such beneficial qualities as we are led to infer from the advertisements referred to, that women and young girls think they may indulge in the habit without harm, while the best trained champion of the ring (Tunney) recently stated in an interview that he never used tobacco. Will the Old Gold and other advertisers of their wares tell us that it is because Tunney is weak and aenemic or that he knows how much the use of the weed would handicap him as the admitted champion boxer of the world?

To such as may be users of cigarettes and who read this brief presentation of some of the evidence against the weed, it is this writer's hope that they may be stimulated to make an impartial investigation for themselves. Two books that will aid in this are, "Tobaccoism, or How Tobacco Kills", by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, and "L'Intoxication par le Tabac", by Gy, of Paris.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO YOU.

You are writing a Gospel,
A chapter each day.
By deeds that you do,
By words that you say.
Men read what you write,
Whether faithles or true,
Say! What is the Gospel
According to you?

Isn't it strange that Princes and Kings
And clowns who caper in sawdust rings
And simple folks like you and me
Are builders for eternity.

To each is given a bag of tools,
A shapeless block with a set of rules
And each must build ere time is gone
A stumbling block or a stepping stone.

God give us men,
Strong, brave and true.

THE CATHOLIC CONGRESS

Note: The following has been reported for us by one of the great heroes of our Church.—Langbourne M. Williams.

The Catholic Congress has come and gone. I inquired at the registration desk and was told that about 1,000 were registered. The sessions were held in the Pennsylvania Hotel—an admirable place for such gatherings. The Congress was a mecca for all who lean towards the mediaeval in the Protestant Episcopal Church. The word Protestant was not mentioned except in scorn and derision. One wondered what Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer would say had they been present. The very things that these stalwarts ascended to heaven for denouncing were extolled in the highest terms.

Bishop Griswold, of Chicago, at the opening session declared amidst strong applause, "We are not here to apologize for being Catholics. We are proud of the fact." The next statement was rather startling to the rank and file of the Church, "We are Catholics because we are loyal to the Church in the United States of America". That was news to many of us and I trust to many who listened. Bishop Manning, in his address, struck a very different note. He declared, "All through the length and breadth of the Church today there is a longing for a deeper and a more personal experience of religion. It is this stirring of the human soul which is expressing itself in the present strong movement for Evangelism. Men and women faced by the sin in their lives are looking for help that can meet their need. None of us want to return to mediaeval ways or modes of thought. What we want now is an experience of life in Christ as deep and as real as that of the saints in every age."

Bishop Murray was not present at any of the sessions of the Congress. I listened to several addresses that made one think he was living in the fifteenth century instead of the twentieth. The terms used by most of the speakers were those of the Middle Ages shining through the theology then present. Masses were said in a number of the parishes with a number of well-known Bishops pontificating. Not knowing what that term would mean in the Protestant Episcopal Church, your correspondent attended one such service at oen of the largest parishes where such things are doubtless frequent. I was soon convinced that it was a work of supererogation to have spent so much time in revising the Prayer Book when a few determined priests led by some Bishops can accomplish in a short time what it took years to do, and then did not finish, in that direction. Many things were done that were not found in either the Bible or the Prayer Book, and when they finally came to some parts that were understood by ordinary Churchmen, the celebrant omitted the General Confession and the Comfortable Words. What they added, however, was sufficient to make up for the loss of the rest.

The reason for these actions was possibly explained by the rector of Ascension Church, Chicago, in one of the closing addresses on Thursday night. He boldly said that a number of priests who were determined to enrich the service or to restore things as they thought they should be would not be restrained by any General Convention in which the laity had the power of veto. In other words, priestly arrogance is once more asserting itself. He further stated that those who believed that the mass should be said in tones that the people could understand were going contrary to the custom of both the Western and the Eastern Churches. He distinguished between Protestant piety and Catholic sanctity. One can agree that people who are nurtured on such ancient errors would naturally develop very different characters from those who are accustomed to feed upon the nourishment provided in our own Prayer Book services.

The one thing that all must be impressed with is that these men believe something very strongly and sincerely. They made no prtense of deriving their authority from Bible or Prayer Book, so far as I could gather, but rather from the traditions of the Mediaeval Church. Very little was said about the need of the Holy Ghost for service, but a great deal about Benediction, the Confessional, the Adoration of the Virgin, and other strange acts of devotion. I wish that Evangelicals would imitate their courage and enthusiasm for what they believe to be the true worship of God.

Diocese of Eau Claire Established.

The Primary Council of the Diocese of Eau Claire met at Christ Church, Eau Claire, Wednesday, November 21, with Bishop Weller, of Fond Du Lac, presiding.

After the preliminaries formally establishing the Diocese had been perfected, the election of a Bishop followed. An informal ballot was taken, which showed such a preponderance of votes for the Rev. Frank E. Wilson, rector of Christ Church, Eau Claire, that the first informal ballot was made unanimous for his election.

A committee was appointed to notify Dr. Wilson of his election, which was accepted without delay contingent upon the consent of the Bishops and Standing Committee of the Church.

A Standing Committee was elected consisting of the Rev. R. D. Vinter, chairman; Rev. H. S. Ruth, Rev. H. E. Chase, Rev. F. R. Keicher, and Messrs. S. G. Moon, E. S. Mellinger, Gunder Anderson and Judge Baldwin.

The trustees of the Diocese were also elected, consisting of the Bishop ex-officio and Messrs. G. Van Steenwyk, Otto Von Schrader, A. R. Owen and F. S. Thompson. For Secretary of the Diocese the Rev. A. H. Head was elected, and for Treasurer Mr. Otto Von Schrader. Mr. R. W. Owen was elected Missionary Treasurer. Mr. G. O. Linderman was appointed Chancellor of the Diocese, and the Examining Chaplains appointed were the Rev. R. D. Vinter and the Ven. W. F. Wolfe.

The Council concluded with a banquet at which the speakers were Bishop Weller, Bishop Webb, Bishop Ivins and Dr. Wilson.

Charles R. Wells.

In the death of Charles R. Wells at Bay City on Friday, September 21, the Diocese of Michigan, has lost one of her great laymen. For many years Mr. Wells had been an enthusiastic and tireless worker in the Episcopal Church, local, diocesan and general. At the time of his death he was Senior Warden of Trinity Church, Bay City, a member of the Executive Council of the Diocese, and a delegate to the General Convention. During the Centennial Fund Campaign last year he was chairman of the State organization. Mr. Wells

The Care of Ideals.

Louis Deschamps.

It is usually assumed that the older a person becomes, the less he believes in ideals. A young person is said to be disillusioned as one ideal after another is lost or forsaken. Cynics and pessimists complain of the drear emptiness of their lives, the chill of logic having destroyed the warmth and joy of ideals. It is a tragic mistake to resign one's self to the sordid conception of life that expects nothing more than the bare facts of existence, work, and suffering, as if beauty and inspiration were vain illusions. Ideals are the highest conceptions of which the mind is capable. They are the sensitive guests of the spiritual realm, easily offended by indifferent attitudes and the harsh tones of worldly wisdom. Everybody realizes their great power at times, keeping them from a vague idea of their value, yet loath to give them confidence. Some people dress their ideals in the gay draperies of sentiment, and mockingly worship them in the fair weather of convenient moods. Others keep them as ornaments, like the shells of once living things, to display them on occasion.

The woes and hardships of life make it easy to neglect these powerful allies of the spirit. A disappointment charged to the faith once placed in an ideal is an injustice, because ideals are infinitely greater than any material venture with which they may have been connected. Unless one recognizes something greater, more universal and ultimately more real than the vicissitudes of his own little span of years, there is no cure for the miserable cynic or the sour-minded pessimist. Ideals are the best friends in the bitterness of so-called disillusionment, for they would turn the gaze upward to the beauty of their realm, rather than downward into the smallness of selfish attitudes.

Modern philosophy and literature are obsessed with realism, the bald facts of life's defects supreme over the ideals and morals that would overcome them. There are people who pride themselves on their impartial logic, their heroic endurance of a painful concentration upon the sordid things of life. Even young people, whose vision and inspiration are the hope of progress, find themselves caught in the current of realism to the disappointment and disillusionment of cherished ideals. Many brilliant young minds are driven to barren, heartless philosophies by the fear of being called narrow and unintelligent. The sophistication and worldly wisdom of young people are threatening the ideals that centuries of human experience have established. Even such vital forces as religion and love have been paralyzed for many by the cold, self-centered attitudes of those who scorn ideals.

The first requirement in the care of ideals is that one must sincerely believe in them. It is not enough to assume a condescending attitude, complacently indulgent of life's most powerful spiritual forces. The cause of such suspicion of idealism is the tyranny of misfortune over convictions. An unfortunate event in an individual life will often destroy faith in an ideal, simply because one's standard of sincerity is no higher than one's own fallible judgment. Ideals require a fire and abiding faith. Even a severe disappointment in one's personal experience is not sufficient cause to put aside an ideal which has proven its value in the larger court of human history. Misfortune is the test rather than the denial of ideals.

Loyalty is essential in the care of ideals. Even though sincerely convinced of the value of ideals, one is sometimes tempted to join in the common derision of things sacred that marks the popular display of worldly wisdom. In fear of hypocrisy, the finest things are often rough-handled in the crowd, lest one give the impression of self-righteousness. Yet such reactions against personal opinions are very dangerous, because assumed irreverence may become actual. Ideals can not survive the attempt to serve God and Mammon. Loyalty can be observed even by silence. In adversity and despondency, one must remember the example of Job, and remain loyal to ideals even though their presence is not evident in the particular fortune of the individual.

When an ideal seems impossible or impractical, it means that some temporary, small consideration is triumphant over a permanent, universal principle. Whatever the circumstances, adversities, or limitations of an individual life may be, ideals open the way for vision, inspiration, and meaning to life. Reduce everything in life to the smallness of the purely logical viewpoint, draw in the horizon to conform to mortal vision, decide every problem selfishly, and the function of idealism is manifest. There is a grandeur in the mere thoughts that ideals inspire. The wholesome effect of a positive, cheerful attitude is worth the effort to cherish ideals. The happiness of a life transformed by faith and consecration to finer, greater things is what ideals offer to every one. Duty, love, chivalry, and honor are ideals worthy of devotion. Ideals are closely related to religious faith. Spiritual power is too sacred to be reasoned out of existence. Unless one's vision exceed his reach, there is no incentive to aspire toward better things. Ideals constitute the morale of human progress. Even a dying soldier's heart is cheered by the stirring bugle call, for he knows that the sacred Cause is, after all, greater than his own life.

The Shepherd Heart.

It takes time to achieve the shepherd heart. We may realize in one swift moment that we are called to be shepherds of men, even though our flock consist only of a few humble folk, of a Sunday-school class, perhaps; but it takes time to mould our ungracious natures to a shepherd's disposition, to impart to our clumsy minds a shepherd's skill. For the shepherdly heart is composed of qualities that ripen slowly, and not without hard travail. The shepherd-life is grounded in humility. A shepherd makes no figure in the world. There is no room for the showy and the impressive in his life. He spends his days alone with his sheep and the watching stars. He is well acquainted with failure; and when he has folded ninety-and-nine sheep, he dare not give rest to his eyes, or lay unction to his heart, or find quietude for his mind until the one that was lost is safely recovered. The shepherd thinks and loves in units. Ecclesiastics count men by denominations; social reformers appeal to masses and classes; preachers think in audiences. But the true tender of flocks calls his sheep one by one. The ninety-and-nine cannot console his heart for the loss of one straggler; the waywardness of the last and least cannot be forgotten by preoccupation with the flower of the flock. A shepherd's love is not a vague, general sentiment which leaves the heart unwrung, but an individual passion which holds pain in its bosom. The very nerve of true shepherding is compassion. Shepherds have a sensitive instinct for the troubles and sickness of their flocks. No one can walk among the hills without coming upon strong, weather-beaten men in whose quiet, patient eyes something of a mother's compassion lies brooding. We sometimes speak of "the man for the hour". The man for the human hour is the shepherd.—E. Herman.

Recollections of Phillips Brooks.

It would be difficult to discover the secret of the spell that Bishop Brooks' preaching had on people. It lies hidden in that subtle thing, personality. He had, at times such an influence on me that I was affected physically. I felt as if I might be the string of a harp upon which a master hand was playing. I vibrated to his touch. But of this I am convinced, that much of the secret of his power lay in his experimental knowledge of human life, worked out in his pastoral relationships. There is no need of setting preaching and pastoral visiting one against the other. The good pastor is always worth listening to in the pulpit.

My last memory of Bishop Brooks is of a couple of weeks before he died. St. Stephen's Church was situated in a neighborhood known and loved by him. He once said to me as we walked through the squalid streets that he learned to come and live among the people resident there. It was originally known as the Boston "Neck". When we built our parish house, after delving a bit, we struck the beams of a wharf and after that, the deep blue sea. As I was sitting reading in the Diocesan House, the Bishop thrust his head in the door. Seeing me he sang out, "Hello, Brent! How are things down on the 'Neck'? Stiff?" and vanished, leaving behind the echo of a deep-throated laugh. Two weeks later his mortal remains were carried shoulder-high by a corps of students out of the [illegible] to their last resting place in Auburn.—Bishop Brent, in Living Church.

THE GREAT REFINER.

Malachi 111:3.*

'Tis sweet to feel that He who tries
The silver, takes His seat
Beside the fire that purifies,
Lest, too intense a heat—
Raised to consume the base alloy—
The precious metal, too, destroy.

'Tis blessedness to know that He
The piece He has begun,
Will not forsake till He can see
To prove the work well done—
An image by its brightness known,
The perfect likeness of His own.

But, ah! how much of earthly mold—
Dark relics of the mine
Lost from the ore—must He behold,
How long must He refine,
Ere in the silver He can trace
The first faint semblance of His face.

Thou great Refiner, sit Thou by Thy promise to fulfill;
Moved by Thy hand, beneath Thine eye,
And melted at Thy will;
Oh, may Thy work forever shine,
Reflecting beauty pure as Thine!

—Anon.

*Based on the statement of an old-time smelter that he did not consider the metal sufficiently refined to withdraw from the fire until his own image reflected in it.—Selected.

The Secret Places.

"Because—therefore" are the keywords of His benediction. "Because he hath set his love upon me—therefore will I deliver him." "Because he hath known my name—therefore will I set him on high." "Because he hath called upon me—therefore will I answer him" —sometimes with an answer that sounds like "No", but always with an answer and always with love. "Because he is in trouble—therefore will I be with him, satisfying him with the light of life, while he revels in the sense of salvation."

We turn like tired, disappointed children from the enticing words. It sounds like a fairy tale. The phrases are beautiful, the pictures are lovely. But we are certain it cannot be real.

Yet here is a gate through which men seem to be entering it. We can find the portal far back in the opening verse of the psalm—"He that dwelleth in the secret places of the most high". Indeed, it seems like a secret place to most of us. But it is not kept secret from us! It is kept secret for us! It is a trysting place where we may find our peace. And the path to the secret place is prayer—frequent, consistent, trustful, confessing, interceding prayer! —Dr. B. C. Clausen, in "Baptist".

We have been placed upon the Way, we have been taught the Truth, we have been made partakers of the Life. The Way must be traversed; the Truth must be pursued; the Life must be realized. Then cometh the end. Our privileges, long as it may be or short, if we have walked in Christ, will leave us by the throne of God; our partial knowledge, if we have looked upon all things in Christ, will be lost in open sight; our little lives perfected, purified, harmonized in Him whom we have trusted, will become, in due order, parts of the one Life when God is all in all.—Bishop Westcott.

THY WILL BE DONE ON EARTH.

F. B. Stone.

Come unto me, my Lord, in me abide,
So may the Father's will in me be done,
And done by Thee who knoweth all His will,
Thus may His will be done in every one.

Just as God's will is done today in heaven,
So may His will in us on earth be done,
By giving unto Thee our hearts to rule,
Doth each become for Him a kingdom won.

A kingdom yielded through our love for Thee,
Who came to earth as evidence of love,
To show the Father's love to every one.
And link us with the Father-heart above.

So strong was Thy great love for all mankind,
That death itself was not too much to pay,
That Thou micht'st win a world so lost in sin,
To God through Thee, a new and living Way.

Through Thy abiding, living thus within,
Thou dost in truth become a living way,
That leads us to the Father—God above,
As Thou in us dost do His will each day.

THE LITTLE BOY WHO DIDN'T WANT TO TAKE A BATH.

George Morgan Knight, Jr.

Part III.

The Eventful Day.

Monday proved uneventful, but Jimmy grew dirtier and as the neighbors expressed it, "needed a bath more than ever". But Jimmy was of another opinion.

Tuesday as he went to school none of his friends would walk with him and he knew why.

"You are too dirty to play with, and we are forbidden to come near you," John Smithe had called from across the street.

And in school in the closeness of the room, the teacher looked his way often and made a funny little face when he passed her desk. The girls, he knew, never looked or smiled his way. He had overheard one of them talking and learned that Edwinetta was going to have a party Friday. She always had such nice ones and generally, he was invited. Most of the invitations were out and he had not gotten one.

As he went out of school on Friday he met Edwinetta on the steps. She was a particular favorite, and was very pretty and graceful.

"Jimmy," she said, coming toward him as he lingered on the last step, "I'd love to have you come to my party, but on account of you trying to win that five dollars, mother said I couldn't invite you. I admire you for trying to win it and I hope you do. I will miss not having you, but you see I have explained the reason. But I'm going to send you some of the cake and cream. You shan't be left out entirely."

"I'll appreciate it, Edwinetta," Jimmy said moving away; "you are the only one who has spoken to me for a long time. And five dollars is really worth working for. But I don't blame your mother at all. I am dirty. I do need a bath!"

And then Jimmy began to realize that most of his friends had forsaken him. They were ready at first to envy him, and treat him like a hero, but now they passed him. He felt lonesome.

As the evening began to fade, Jimmy Jones was reading by the window. It seemed all at once his skin grew irritated and he felt he was never as dirty in all his life. His headached, and his skin seemed to grow hot. He fought to keep his mind on the book he was reading. From far across the block came the happy voices of the children returning from the party.

And Jimmy knew had he not entered this contest for five dollars he, too, would have been coming home. It had been lonesome and he had missed his mother dreadfully, and was five dollars worth all this pain? Couldn't he have earned it in some other way, and still have kept his friends? For we must have some friends no matter how few. Now, if he had lived in the country and water and bathrooms are scarce there for baths it might have been easier, but in the city where it was little trouble to get a bath it was more trouble to do without than he had imagined.

Dropping his book in the chair he rushed up the steps, and turned on the bath water. The steaming water did not take long to fill the tub to the desired level, and while it was doing so Jimmy was quickly disrobing himself before the heater. He would bathe, and be clean! He could earn his five dollars in another way.

Testing the water to the right temperature, and cooling it down till it suited him, at last he got in. With lots of soap and a wash cloth, he scrubbed the dirt away. The warm water and soap made him feel better, and he wondered how he could have gone without the bath. Then he got out and put on his clean clothes.

When he came down his daddy was sitting at the supper table.

"How are you getting along without your bath? Tomorrow the two weeks are up and you will get your five dollars, Jimmy."

"No, I won't! I have tried to go without taking my bath and all the boys and girls would not go with me. I ached all over, and I could not go without a bath any longer. I have just taken mine. I am going to try and earn five dollars in another way, and have my friends. I'd lots rather be clean and have my friends than to be dirty and be rich and lonesome," Jimmy declared, slipping into his place.

His father smiled at him across the table.

"I thought I could win that money when my father offered me the same chance, but I found, like you, it was better to be clean. I wanted you to see for yourself that it is necessary for all of us to take baths. For them we learn why cleanliness is the best policy after all."

When bedtime came Jimmy went to his room. He undressed and got into the nice clean bed, and he was clean. He breathed the pleasant smell of clean spread and sheets and pillows. And as Jimmy dozed off to sleep he thought he had never smelt such a fine smell before. And he realized that although he had lost his five dollars, he had learned it was not so bad after all to take a bath. He knew deep down in his boyish heart he only had hated the trouble of it when he wanted to go out and play or do something else. That was his reason, after all.

The day which he had been promised to get the money for not taking a bath arrived. It was bright and sunshiny. It was the eventful day. As Jimmy dressed, suddenly a thought came to him. After breakfast he got his wagon and, filling it with old junk he had collected in the cellar, went to the junk dealer. His express wagon was piled high with old iron.

"How much do I get?" asked Jimmy when the man had weighed it on his scales and deducted the wagon's waste.

"One dollar; it is pretty heavy, and good stuff. If you can bring me any more like this I'll give you a dollar per hundred pounds," replied the junk dealer. "Here is the dollar, sonny."

"Thank you, sir; I think I can get some more."

So off Jimmy went. With great speed he was back again and received another dollar. With three other trips, he had cleaned out the cellar and had five dollars in his pocket.

"Daddy, I made five dollars after all," Jimmy said when his father came in that night. "You see, the bath cleared my head and started me to thinking. Then I remembered I had saved lots of old junk in the cellar and perhaps I could sell it. I had lots of fun doing it. The other boys saw me and I told them about my money-making scheme. They, too, are looking for old junk, but I beat them to it and have had mine saved up. So really that lesson did me good and gave me five dollars after all."

"I didn't think that experiment would hurt you, and thought while mother was gone I'd let you try it. She will be real pleased when she learns about how you made your money. And, you see, a bath isn't so bad to take, now is it?"

"No. And I don't think that I'll mind taking one any more. I think it was just the trouble of getting ready for it, and most boys, I believe, think the same thing."

"Mother is coming home tonight at seven-twenty. If you'll hurry we can make it to the station before the train pulls in. Put on your cap and come on," Mr. Jones said, looking at his watch. "It's seven o'clock now."

"Just let me put this money in my bank," Jimmy said, and went for his cap.

(The end.)

Getting Music Out of Three Strings.

A recent writer speaks of a great violinist who was rendering one of the famous compositions of the violin at a concert. Suddenly one of his strings snapped. The musician might have stopped and replaced the string and begun his number over again, but, instead, master of the instrument that he was, he played it through on three strings, receiving at the end almost deafening applause from his audience. They cheered him not only for his music, but even more for his achievement of success under difficulties.

To play on three strings instead of four is the test which hosts of men and women have met successfully. In spite of a severe handicap they have made glorious music out of their lives. John Milton was blind, but he wrote one of the masterpieces of English literature. "Paradise Lost". Henry M. Stanley spent much of his early life in an almshouse, but he won knighthood through his triumphs as an African explorer. Beethoven was afflicted with a growing deafness, yet he is recognized as one of the world's greatest composers of music. Robert Louis Stevenson fought a long losing fight against tuberculosis, but he is known as a prince among writers. Frances Ridley Havergal suffered from almost lifelong invalidism, but her devotional poems and hymns have been a blessing to the world.

All of these handicapped souls have been victorious in spite of having to make music on three strings. The violinist could have replaced his broken string, but in their cases there was no choice. They had to play on three strings or not play at all.

Probably not one of the young men and women now starting out in life but at some time or other will find that they face the alternative of failure or of making music on three strings.

When Paul faced this testing time he stated the secret of his victory in words whose truth has inspired millions since: "When I am weak, then am I strong . . . I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Selected.

Having made the world into a single whole through the improvement of means of communications, mankind is now confronted with the urgent necessity of establishing a moral unity, so that the races may live contentedly and happily together. But there is no moral unity that is at all adequate apart from Christ. Christianity is the only unifying power of world-wide efficiency that has yet appeared.—Bishop of Honan (China).

WON'T YOU SHARE YOUR CHRISTMAS JOY WITH THESE

—and help us bring to the suffering lepers of the world a practical expression of the depest meaning of Christmas.

Hi Bongi le." That is, "Thank you so very much" in polite African. So say this mother and baby in our new Leper Camp in Portuguese, East Africa. You can "touch" them with your gifts as the doctor touches them with medical skill and healing.

The American Mission to Lepers provides kindly, Christian care and scientific medical treatment for outcast lepers and their children at more than 100 centers in twenty countries. It cooperates with all agencies in freeing the world from leprosy.

Christ set the example of pity for the lepers. It is fitting that on His Birthday we should remember those for whom the Master was so deeply concerned.

WHAT DOLLARS WILL DO.

$3.00—A pair of blnakets—a comforting message night and day to some suffering leper.

$5.00—A cake of soap for each leper in a whole colony. (Soap is so valued under their new standards of cleanliness that they will frequently trade food for a little extra soap.) Five dollars also provides sufficient food for two months.

$10.00—Two years of weekly treatment with Chaulmoogra Oil, a period sufficient to cure a patient in the early stages.

$40.00—Complete care, food, clothing, shelter and medical treatment of adult leper for one year. $30.00 will give the same to a child.

LET THE AMERICAN MISSION TO LEPERS SAY MERRY CHRISTMAS for you to some leper who has ceased to believe that any one cares about him.

THE LAST WORD OF BISHOP BECKWITH ON THE SUBJECT OF HIS CHURCH COURSE OF INSTRUCTION

I have written "The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer", not to supplant any Course of Instruction now in use, but as a workable foundation for them all. The Church has designated certain fundamental facts as the basis of Christian Education. These must be definitely and accurately learned, if intelligent progress is to be made.

Apart from the Person of our blesed Lord, Christianity is a study,—Science. No science can be taught as a whole. Having learned the Multiplication table, Mathematics must be taught and learned by subjects. When the Subjects—Arithmetic, Algebra, etc., have been accurately learned, the Science of Mathematics has been mastered. In like manner Christianity must be taught by Subjects. This is the principle underlying our Course of Instruction.

In the Infant Department, among other things that hold the attention and interest of little children, as secure and accurate committing to memory of the Creed, The Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments. These are the First things—The fundamental facts underlying both the personal Christian life and the study of Christianity.

Then we carry these on by example, enlargement and illustration through Four grades.

Grade I. The Church Catechism, which is only a development of the Creed, The Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments, 25 cents.

Grade II. The Church Year. The first half of the Church Year, from Advent to Trinity, presents the Great Events of our Lord's life. These are in the Creed, as articles of our Faith. The second half of the Church Year, from Trinity to Advent, presents the Moral Law as contained in the Ten Commandments. The Lord's Prayer is involved in both. 25 cents.

Grade III. The Book of Common Prayer. This carries the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments on into the Public Worship of the Church. 50 cents.

Grade IV. The Collects, Epistles and Gospels. These take us into the introductory study of The Holy Bible, which is the final authority upon which we accept the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments. 50 cents.

The Course of Instruction, compiled from the Book of Common Prayer, we have sent forth as the foundation work of our Church Schools. When this primary work is done, any system for advanced study may be used to the best advantage.

VITAL FACTS

ABOUT

JAMESTOWN, YORKTOWN, WILLIAMSBURG, COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY

May 13, 1607.—The first permanent English settlement in America was made at Jamestown by colonists sent out by the London Company.

September 10, 1608.—Captain John Smith began to serve as president of the council, the chief executive official of the colony.

October 4, 1609.—Captain John Smith took passage for England, leaving George Percy as his successor. Captain Smith never returned to Virginia.

October, 1609-June, 1610.—The starving time. Of about 500 settlers, 60 survived.

June 7, 1610.—Every one embarked from Jamestown for England. Two days later, all the original colonists returned with Lord De La Ware, who brought supplies and additional settlers.

May 10, 1611.—Sir Thomas Dale arrived in Virginia.

September, 1611—The town of Henrico founded by Dale.

1612.—John Rolfe began the cultivation of tobacco.

April 1, 1614.—About April 1, 1614, Pocahontas was married to John Rolfe; peace with the Indians prevailed until his death.

June 12, 1616.—Sir Thomas Dale arrived in Plymouth, England having left the colony in "great prosperity and peace, contrary to many men's expectations".

March 21, 1617.—Pocahontas died at Gravesend, England.

July 30, 1619.—The first negroes landed at Jamestown.

July 30, 1619—The General Assembly of Virginia petitioned the London Company to send workmen for erecting the university buildings.

March 22, 1622.—An Indian Massacre occurred for the first time in America. Three hundred and forty-seven were slain out of a population of 1,240.

June 26, 1624.—The charter of the London Company was declared null and void, and Virginia vecame a royal province.

1630.—Sir John Harvey arrives with commission as governor of Virginia.

August, 1641.—Sir William Berkeley commssioned as governor of Virginia.

April 18, 1644.—The second Indian massacre in Virginia occurred. About three hundred were killed.

March 12, 1652.—The colony surrendered to representatives of Parliament.

March, 1660.—Sir William Berkeley elected governor by the General Assembly.

September 20, 1660.—Governor Berkeley orders that Charles II be proclaimed king throughout Virginia.

1676.—The year of Bacon's Rebellion. Jamestown was burned by Bacon September 19, 1676. Nathaniel Bacon, Jr., died October 26, 1676, in Gloucester County.

Octiber 31, 1698.—State house at Jamestown destroyed by fire.

April, 1699.—Middle Plantation, now Williamsburg, was made the seat of government, by act passed at the April, 1699, session of the Assembly. After the ermoval of the capitol Jamestown was gradually abandoned as a town.

June 6, 1781.—A battle was fought between the forces of Lafayette and Cornwallis in the region between Green Spring and Jamestown. On July 7, Cornwalis, with all his trops, crossed the river at Jamestown.

May 13, 1807.—Celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the island; 2,000 people present. Briscoe G. Baldwin orator.

1837.—Only one residence on the island, the Ambler house.

1861.—The island was occupied by about 500 Confederate soldiers. An earth fort was constructed near the church.

1888.—Celebration at Jamestown by faculty and students of William and Mary College.

In recent years a most notable event was the presentation by Mr. and Mrs. Edward Barney of twenty-one and a half acres of land, including the church yard, to the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities. To aid in the preservation of the island, the United States government has erected a substantial sea wall. On May 13, 1907, the three hundredth anniversary of the settlement of Jamestown was celebrated on the island; Hon. James Brice was guest of honor at that time. On May 11 1907, the Memorial Church was presented to the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities by the National Society of Colonial Dames of America. The bronze statue of John Smith, erected by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bryan, was unveiled May, 1909. In 1922, the bronze statue of Pocahontas, presented by the National Pocahontas Association, was unveiled. In 1922, the bronze memorial to Robert Hunt was unveiled.

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the beauty and color of these jewels become visible. Could a more beautiful monumental stone be found anywhere than this?

Winnsboro Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable mineral known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

Death

MacBLAIR: Entered into Life Eternal, on Sunday, September 30, 1928, HARRY FIQURES, the surviving twin son of the Rev. and Mrs. R. E. MacBlair, of Aberdeen, Miss., age thirteen months and three days.

"And a little child shall lead them."

MISS MARY PAGE LEE.

The home going of MISS MARY PAGE LEE, of Millwood, Clarke County, Virginia, on November the seventh, removed from our midst a consistent communicant, a sympathetic and loved relation and friend. Her death occurred in Richmond, Virginia, while on her way to spend the winter with her brother, Rev. William B. Lee, and his family, in Gloucester, Virginia. She was buried in "The Old Chapel" Cemetery, Clarke County, Va. The Rev. William Nelson, Rector of Christ Church, Winchester, Virginia, officiated at the funeral, in the absence of the Rector of the Parish at Millwood—who was at the death bed of his wife. Miss Mary Lee was much beloved in the neighborhood, as manifested by the large gathering of relatives and friends at her grave. She was laid to rest amid a profusion of autumn flowers, by the side of her parents and other dear ones. She was the daughter of Colonel Richard Henry Lee and his wife, Evelyn Byrd Page. These names suggest her ancestral heritage—both families going back to Colonial days, of which she was a representative. Refinement, so characterised her bearing, that all who came in contact with her recognized true Christian womanhood. Her kindness went out to the sick and troubled—ever loyal to her rector and generous to the Church, so far as her means allowed. I have noticed in the missionary assets of the Church the offering she made some years ago that bears its annual interest in behalf of Missions. The death of her brother Richard Henry, with whom she lived, broke up the old home, "Grafton", so full of sacred memories. She is survived by two brothers and one sister, the Rev. William B. Lee, Gloucester, Virginia, Rev. Dr. Charles H. Lee, St. Simons Island, Georgia; and Eliza Atkinson, wife of Bishop Winchester, of Arkansas.

We think of one so ready to depart, who most patiently bore her long illness, as hearing from the Blessed Saviour the words, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord".

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

was born in Ann Arbor in 1852, the oldest of the four children of Dr. and Mrs. Ebenezer Wells, and was the last survivor of the family. He was educated in the Ann Arbor public schools and in the University of Michigan, becoming a member of the Chi Psi Fraternity and graduating with the class of 1873.

Charles Wells was a truly great Christian. He was a great servant. He gave with royal generosity of his material means to the cause of Christ, but he offered in equal measure of his time and his heart's interest. Never did he consider his financial assistance as a substitute for his personal presence in Church. He truly believed his own attendance at public worship to be an essential feature of his contribution.

On Monday morning, September 24, a Requiem Eucharist was offered for the repose of his soul, in thanksgiving for his life and example, and in supplication that God might bless him in the higher and more perfect service above. In the afternoon the Church was filled with a congregation of his fellow parishioners and his many business and fraternal associates throughout the community. At this service Bishop Page spoke feelingly of the character of him who had been not only a most valued helped, but also a most devoted friend. Mr. Wells was married in 1882 to Isabella Fitzhugh, by whom he is survived, together with a dau ,rehgtrsM.o vived, together with a daughter, Mrs. J. Stanley See, and a son, William Wells, and six grandchildren, all of Bay City.

Boys' Clinic.

Under the direction of Mr. I. C. Johnson, Diocesan Director of Boys' Work in the Diocese of Michigan, a Boys' Clinic will be established. This will be a constructive effort to meet the need of parents who are faced with a problem of behavior in their children and who do not desire to take it to one of the public social agencies to be written up as a "case", and plans are under way for the establishment of a clinic to which parents of our Church youth in the diocese may turn for advice and enlightenment. Mr. Johnson's advice in his clinic will be largely that of the application of common sense to the solution of a problem, based on more than ten years' experience in dealing with the problems of hundreds of boys, plus the scientific information he has acquired during those years. The plan goes further, however, in that the clinic will have as consultants an expert in the field of vocational psychology, a trained psychiatrist, and a physician equipped through special education to deal with certain cases which involve physiological difficulties. When in operation, the clinic, which will function during certain hours of the week, will be located probably in a room afforded by one of our parish houses in Detroit, where personal visits to the Director may be made. Arrangements are also being completed and plans being drawn up with the advice of the consultants, so that parents at some distance from Detroit who are anxious to avail themselves of the facilities of the clinic may do so by mail and through filling out certain forms now being prepared.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop.

A conference of clergy and laity of the diocese was held in Montgomery, October 30 and 31, in preparation for the Church's Program and Crusade on Evangelism for the coming year. All visitors were entertained at the Greystone Hotel, while the services and conferences were conducted in St. John's Church, nearby, the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, D. D., rector.

The bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, D. D., made the opening address, explaining the purposes of the conference and introducing the main spkear, the Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, D. D., of the National Field Department. Dr. Schmuck spoke four times during the conference, bringing an invigorating message.

The Rev. W. J. Loaring-Clark, D. D., of the National Field Department, was also present for a short time, making a valuable contribution in a single address on Evangelism.

Other speakers were the Rev. R. A. Kirchhoffer, of Mobile, who was responsible for the arrangement of the program; the Rev. A. W. S. Lee, formerly of Anking, China; the Rev. James M. Stoney, Executive Secretary of the Diocese; the Rev. Edgar Van W. Edwards, of Atmore, Ala., and the Rev. Charles Clingman, rector of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham.

There were also addresses by Mrs. D. E. Wilson, Diocesan Executive Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Mr. Algernon Blair, Chairman of the Diocesan Department of Finance. Mr. Blair, in his address drew a clear distinction between mailing a check to the parish treasurer, which is a financial transaction, and presenting it in person at a church service, where it is offered upon the altar, as an act of worship.

Bishop McDowell gave a summary of the work of General Convention, dwelling particularly on the revised Book of Common Prayer and its use.

There was not a dull moment in the entire conference. Each regular speaker had original and helpful suggestions to offer.

Personal Notes

Deaths.

The Rev. Liston Joseph Orum, O. H. C., passed to life eternal November 20. He was only thirty-six years of age. The greater part of his ministry was given to the work among the people of the Southern mountains. More recently he returned to Holy Cross, West Park, N. Y., and was engaged in mission preaching and as director of the Confraternity of the Love of God. The funeral took place Thursday, November 22, in the chapel at Holy Cross and interment was in the monastery garden.

On Sunday morning, October 7, the Rev. Henry P. Chapman passed to his heavenly reward, at the home of his son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. Lyman T. Rawles, of Trinity Parish, Fort Wayne. The Rev. Fr. Chapman had been in steadily failing health for several months past, due to his advanced age. He was eighty-four years of age.

Fr. Chapman served a long and useful life in Christ's ministry. On Sunday, November 27, 1927, he observed the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood.

Following the Burial Office and the Holy Communion at Trinity Church, Fort Wayne, October 9, the rector of Trinity committed Fr. Chapman's remains to the grave at Lindenwood and commended his soul to his Creator.

World Peace Postage

"The Peace Ballot Stamp"

(Ex-Postmaster General Hitchcock, U. S. A.)

The greatest of all franchises is that which will permit the people of every nation to cast a vote for peace with every postage stamp.

A permanent government postage stamp is proposed with an added peace design, for voluntary purchase in every country. It will be issued in popular denominations by all nations at the same prices as the regulation issues and for the same purpose. It will be used for national and international postage and will be good for mailing only within the country of issue, as are our present stamps.

Senator La Fontaine, of Belgium, points to its purpose: "To realize the value of the referendum feature, we must make the purchase of these stamps voluntary."

A 2-cent Peace Stamp will carry a letter and, in addition, a message of goodwill.

This plan will in no way interfere with the adequate preparation for the defense of any nation.

YOU can help the plan by taking it up with your paper, your representatives at the Capitol, and your General Post Office officials. These officials will gladly do their share to give this boon to mankind by taking care of the little extra work which the handling of peace stamps in two or three denominations will entail upon them.

If one "scrap of paper" precipitated the war, billions of these scraps of peace paper will in a short time create a peace atmosphere in all nations that will endure.

Give me the encouragement of a reply.

DEEDS DONE FOR CHRIST.

By SIR JAMES MARCHANT

Deeds are done daily in the spirit of Christ. Some little deeds—the cup of cold water; other great deeds—the sacrifice of life's fairest prospects for a living faith. This book, a companion volume to "Anthology of Jesus", recounts those acts of heroes for the Christian Faith among the martyrs of centuries ago and among the missionaries of recent years. $2.50

THE CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

By H. WHEELER ROBINSON

Written simply and without technical language by a man who is "one of the most scholarly writers in England today", according to Dr. H. R. Mackintosh, author of "The Christian Experience of Forgiveness". Using the term "Spirit" in its entymological sense of "breath", Dr. Robertson gives a philosophical interpretation of the esential nature of personality, then a specifically Christian interpretation of the inflowing of the divine to the human in life. $3.00

IF I HAD ONLY ONE SERMON TO PREACH: ENGLISH SERIES

Edited by SIR JAMES MARCHANT

Among the twenty contributors to this volume are some of the most distinguished names in England today: Dean W. R. Inge, L. P. Jacks, James Moffatt, the Bishop of London, F. W. Norwood, A. Maude Royden, etc. Each sermon contains what that preacher considers his supreme message to the times. "Do not, on any account, miss this book. It contains much that will live forever."—The Church of England Newspaper. $2.50

TENTH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

17th and Spruce Streets

Philadelphia

Donald Grey Barnhouse
Minister

Radio Address
P. O. Box 2000

Dear Friend:

You cannot know how your letter of appreciation stimulates us in the midst of a very heavy task. Each letter we get from one of God's children who has received blessing from one of our messages is a sermon to a tired preacher who never gets to hear anyone else preach.

This thing of giving and receiving the Gospel is not a one-sided affair. Paul wrote to the Roman Church (1:11, 12 that his visit would not only be an affair of his giving out the Word of God, but that he would be comforted together with) them by their mutual faith. This is what your letter has helped to do.

For we are doing an unheard of thing in this nation-wide broadcast. Many people do not realize that this is the only chain broadcast of a sermon that costs anything. The broadcasts going out from New York are courtesy broadcasts, and we doubt if the ministers would be allowed to tell people that they were lost sinners, headed for a Christless eternity, and that the only way of salvation is through the blood of Jesus Christ—we doubt if this message could be preached even were it burdensome to the heart of the preacher.

But we pay one thousand one hundred and ten dollars each and every Sunday for our thirty-minute broadcast. Ours is a small church with less than 500 members, and we look only to God to supply our need. Let us make it plain. If the people of the country like yourself do not send in to us the thousands of dollars necessary to cover our broadcast, we will not be able to renew our options. If you want this kind of preaching on the air will you not pray that this shall be done? We would rather have one dollar a-piece from forty thousand people than have one person give us forty thousand dollars. We have received a few gifts of ten and twenty-five dollars, but many people cannot afford to give these amounts. If you can, you may be sure God will use it to His honor and glory in the salvation of souls; if you cannot, we are happy to know that you are listening in as we lift up the Lord Jesus Christ as the only hope of this world.

Will you PRAY daily for me and for this Church and for those that listen? Will you urge others to listen in? Tell people what you have heard. Ask your pastor to put an announcement of this broadcast in your Church bulletin or make it from the pulpit. We know of people who have been born again while listening to these messages.

Give us the name of the local newspaper in your town and we will send them a special announcement to print. A friend in York, Pa., inserted an advertisement in the local newspapers to tell people about this broadcast. You might ask the editor of your paper to give us an announcement on his radio page.

With greetings in our Lord Jesus Christ, I am,

Yours most sincerely,

DONALD GREY BARNHOUSE,
Minister of 10th Presbyterian Church,
Philadelphia, Penna.

DOMINUS ILLUMINATIO MEA 1835

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., DECEMBER 8, 1928. No. 49.

SURSUM CORDA!

If there ever was an hour in the world's history when Christians ought to stand firm in faith and go forward in hope and love for Christ and His Word, it is to-day. Let any man put his ear close to the great big beating heart of the world and he will find that it is throbbing like the troubled sea when it cannot rest. Everywhere, we see the blind leading the blind, and masses of men upset, bewildered and confused. And in the van of leadership are multitudes of men who have lost faith in the Bible, in Christ, and the leading of God. These are the men who dream of a new world, to be regenerated by theorists without God, and by society without the Saviour, and who, alas, are not near awakening, for they do not dream that they dream, as Novalis said. Oh, what a sublime opportunity lies before the Christian and the Church! God is calling to the scattered ranks of His great army to line up in solid phalanx and move on, stronger than ever, in faith and hope. The Gospel is far wiser than the world's philosophy. The teaching of the Bible is far more trustworthy than the pseudo-science so widely lauded in this artificial age. The only Unifier and Rectifier of the ideals of the world is Jesus Christ, Whose Word alone can break the power of sin, and emancipate the world's enslaved. We listen to our doubts, and say insoluble are the world's problems, invincible its difficulties, hopeless its confusions, irrepressible its discontent, oppressions, and enmities. Better far if we would doubt our doubts, and believe our beliefs; look back to Calvary and see the crucified King upon His throne; look up and see the reigning Christ in heaven; look on and see the coming Christ in glory. Let us lift up our hearts with a Sursum corda thrill, and feel with all Christians that the only star of hope in the gathering night is the ever-young, the ever-fresh, the ever-dauntless religion of Jesus; strong in faith, glowing with love, and ever going forth conquering and to conquer. "We will do everything we can," said some men to their clergyman, as he proposed a most aggressive outline of novel Christian enterprise. "That won't do," was the answer. "I want you to do the things you can't!" In that answer lies the philosophy and the dynamic of victorious Christianity. Yes, we can if we will subdue kingdoms, work righteousness, obtain promises, turn to flight the armies of God's foes, with the rallying cry, "For Christ and His Church," by the super-self power of faith.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"No home is built with hands alone."

Those who look for troubles will not be long finding trouble to look at. But lift your eyes higher—to Him from whom our help cometh. Then you will be able to meet your troubles with an unperturbed spirit.—F. B. Meyer.

On every plant on which we tread
Are written words which rightly read
Would lead us from Earth's fragrant sod
To hope and holiness and God.

All the genius and learning of the heathen world, all the penetration of Phythagoras, Socrates, and Aristotle, had never been able to produce such a system of moral duty, and so rational an account of Providence and of man, as is to be found in the New Testament. —Beattie.

"You can reflect what is another's. You can only radiate that which is your own."

Pagan writers called the Cross Horos, or Boundary line; it inculcated a self-sacrificing service unknown in their morality.

Take the task He gives you gladly,
Let His work your pleasure be;
Answer quickly when He calleth
"Here am I, send me, send me".
—Daniel March.

What other book beside the Bible could be heard in public assemblies from year to year, with an attention that never tires, and an interest that never cloys?—Robert Hall.

Perhaps if we knew how much was involved in the simple "learn" of Christ, we would not enter His School with so irresponsible a heart. For there is not only much to learn, but much to unlearn. Many persons never go to this school at all, until character has almost taken on its fatal set. But it can be done—and there is rest in the school, although there is also much work.—Henry Drummond.

The greatest and most far-reaching purchase I ever made was that of a small red-leather-covered Bible, which I bought of my Sunday-school teacher, paying $2.75 on the installment plan. I was then ten years old. That Book has made possible all that has counted most in my life.—John Wanamaker.

It may be that eventually the unity of Christendom will be manifested in a unity of government, of order, of administration, or it may be manifested in some other way; but if it is to be manifested to us this must spring spontaneously from a unity of spirit that has been previously won.—Selected.

"The every-day cares and duties, which men call drudgery, are the weights and counterpoises of the clock of time, giving its pendulum a due vibration, and its hands a regular motion, and when they cease to hang upon the wheels, the pendulum no longer swings, the hands no longer move, the clock stands still."

DISAPPOINTMENTS

Most of our progress in life is a succession of mistakes corrected and disappointments endured. Perhaps the very highest evidence of moral courage we can give is readiness and power to study the disappointments honestly and to determine fairly how much they have been and are results of our own sins and errors. It is a familiar fact that mighty warriors who have staked their lives many times on battle fields and men of gigantic nerve force cheerfully risking fortune and fame on one chance, have fled abjectly and like cowards from their own mistakes, refusing to recognize or confess them. How many generals who have lost battles, how many political leaders defeated in large fights, have assumed or accepted blame? General Robert E. Lee, after Gettysburg, is the one instance now recalled. He quickly took on his own shoulders responsibility and invited to himself censure which others had incurred; but he was a character so majestically exceptional that he must be taken as a standard to be emulated and imitated rather than a measure for comparison.

We lesser folks whose ambitions have been small and hopes lowly, by comparison with those of the big figures in history, must meet our disappointments and suffer from them as acutely and bitterly as those whose plans for empire have been baffled and whose lifelong scheming and labor for high place have come to naught. From the vague, flimsy, fantastic air castles of children on through the dreams of youth, the definite purposes of maturity and the fond and fading and widely varying anticipations of venerable age we are beset by disappointments. No human life protracted beyond infancy ever has escaped them. No human or earthly power can protect us from them and the Almighty, mercifully and wisely, permits them to come upon us. If we can imagine a man or a woman with every wish, hope, purpose, craving, ambition, desire, gratified we imagine a monster, habitually drunk with self-approval and contentment, indifferent to Divinity and arrogantly scornful of humanity. It is one of the checks and balances and equalizations of life that the stronger and more earnest we are, the more active in thought and the higher in aspiration, the more disappointments we must encounter. Those who have fewest are the stolid human clods, thinking little, feeling little, concerned with little beyond the physical appetite and, perhaps, the savages in the jungles. None of these is enviable.

There is comfort in understanding that disappointments are not only inevitable parts of life, necessary for its completeness, and penalties of strength, purpose and endeavor, but that, sincerely considered and used, they dignify and sweeten life. We can gain nothing from them by idly bemoaning and magnifying them or hastening to make them occasions for resentment or hates against somebody else. We can win from them stimulation and instruction and cleansing and uplifting of soul by humble and faithful striving to learn from them, by bravely realizing how far our own faults and blunders have contributed to them. In reviewing those that have come upon us most of us will see, too, that some, if not many, of those we have thought most grievous and ruinous have been, or have brought, our sweetest blessings. So we may agree gratefully that there is a Divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them as we may.

Analyze your disappointments. Compare those you can frankly tell yourself were from the faults or weaknesses of others, or absolutely unavoidable, with blessings and mercies that have been vouchsafed. Look the facts in the face and tell yourself whether a large proportion of the disappointments have not been of purposes and ambitions and desires ignoble and unworthy and far better defeated than attained.

Some of the most intensely burning heartaches with which people suffer are from disappointments in matters trivial and frivolous. The pampered sensibilities, like pampered bodies, are hurt deeply by slight wounds. Miss Flora McFlimsy, who could not go to the ball because she had nothing to wear, doubtless was far more sorry for herself and endured more misery than the strong woman failing in really high and important work but beginning immediately, with unbroken courage and faith, to try again.

The disappointments are not disasters until we yield to them, fail and refuse to learn from them, weakly allow them to distill in our hearts bitterness against God, distrust of Him, hates and envies of our fellow creatures. Using them wisely and courageously for the betterment of our lives is one of the hardest of our tasks, therefore one of the highest and noblest and most worthy of the best manhood and womanhood. They can be dedicated and applied to the service of the Creator and our fellow men as fervently and generously as our most brilliant successes, made stepping stones toward the refuge where disappointments will be ended forever.

Alfred B. Williams.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by A. R. F. Frayser:

> "Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me" (Psalm) 101:6.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA

Alfred B. Williams

FIRST REAL GENERAL CONVENTION.

The first real General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America was July 28, 1789, and was a direct consequence of the adoption of the United States Constitution and election of General Washington President. These events quieted the bitterness of the sectional quarrels and gave confidence in the permanency of the republic, which had compelling influence in Church as well as political circles. The two English consecrated bishops, of New York and Pennsylvania, and their following had been holding aloof from the Scotch consecrated Bishop of Connecticut, but the spirit of American unity filled the air. The Philadelphia Convention, with seven States represented by seventeen clergymen and sixteen laymen—Virginia having no clerical delegate—unanimously confirmed the validity of Bishop Seabury's consecration. Bishops White and Provoost thought that courtesy required the assent of the English authorities to the proposed amalgamation of the two factions, but the Convention took a recess to September 29, and when it met on that date the presence of Bishop Seabury and deputies from Connecticut, Massachusetts and New Hampshire swept away the last feeling of sectional jealousy and animosity in the Church. The influence of the adoption of the constitution and the feeling and action of the Church is demonstrated by the fact that the signing of the constitution of the Church by Bishop Seabury and the New England representatives was done, by special arrangement, in the Pennsylvania State House, where the Constitution of the United States had been signed. October 5 the House of Bishops sat the first time, constituted by Bishops White and Seabury, Bishop Provoost being counted as constructively present. These two bishops, Seabury yet an ardent Tory—some lay deputies objected to him because he was receiving a pension from the British government as a former army chaplain—White, an equally ardent American and differing widely on many matters of Church policy, gave and took, surrendered and compromised and reached agreements. The old proposed Book of Common Prayer was thrown aside and five committees were entrusted with the work of Prayer Book revision, their reports revised and amended by the bishops. The result was the Book used until the revision of 1892, which was the result of a memorial first presented to the Convention of 1853.

Some of the arrangement of the Prayer Book we yet have are curious remnants of temporary conditions. It is said the prayer for the President was changed to precede the Litany because President Washington never attended services in the afternoon and, therefore, never would hear the prayer for himself if it followed the Litany.

Bishop Seabury was the means of having the words of Oblation and Invocation immediately after the words of Institution in the order for administration of the Holy Communion. The Convention of 1789 adjourned October 16, having completed the reunion and reorganization of the Church and the provision for form of worship.

In May, 1790, the Virginia Convention elected as bishop the Rev. Dr. James Madison, President of William and Mary College, and he was consecrated in England by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishops of York and Rochester.

FIRST BISHOP CONSECRATED IN AMERICA.

What properly may be called the second real General Convention was in Trinity Church, New York, September 10, 1792, where four bishops attended and united in consecrating the Rev. Dr. T. J. Claggett, elected bishop of Maryland and making the fifth bishop in the country. Here another danger of division was avoided by concession. Bishop Provoost never had become fully reconciled to recognition of Bishop Seabury and there was distinct threat that if he persisted in his attitude the New England Church would secede. Bishop Provoost yielded and joined with Bishop Seabury in the consecration of Bishop Claggett.

In September, 1795, the Triennial Convention met in Philadelphia, and the Rev. Dr. Robert Smith was consecrated Bishop of South Carolina, making six bishops in the country. The Rev. Charles Pettigrew, elected bishop of North Carolina by a Convention consisting of three clergymen and three laymen, died of yellow fever at Norfolk on his way to the Convention at Philadelphia. Bishop Smith was sixty-five years old and feeble, and in the brief remaining time of his life was unable to do much toward arousing the Church in his diocese. From 1798 to 1804, six years, there was no State Convention of the Church in South Carolina. He died in 1801. He was rector of St. Philip's Church, Charleston.

Between this Convention and the next the Rev. Dr. Edward Bass, May 7, 1797, chosen as bishop for New Hampshire and Massachusetts, and the Rev. Dr. Abraham Jarvis, October 18, for Connecticut, were consecrated bishops.

The meeting of the Convention appointed for 1798 in Philadelphia was prevented by prevalence there of epidemic disease and the bishops, under authority vested in them by the standing committee, called a Convention to meet in that city June 11, 1799. At this Convention, the membership of which is not recorded, revision of the Thirty-nine Articles was proposed and referred to a committee, the report of which was to be acted on at the next Convention, at Trenton, New Jersey, September, 1801. A strong movement of the Lutherans to seek permanent union with the Episcopal Church of the United States was stopped by the failure of the Convention of 1787, political and other conditions causing its abandonment in the intervening year.

At the Trenton Convention, 1801, the resignation of Bishop Provoost was the foremost subject of interest, there being question whether a bishop could resign. The resignation was because of ill health and domestic afflictions. The Rev. Dr. Benjamin Moore was consecrated as assistant bishop of New York, serving also with Bishop Provoost as assistant rector of Trinity Church. The Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, with the exception of Article XXI., which was local and civil, were found suitable for the Church in this country and adopted, "without their altering even the obsolete diction in them", says Bishop White.

The fifth Triennial Convention was held in New York September 11, 1804. The constitution was changed to provide for future meetings in May. The Rev. Dr. Samuel Parker, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, was consecrated Bishop of Massachusetts, succeeding Bishop Claggett, deceased. It was understood that the Rev. Edward Jenkins, D. D., had been elected Bishop of South Carolina, but had declined.

READING THE BIBLE

By Margaret C. Worthington

THE Bibles laying on our tables are a visible expression of the loving-kindness of our God, for from those pages He is ever ready to "fill the hungry soul with goodness" through the knowledge of His covenant mercies in Christ.

This Book is given from God to reveal His work and His will for man. Given not that man might know it, but that he should know it. As the writer of the Pentateuch says: "The secret things belong to the Lord our God, but those things which are revealed belong to us, and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law." And note the statement here of verbal revelation, "all the words" (Deut. 29:29).

When the serpent approached Eve to induce her to sin, his first attack was on the Word of God, asking a subtlely, ambiguous question as to what God had said about eating of the trees in the Eden Garden. Not that he did not know what He had said, but to cast doubt or aspersion on it: "Yea," said he, "hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the Garden?" An inquiry which purposely might be variously construed. His next move was outright denial of the Word of the Lord God. But had obedience to, and faith in the words of God held absolute sway in the hearts of our first parents further temptation would have been resisted (Matt. 4:4, 7, 10).

The method that Satan found successful in Eden, he uses yet. If he can induce any one to reject the sharp "sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God", and believe only in the general content of Scriptures instead of the very words, it will be well if that person finds out early that he has only human conceptions of God's truth, and the devourer of souls is gaining on him—repeating his ancient wiles.

The Bible being a revelation from God, it necessarily must be given in God-breathed words, no man could otherwise convey a perfect revelation from God. "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? said the Lord." The chaff is not the wheat, it is the vehicle for the wheat, as the prophet's mouth or pen, but "the Word" is the "finest of the wheat" with which the heart of the believer is fed on the sure truth of God (Jer. 23:28; Ps. 81:16: Prov. 30:5). So when we open our Bibles for devotional reading, let us remember, "Thus saith the Lord".

"God hath set . . . teachers" and other helpers in the church, and we need all these, but to have an inert attitude ourselves towards the Lord's Word will lead us away from personal obedience to it, and the meaning be unappropriated or become ineffectual in our lives. Let us never be satisfied with reading for what knowledge we may pick up; or to continually verify past impressions, though that is good. Our Lord repeated seven times this command to believers in the churches in Asia, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith," for He desired distinct personal apprehension of His message, and what is said into the ear speaks to the individual. So he wants us to hear individually and be personally held by the authority of that which is spoken. A preacher was telling of a man asking an old professor in a theological college, how were some documents to be found whose date might seem to make invalid some of the Scripture, would this affect him; the reply was: "It would not affect me at all, for I know Jesus Christ." Yes, the Lord Christ said, "My sheep hear My voice". Isaiah speaking in prophecy both of Messiah and himself, says: "He wakeneth mine ear to hear" (Is. 50:4). We all need an awakened ear as we read our daily Scripture portion. Not only is God speaking, but let each say, "He is speaking to me", and we will apprehend new things for our personal possession—new promises, new reproofs, new warnings, new encouragements—where we had not expected to find more than previous perusal had afforded us.

The late Andrew Murray of blessed memory says: "It is only by the teaching of the Holy Ghost that we can get at the real meaning of what God means by His Word. . . . He wants us to bow in a meek, teachable frame of mind, and believe that the Spirit will, in the hidden depth of our heart, make His Word live and work." And another remark is this: "Ever study God's Word in an unreserved surrender to obey." To obey what is at that time intimated to us by the Spirit. Such an attitude is the beginning of effectual surrender to God.

The Jews of old had a fallacious way of reading their Scriptures. They read the Old Testament in which the Lord Jesus said to them: "Ye think ye have eternal life," yet failed to accept its testimony to Himself (John 5:39; Acts 13:27: 26:19-23), because there was something between them and God—"Their own righteousness" (Rom. 10:3). Let us beware of anything between us and God. Let no supposed all-rightness in ourselves induce us to listen carelessly to Him. Our Christian experience should be the result of the written Word constantly applied to the Spirit and obeyed. His holy flash-light through His message will cause us to see the lineaments of sin where it may lurk, the heart is too deceitful to be trusted by itself; and He will glorify Christ to us that faith may work by love.

There is a collective obedience for the Church as a body (1 Cor. 1:10-13; 6:1, 7; Eph. 4:16). But it must spring from individual obedience, for individual responsibility is everywhere taught in the Bible (Rom. 2:6; 14:12; 1 Cor. 12:26). Each true believer, being a temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 3:16; 6:19), and part of that wonderful unity, the mystical temple being built by the Spirit (Eph. 2:20-22), has his part towards every other believer. The Bible is given to the whole Church, and our individual interpretation manifested in our lives, belongs not only to ourselves, but to others for their help and building up, because the Holy Spirit uses the Word to build (Acts 20: 32). If individually we are culpably disobedient to it we are grieving the Builder, who shapes the "living stones" and cements them with the Cornerstone, and He will not alter His pattern (Amos 7:7; John 17:21; 1 Cor. 3:17 marg.), to accommodate disobedience. The whole Bible should be studied for the revelation of our Lord Jesus. After His resurrection, when later He would send the Holy Spirit to guide them into all truth, He expressly mentioned to the representatives of His Church the revelation of Himself "in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms", commissioning them as witnesses of "these things . . . among all nations". How, then, can excuse be found for leaving large portions of the Bible rarely studied? And how can we witness that its wonderful pages meet our deep and varied needs unless through knowledge and experience? A witness gives first-hand testimony to known facts (1 John 2:3, 4). We know the facts of our redemption first by faith's appropriation, then by "working out" these facts in our lives through the power of the Holy Spirit (Phil. 2:12, 13). Touching one or two of the simpler things of faith, let us note the lack of conviction unto obedience, in the increasing absence of the daily family—prayer and Bible reading in many homes where parents profess Christ as Saviour (Deut. 6:7 marg.); and the dress and attitude (?) of professing Christian women who follow the fashion of the woman in 1 Tim. 5:6, rather than the one described in 1 Tim. 2:9, 10, and in such, for lack of this conviction, the "salt" loses its precious savor for Christ (Matt. 5:13). Further, all sorts of secular literature daily reaches the eyes of Christians, yet with the majority, the prophecies of God, which tell the certain issues of the world's doings, are grievously slighted. St. Peter said the "sure word of prophecy" is "a light that shineth in a dark place", yet so many would rather sit contentedly in the dark while events around progress, without wishing to know whether they may be swiftly moving according to the prophetic schedule. The Son of Man "as a man taking a far journey . . . commanded the porter to watch" (Mark 13:33, 34). The Rev. E. L. Langston, of the Advent Testimony and Preparation Movement in England, says: "Nothing quickens the spiritual life of our people more than the study and exposition of the prophetic Scriptures when applied to the heart and conscience" (black mine). Mere curiosity is not satisfied in Bible prophecy. Both prologue and epilogue of the Book of Revelations announce a blessing for the man who hears and keeps those things written therein (Rev. 1:3; 22:7), and in both the quickness of fulfilment is urged.

"A Star in the night, a beacon bright to guide us,
An anchor sure to hold when storms betide us,
A refuge for the soul where in quiet we may hide us,
Is the hope of the coming of the Lord."

SECOND SUNDAY IN ADVENT

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Blessed Lord, who hast caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning; Grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn and inwardly digest them, that by patience and comfort of Thy holy word, we may embrace and ever hold fast the blessed hope of everlasting life, which Thou hast given us in our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

THIS collect has all the six parts: (1) The attribute, "Blessed"; and (2) We address God as "Lord". (3) The ascription, "Who hast caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning"; (4) The petition, which is doubled; for such guidance in the study of God's word as will make us "embrace, and ever hold fast the blessed hope of everlasting life", which St. Paul in the Epistle holds out to the Roman Christians. Then (5) and (6) follow the usual mediatorial portion and the Amen.

This collect for grace to guide us in the study of the holy Scriptures, has given the name "Bible Sunday" to this Second Sunday in Advent. The collect is significant of one great difference between the Roman Catholic and the Reformed Churches. The former teaches that the Church through her priesthood should interpret the Bible to her children; while the Protestant Church holds that the Christian may, and should himself seek the aid of the Holy Ghost to interpret God's word, and not place our whole dependence on the Church's teaching as the Roman Catholic Christian is taught to do. So the Seventh Article of our Episcopal Church (which is headed "of the sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures for Salvation") reads thus: "Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to Salvation; so that whatsoever is not read therein nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed, as an article of Faith, or be thought requisite or necessary, to salvation." Thus "tradition", which plays so important a part in the teaching of the Church of Rome, is cut out entirely. But this reliance on individual judgment has its evil side; for it has led to almost innumerable division into sects, of thise who have abandoned the castiron conformity of Rome. So that some have gone back to Rome, and others (High Churchmen, as they are called), give a large measure of authority to the teaching of the Church concerning the Bible, using tradition as authority, so far as to what they say has been believed among Christians, "always, everywhere, and by all", or in its Latin form, what has been believed "semper, ubique, et ab omnibus", an admirable rule, no doubt, in theory, but in practice, hard to apply, like a measuring rod of varying length; for it is often difficult to find out, except in fundamental truths such as are set forth in the creeds, what has been believed, "semper, ubique, et ab omnibus". Yet the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States has been to me a wise and most excellent guide in explaining Holy Scripture, and especially in giving us this beautiful collect.

Charlotte Yonge in her story, "Hopes and Fears" (Part 2, ch. 2, p. 124), says wisely of the P. B.: "An earnest mind taught how to learn, with access to the Bible and P. B., could gain more from these fountain heads than any external teaching could impart."

A writer (the Rev. Churchill Gibson), in "Our Mountain Work" (the Church paper of our Blue Ridge Mission (June, 1914), says: "These people have drifted away from the Church, and have strayed into the woods alone with the Bible, which is a very dangerous condition, as the sects and "isms" always multiply exceedingly under such conditions, and good living is obscured by weird beliefs . . and here is where the teaching Church is needed to point out the sane and normal approach for each man to his Lord."

EPISTLE for Second Sunday in Advent is Romans 15, verses 4-13. Some comments on this longest Epistle of St. Paul will interest you. Says Mr. Edward Lowe Temple: "This Epistle is the longest, and theologically the post important of all" of St. Paul's writings. Coleridge says of it: "It is the most profound work ever written." Calvin says: "It opens the door to all Scriptures"; and Luther: "That it is the chief book of the New Testament." "It contains many salutations of personal character to those whom he had met during his travels—no fewer than twenty-seven affectionate greetings; but none to St. Peter, who therefore could not at that time have been its bishop." "In this letter," says another, "Paul establishes the doctrine that faith in Christ is the only ground of acceptance with God for all mankind."

But in this portion of the fifteenth chapter which is the Epistle for this Sunday, hope, not faith, is set before us most prominently. Near the beginning of the Epistle God is invoked as the God of patience and consolation; at the end, as the God of hope.

The request of God in this first petition is that the Roman Christians be "like-minded one toward another according to Jesus Christ", i. e., in sympathy with each other, as Christ is with us. Truly is Jesus a God of patience and comfort to us by His sympathy with our joys and sorrows, if only we have grace to realize His presence whether at a marriage feast, as at Cana, where he added to the good cheer with the best wine which in this case did indeed cheer both God and man (Judge 9:13), or at the grave of our best beloved, as in Bethany, where "He wept o'er Lazarus dead". And the effect of such sweet sympathy will be what the conclusion of the petition shows, "That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ". The words "With one mind and one mouth" recall to us the prayer "For the Unity of God's People", where the Church uses these words in praying for "godly union and concord", that so "we may be all of one heart and one soul, united in one holy bond of truth and peace, of faith and charity, and may with one mind and one mouth glorify God". This like-mindedness, according to Christ Jesus, cannot be in us unless we Christians fully sympathize with each other. We cannot always agree in our judgments; the old Latin proverb shows this: "Quot hominos, tot sententiae", as many opinions as there are men; but true Christian charity, and sympathy which comes from putting oneself in another's place will make us like-minded as far as that is possible with our present limitations, and will prevent heart-burning, and unkind criticism in word or thoughts. See how Jesus put Himself in our place, "made Himself of no reputation and took upon Him the form of a servant (a bond-servant in the Greek), and was made in the likeness of men. And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross". As a man He could not in any other way have fully understood and sympathized with those He came to save, and to be an example of godly life.

The rest of the Epistle except the concluding prayer is devoted to encouraging promises to the Gentile Roman Christians, drawn from the Old Testament Scripture, showing that Jesus Christ had come not only "to confirm the promises made unto the fathers" (of the Jews), but also that the Gentiles might glorify God for His mercy. Paul gives for the comfort and assurance of the Gentile converts four quotations from the Old Testament to prove God's purpose of Salvation for Gentiles as well as for his chosen people, the last of which is a beautiful one from Isaiah (Ch. 11, v. 10): "There shall be a root of Jesse (meaning David and David's greater Son, the Messiah), and He that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles; in Him shall the Gentiles trust". Then the Epistle concludes with the touching prayer, "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace and believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost".

THE Gospel is written in St. Luke 21:24-33. A solemn subject it deals with, our Lord's second coming "in glorious majesty to judge the world and the people with His truth". Bishop Coxe says of this gospel: "It was the custom of the ancient prophets to give an immediate sign, or fulfilment of their words, unto him in token that the ultimate fulfilment would be as certain. Our Lord, therefore, gave the destruction of Jerusalem, and of the Jewish Church and state, as the immediate token, or fulfilment, of what he predicted concerning the destruction of all things temporal. Improbable as it then appeared that such a sign should prove a reality before that generation of men passed from the stage of human life, we all know that it actually came to pass, and that the Jewish people have ever since been wanderers over the face of all the earth. Thus, then, the whole prophecy was fulfilled in its earnest, or pledge, and we cannot doubt that it will be so in its entire length and breadth. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away."

So ends the Gospel. "My word shall not pass away." A fit ending; for it gives us confidence to meet that day.

Charles Wesley sweetly sings:

"We rest upon Thy word,
The promise is for me; (and for you)

My succor and salvation, Lord,
Shall surely come from Thee.
Then let me still abide,
Nor from my hope remove;
Till Thou my patient spirit guide
Into Thy perfect love."

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

VII.

ANOTHER feature of the time-period association of the Scriptures with the life and mission of our coming King may be found in the evident intention of the order of the names applied to Him in Isa. 9:6, 7. For the climax of the passage engages Him in an administrative function which can in no sense be solely spiritual. The peace which is the end for which the prophecy is designed must be a material peace; the government must be a literal administration of judgment and justice.

The Incarnation of Our Lord

is undoubtedly signified in the opening sentence, "Unto us a child is born; unto us a Son is given". The human side of this manifestation is most surely indicated by His being a born-child. Of this no elaborate dissertation is needed. We know that He was in all things made like unto His brethren (Heb. 2:17). And His being the gift of God to the human race, through the nation of Israel will not be questioned by those who believe "all that the prophets have spoken". The miniature gospel (John 3:16) from His own lips is sufficient, backed as it is by numerous other passages. So we may at once apply our thought to the successive time-periods of the offices He was to hold and is yet to exercise. His name shall be called

Wonderful.

Is not this the delineation of His earth-life? Amazement possessed the witnessing multitudes as they beheld His works and listened to His messages (Matt. 7:28, 29; 21:15; Mark 2:12; John 7:46). His dialectic skill provoked His enemies to plead, "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned" (John 7:15)? Even His closest friends marvelled (Mark 4:41). And there is a deep meaning in this word wonderful (pele). When the heavenly messenger was importuned by Manoah (Judges 13:18) to tell His name, He used this very word, "It is wonderful". It occurs again in Jer. 32:27, "Is anything too wonderful for me"? So we may summarize His entire earthly career as embracing the inexplicable, which even His own family could not fathom (John 7:5), since the source of His wisdom and potentiality was the fountain of the divinely wonderful. His name shall be called

Counsellor.

This plainly refers to His advocacy in our behalf as we have noted in a previous discussion. Passing beyond the earth-life, He is now in the presence of God as our representative, pleading in our behalf, taking upon Himself all responsibility concerning us. Just as one who is in legal difficulties, knowing nothing of the entanglements of the law, rests implicitly upon the skill of his counsel, so we, entrusting to Him our eternal destiny on the merits of His worthiness, abide in confidence. Hence, we see Him, who once was here where we are now, in our Father's fellowship, standing with loving zeal, in our behalf (Heb. 7:25, 26; 9:24; Rom. 8:34; 1 John 2:1, 2). His name shall be called

The Mighty God.

This displays another of His present-time qualifications. While in His humiliation, He was anointed by the Holy Spirit and with power from God (Acts 10:38). He now possesses the dynamics of the universe in His own person. After His resurrection, He could say, "All power (authority) is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28:18). We mark with reverence that the resurrection from the dead effected this potentiality. According to St. Paul (Rom. 1:4), His Sonship was perfected by this august event. And now we see Him seated in the heavenlies, far above all principality and power (Eph. 1:18-23). It is this marvellous death-won prerogative which enthuses the Apostle to declare, "He is before all things, and by him all things consist; and he is the head of the body, the Church, the first-born from the dead that in all things he might have the preeminence" (Col. 1:17, 18). So we kneel with Thomas, and confess as we behold Him in our spiritual vision, "My Lord and my God" (John 20:28). His name shall be called

The Everlasting Father.

We might have difficulty in comprehending this office; since all our thought of Him embraces His acknowledgment of the sovereignty of the Father, in His passion to do His Father's will (John 4:34; 6:38; 8:29). But the resurrection solves the problem. He is not only a Son, but in the ultimate of His destiny, He is a Father. In that coming day, august in His Kingship, His attitude towards humanity will be that of a provident Father, who must bountifully supply for His children and endear Himself to them as the source and sustenance of their life. And there is a clear explication of this in the promises of the Old Testament. We cannot doubt that it was He who led the people of Israel out of Egypt (Ex. 23:20, 21); for we may be assured that the Father placed the human race in His care when the first redemptive promise was uttered (Gen. 3:15). As we have already noted in another connection, He was unquestionably the Jehovah of the former dispensation; and the repeated Theophanies, in which He appeared as the Angel of the Lord, were a demonstration of His presence and solicitude. So we may believe He was a Father unto Israel (Jer. 31:9; Mal. 2:10; Isa. 63:15, 16: 64:8). And in the fulness of His epiphany, when the glory of His majesty shall be unveiled, it will be given to Him to present to His Father and ours, His numberless children, with the exultant declaration, "Behold! I and the children whom thou hast given me" (Isa. 8:18; Heb. 2:13). His name shall be called

The Prince of Peace.

Here is the culmination of all the preceding offices. The groaning world which does not know Him as we do, sorely needs Him; and out of the greatness of His loving heart, He longs for the day when He may confer upon humanity this cherished boon. The night of His nativity, it was eagerly foretold by the worshipping heavenly messengers (Luke 2:14). To His own, He promised His peace (John 14:27). He is now our peace and in the care of His peace we abide (Eph. 2:14; Phil. 4:6, 7). But then in that sublime hour, consummating the divine purpose, He will confer peace upon all men in all lines of experience (Ps. 72:3, 7; 85:10; Isa. 2:4; 11:9; Micah 4:1-4).

We may have, we should have, a sincere appreciation of the heroic work of our present-day peacemakers, who are hopefully anticipating the abolition of war. We should pray for peace; we should labor for peace, and rejoice in every evidence of a better understanding between the nations. But truth to tell, suspicion is stalking abroad as mischievously as ever. Disarmament is far from reality. Eighty-seven per cent of our taxes are going to pay for past and anticipated wars. Why? Has not Christian consciousness moved the hearts of men everywhere to hate war? Are not fond mothers agonized over the fear of sending their loved sons to slaughter? or, if not that, must whole communities be wiped out by devilish poison gas? Why, again we ask, has not war sufficed the nations? There is but one answer. There can be no universal peace until the culmination of these varied offices of our blessed Lord Jesus indicated by the prophetical perspective, and He shall come as the Prince of Peace.

Let us heartily accept God's vision; receive God's unction. Let us loyally enthrone the Child of Bethlehem, the Eternal Son of God, in lives that shall reflect His graciousness, waiting for that glad day when He shall come again to the world which once cast Him out, but has always needed Him.

RUTH.

This book is named after the one whose faith in God made possible the revelation of His sovereign grace toward the household of Elimelech, who had forfeited all right to the land, like Israel at present, because of departure from it.

Subject.

The theme of this wonderful little book is the Lord's dealings in grace with the household of Elimelech.

I. Ch. 1. Departure from and return to the land of Israel by the household of Elimelech.

1. Ch. 1:1-5. The Lord's displeasure with the unbelief and disobedience of Elimelech, whose name means "My God is King".
2. Ch. 1:6-14. The Lord's grace drawing Naomi back to the land by giving His people bread.
3. Ch. 1:15-18. The Lord's grace in leading Ruth, the Moabitess, to cleave to Naomi and to serve Him.
4. Ch. 1:19-22. The Lord bringing back Naomi with Ruth "in the beginning of barley harvest".

II. Ch. 2. Ruth gleaning in the field of Boaz, a kinsman of Naomi.

1. Ch. 2:1-3. The Lord guiding Ruth into the field of Boaz.
2. Ch. 2:4-17. The Lord's grace toward Ruth through Boaz.
3. Ch. 2:18-23. The Lord's kindness to Naomi through Boaz.

III. Ch. 3. Ruth finding rest at the feet of Boaz, the kinsman who had the right and power to redeem.

1. Ch. 3:1-7. The Lord guiding Ruth to the place of rest.
2. Ch. 3:8-13. The Lord blessing Ruth in the place of rest.
3. Ch. 3:14-18. The Lord assuring Ruth in the place of rest.

IV. Ch. 4. Ruth united in marriage to Boaz, the kinsman redeemer.

1. Ch. 4:1-8. The Lord planning, through Boaz, for the redemption of Elimelech's possession.
2. Ch. 4:9-12. The Lord redeeming, or purchasing, Ruth for Boaz.
3. Ch. 4:13-17. The Lord uniting with, and making her fruitful by Boaz.
4. Ch. 4:18-22. The Lord's lineage, as Son of Man, through Ruth and Boaz.

ROBERT E. LEE

By the Late John W. Daniel, LL. D.

THE ANTECEDENTS OF COLONEL LEE.

BUT we cannot estimate the struggle it cost him to take up arms against the Union—nor the sacrifice he made, nor the pure devotion with which he consecrated his sword to his native State—without looking beyond his physical surroundings, and following further the suggestions of his history and character, for the springs of action which prompted his course. Colonel Lee was emphatically a Union man; and Virginia, to the crisis of dissolution, was a Union State. He loved the Union with a soldier's ardent loyalty to the Government he served, and with a patriot's faith and hope in the institutions of his country. His ancestors had been among the most distinguished and revered of its founders; his own life from youth upward had been spent and his blood shed in its service, and two of his sons, following his footsteps, held commissions in the army.

He was born in the same county, and descended from the same strains of English blood from which Washington sprang, and was united in marriage with Mary Custis, the daughter of his adopted son. He had been reared in the school of simple manners and lofty thoughts which belonged to the elder generation; and with Washington as his exemplar of manhood and his idol of wisdom, he reverenced his character and fame and work with a feeling as near akin to worship as any that man could have for aught that is human.

Unlike the statesmen of the hostile sections, who were constantly thrown into the provoking conflicts of political debate, he had been withdrawn by his military occupations from scenes calculated to irritate or chill his kindly feelings toward the people of the North; and on the contrary—in camp, and field, and social circle—he had formed many ties of friendship with its most esteemed soldiers and citizens. With the reticence becoming his military office, he had taken no part in the controversies which preceded the fatal rupture between the States—other than the good man's part, to "speak the soft answer that turns away wrath", and to plead for that forbearance and patience which alone might bring about a peaceful solution of the questions at issue.

Years of his professional life he had spent in Northern communities, and, always a close observer of men and things, he well understood the vast resources of that section, and the hardy, industrious, and resolute character of its people; and he justly weighed their strength as a military power. When men spoke of how easily the South would repel invasion he said: "You forget that we are all Americans." And when they prophesied a battle and a peace, he predicted that it would take at least four years to fight out the impending conflict. None was more conscious than he that each side undervalued and misunderstood each other. He was, moreover, deeply imbued with the philosophy of history and the course of its evolutions, and well knew that in an upheaval of government deplorable results would follow, which were not thought of in the beginning, or, if thought of, would be disavowed, belittled and deprecated. And eminently conservative in his cast of mind and character, every bias of his judgment, as every tendency of his history, filled him with yearning and aspiration for the peace of his country and the perpetuity of the Union. Is it a wonder, then, as the storm of revolution lowered, Colonel Lee, then with his regiment, the Second Cavalry, in Texas, wrote thus to his son in January, 1861:

"The South, in my opinion, has been aggrieved by the acts of the North as you say. I feel the aggression, and am willing to take any proper steps for redress. It is the principle I contend for, not individual or private benefit. As an American citizen, I take great pride in my country, her prosperity and institutions, and would defend any State if her rights were invaded. But I can anticipate no greater calamity for the country than a dissolution of the Union. It would be an accumulation of all evils we complain of, and I am willing to sacrifice everything but honor for its preservation. I hope, therefore, that all constitutional means will be exhausted before there is a resort to force. Secession is nothing but revolution. . . Still, a Union that can only be maintained by swords and bayonets, and in which strife and civil war are to take the place of love and kindness, has no charm for me. I shall mourn for my country and for the welfare and progress of mankind. If the Union is dissolved, and the government is disrupted, I shall return to my native State and share the miseries of my people, and, save in defence, will draw my sword on none."

War.

A few weeks later Colonel Lee was ordered, and came to Washington, reaching there three days before the inauguration of President Lincoln. At that time South Carolina, Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia and Louisiana, had already seceded from the Union, and the Provisional Government of the Confederate States was in operation at Montgomery.

The Virginia Convention was in session, but slow and deliberate in its course. The State which had done so much to found the Union was loth to assent to its dissolution, and still guided by the wise counsels of such men as Robert E. Lee, Robert Y. Conrad, Jubal A. Early, John B. Baldwin, Samuel McDowell Moore and S. H. H. Stuart, she persisted in efforts to avert the calamity of war. Events followed swiftly. The Peace Conference had failed. Overtures for the peaceful evacuation of Fort Sumter had likewise failed. On the thirteenth of April, under bombardment, the Federal Commander, Major Anderson, with its garrison, surrendered. On April 15, President Lincoln issued his proclamation for 75,000 men to make war against the seceded States, which he styled: "Combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings". This proclamation determined Virginia's course. War had come. Her mediation had been in vain. She was too noble to be neutral.

Of the arts of duplicity she knew nothing save to despise. She must now level her guns against the breasts of her Southern brethren, or make her own breast their shield. On April 17 Virginia answered Mr. Lincoln's proclamation with the Ordinance of Secession, and like Pallas-Athene, "the front fighter" stepped with intrepid brow to where, in conflict, history has ever found her—to the front of war.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

SUNDAY MORNING.

Most merciful and gracious God, our Heavenly Father, we humbly thank Thee that Thou hast brought us to see the light of another Sabbath day. We thank Thee for all Thy tender care and loving kindness during the past week, and for Thy patience with us in spite of our unworthiness. We thank Thee that Thou hast supplied our wants, that Thou hast delivered us from temptations and dangers: that Thou hast upheld us and guided us in our troubles and difficulties and led us thus far on our way to heaven. Grant, we beseech Thee, O Lord, that each returning day of rest may find us nearer to Thee, more meet for the company of the saints in glory, and for Thy sacred presence.

May this day be a sign between us and Thee. May we make it a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable: not doing our ways or finding our own pleasure, or speaking our own words. Let us especially rejoice in it as the day on which our Lord and Saviour arose from the dead and opened unto us the gates of everlasting life. Let us rise with Him to newness of life, and let our paths ever shine more and more to the perfect day. May our Lord's day be to us a sure pledge and promise of Thy coming kingdom, a resting place on our way to heaven, shielded and defended from all the cares and fears and troubles of the world, free from the toils and labors of life, and full of the joys and pleasures of Thy presence. May all our employment in it be about the cause of Thy Gospel and the interests of Thy kingdom, and the preparing of ourselves and all about us for Thy coming. Protect us and provide for us with Thy loving hand, and guide us by Thy counsel.

Pour down upon us, we beseech Thee, the abundance of Thy Holy Spirit, and order all our thoughts and words and works. Help us diligently and faithfully to improve all our opportunities and privileges.

May we commune with Thee in private humbly and devoutly. Give us new and contrite hearts, that truly repenting of our sins and acknowledging our misdeeds, we may obtain of Thee perfect remission and forgiveness through Jesus Christ our Lord. As new-born babes, may we desire the sincere milk of the Word, that we may grow thereby. Save us from a forward or doubting spirit. May we read, mark, learn and inwardly digest Thy Holy Scriptures. Open our eyes and quicken our apprehensions, that we may see their wonders and lay to heart their teachings. Help us earnestly and lovingly to seek Thy truth and to exercise our hearts and minds in Thy laws and statutes. May we be established in Thy faith and fear and love, and thoroughly furnished for all good works.

In Thy house of prayer, affect us with an awful sense of Thy divine majesty and a deep consciousness of our own unworthiness: fill us with reverence and godly fear, with lowliness and devotion. Let us join in the praises of Thy people with fervent gratitude and love. Let us pray to Thee with humble confidence: and hearken to the reading and teaching of Thy word with meek and teachable spirits. Make our praises acceptable. Let Thy merciful ears be open to our prayers and bless our instruction to our souls' welfare and to Thy honor and glory.

Give to all ministers and teachers of Thy truth everywhere and under whatever name, pure and understanding hearts and clear and ready utterances and sincere love to Thee and all mankind, that they may faithfully and effectually teach Thy word and make known Thy will. Be with Thy people everywhere this day. Relieve the sick and suffering. Comfort those who are in sorrow. Cheer the hearts of the desponding. Enlighten the ignorant, and make all the world to know and acknowledge, to love and serve Thee.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Our Father, etc.

ENDORSEMENT.

Mr. Editor:

Permit me to add to my letter sent yesterday a warm commendation of the "Churchman" of November 17. I read it with the greatest pleasure. I find it more interesting than the three other religious papers I take.

J. deHart Bruen.

Belvidere, Warren Co., N. J.
November 20, 1928.

Mr. Editor:

I thank you very much for sending me the copies of the Southern Churchman. I have enjoyed reading and have gotten among other things one spiritual thought which will stay with me the rest of my life. I would be glad to subscribe for it, but the truth is I have not time to read the publications that come to me. However, I feel so strongly the desirability and indeed the necessity, of our supporting the religious papers of our Church, that I am enclosing my check for $5.00. Will you please use it to send a copy of the paper to ————, who is a devoted Churchwoman.

Joseph Buffington.

U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals,
Third Judicial Circuit, Philadelphia.
November 20, 1928.

Mr. Editor:

Until the last three weeks your paper has reached me on Saturday noon, and I frequently found material therein which I could use to advantage in the instruction of a Bible class on Sunday morning, but of late it has not reached me until Sunday afternoon, too late for that purpose.

Would it not be possible for you to restore the mailing hour formerly employed, so that the paper will reach me on Saturday? I would appreciate the correction.

This letter affords me the opportunity to express my appreciation of your valuable publication, in my opinion, the best Church paper published.

I admire its conservative but positive stand upon all the important questions involving the welfare of the Church, both present and future, and I trust the present able management will receive sufficient encouragement and financial support to enable them to maintain its present high standard.

Mr. Editor:

I have read with interest and approval your editorial of November 3, 1928, under the caption, "Onward".

The General Convention in Washington was a magnificent vindication of the Church's unity in the Faith of Christian ages, and a challenge to go forward under the Captain of our salvation who is "The Way, the Truth and the Life".

He is the Head over all things to the Church, and in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

Richard N. Nelson, Bishop of Albany.

P. S.—Since writing the above I have read your editorial of November 17, "Sunrise". In it you have touched heights toward which multitudes are pressing.

Albany, N. Y., November 19, 1928.

Mr. Editor:

I want to thank you for sending me your paper the past few months. I received wonderful light from it and I feel that I cannot do without it. I shall try and get your Anglo-Catholics here to subscribe, and if they won5t, I shall have you send it to them at my expense. It is a live Church paper and one that all P. E. members should take. I was a delegate to Washington and New Orleans and I hope to attend more Triennials. I enclose check. I am not an Anglo-Catholic.

Book Reviews

OUR PHYSICAL HERITAGE IN CHRIST: By the Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

At a time when the General Convention is commending Christian Healing it gives us pleasure to call attention to this excellent treatment of the whole subject by Mr. Mackenzie. Showing wide reading and a mastery of the question, he has fully covered the matter of Christian Healing. By equipment, intellectuality, spirituality and, above all, by personal experience, the author is peculiarly fitted to write on the subject.

The book pulsates with hope and vigor and is stimulating reading, leading one with increasing interest to its great climax in the chapter on Our Triumphant Faith. Being associated for some years with Dr. A. B. Simpson, he writes with intimate knowledge of cures by faith in Christ. We have not seen before the whole movement traced so succinctly and yet with a just appraisal of the contribution that some of the leaders have made to the subject.

The author's intimate knowledge of the Bible acts as a safe guide amid the perplexities which have gathered about the question. These difficulties seem enhanced by the fact that two prominent men quoted in favor of Christian Healing have since the book was written been much impaired by ill health. But he avoids any extreme views, combats all modernistic attack on the faith and presents a sane and well-balanced treatment of the whole question. His enlightening treatment of the Holy Spirit in connection with the body gives the book a commanding authority amid much that is extravagant and unscriptural that often appears written today. The chapter on Our Blood Brother is especially strong.

While many might dissent from his view that there is healing in the atonement, yet the wondrous change wrought in us by blood atonement of Christ is comforting and assuring. The chapter on Our Triumphant Faith must prove a tonic to desponding souls and the author's experience of healing forms an interesting close to a book that is an authoritative contribution to the subject of healing.

Universal Bible Bidle Sunday, December 9

George William Brown, General Secretary of the American Bible Society.

The American Bible Society over a period of years has been sponsoring Universal Bible Sunday. Each year a theme has been chosen around which material has been built with the central emphasis upon the Holy Scriptures.

. . . . This year it will be "Sowing the Seed". The printed material which is available for this year's celebration compares in an interesting manner with the seed of the sower the penny portions of Scripture published by the American Bible Society. Our Lord's well-known parable of the sower is the subject around which the material has been gathered.

The observance of Universal Bible Sunday aims to magnify the place which the Sacred Scriptures occupy in the Christian faith. The position of the Bible in every church auditorium is one of prominence. It rests upon a pulpit or lectern discernible from every corner of the building. The pastor takes his text from it in its elevated position and from its perennial truths he expounds truth. The Bible from its place of vantage is always visible to the congregation. Nothing takes precedence over it.

To individual life the Bible makes a peculiar contribution. It brings solace to the sorrowing, hope to the depressed, peace to the troubled and inspiration to the languid. In the grave crises of life men turn to the Book. Encyclopedias, dictionaries, books of reference; biographies, fiction, all serve their purpose but none can assume the position of the Bible. To the souls of men its message is divine. When the deepest anxiety of the World War was upon us the late President Wilson wrote: "The Bible is the Word of Life. I beg that you will read it and find this out for yourselves. When you have read it you will know that it is the Word of God, because you will have found the key to your own heart, your own happiness and your own duty."

Universal Bible Sunday was conceived and is prompted to emphasize yearly the fundamental position which the Bible occupies in the spiritual life of men and women. Sometimes the importance of the Bible is forgotten, sometimes its value is unrealized, sometimes its message is unknown. Universal Bible Sunday, increasingly observed, prepares the atmosphere and offers the setting for a thoughtful consideration and an earnest reminder of the Bible's primary place in the Christian faith. Just as the Sunday nearest the Fourth of July gives an opportunity for stressing patriotism and the Sunday before Labor Day is an opportune hour for pleading for the introduction of Christian idealism in the dealing between capital and labor and just as Easter Sunday is the day supreme of all the year for strengthening humanity's faith in immortality so Universal Bible Sunday is the day of days for magnifying the great power of the Bible. This is the purpose of Universal Bible Sunday.

Ninth Bishop of South Carolina Consecrated.

The Rev. Albert Sidney Thomas, rector of St. Michael's Church, was consecrated ninth Bishop of South Carolina in his own Church in Charleston, S. C., on St. Andrew's Day. There were present the Presiding Bishop, John G. Murray, who was consecrator; the co-consecrators, Bishops Cheshire, of North Carolina, and W. T. Capers, of West Texas; the presenters, Bishops Mikell, of Atlanta, and Finlay, of Upper South Carolina; the preacher, Bishop Bratton, of Mississippi, and the litanist, Bishop Dart, of East Carolina. The bishop-elect was attended by the Rev. Messrs. Harold Thomas (his brother), F. W. Ambler, C. M. Hobart and A. R. Mitchell. The master of ceremonies was the Rev. S. C. Beckwith, rector of St. Philip's Church, Charleston, and the Rev. William B. Sams, secretary of the diocese, acted as registrar. In addition there were present all of the clergy of the Diocese of South Carolina, with one exception, and several from neighboring dioceses. The Presiding Bishop was attended by his chaplain, the Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, of the Church Missions House.

After the service, luncheon was served to the bishops and clergy in the Parish House: there Bishop Murray briefly addressed those present and pronounced his blessing upon the new bishop and his work. Bishop Thomas was presented with a pectoral cross by the clergy of the diocese, his ring by the Parish of St. Michael's, and his vestments by St. Bartholomew's Church, Hartsville, S. C., which he had founded while ministering in that locality some years ago.

Bishop Thomas is a native of South Carolina, and has spent his entire ministry in the state: born in Columbia in 1873, he attended public school in Charleston, entered the Citadel, where he graduated as first honor man and company captain. After teaching school for five years, he matriculated at the General Theological Seminary, graduating from there in 1900 as a Bachelor of Divinity. He was made deacon and ordained priest by the Rt. Rev. Ellison Capers, seventh bishop of the diocese. For eight years he ministered to the congregations at Darlington, Marion and Society Hill; from 1908 to 1921 he was rector of St. David's Church, Cheraw; from there he came to St. Michael's Church, Charleston. Bishop Thomas is a direct descendant of the Rev. Samuel Thomas, who came to the colony of South Carolina in 1702 and served the parish of St. James, Goose Creek; and from that day to this the Thomas family have always been identified with South Carolina.

He comes to his work with wide experience in the life of the Church in this diocese: as President of the Standing Committee, he has been its executive head since the death of Bishop Guerry last June. He has been on the Executive Council since its organization, and has been chairman of the department of missions; and in addition has attended all the recent General Conventions as delegate. He is President of the Charleston Bible Society, and Chaplain of the Huguenot Society of South Carolina.

His wife was formerly Miss Emily Jordan Carrison, of Camden, S. C.; they have three children, Henry C., a student at the University of North Carolina; Albert S., Jr., and Emily Jordan.

Tablet to Commemorate First Service in Cathedral.

It is proposed, and meets with the approval of the Bishop of Washington, to erect in the National Cathedral a tablet commemorating the fact that the first service ever held in the Cathedral was the Corporate Communion of the Woman's Auxiliary, when the Great United Thank Offering was laid upon the altar at the opening of this Convention of 1928. It will be a memorial for future generations through hundreds of years to come. Obviously such a tablet should be one of beauty and dignity; in fact, it must be so, to be acceptable to the committee which determines what memorials may find a place in the great Cathedral. At least $1,500 will be required to cover the cost. Since none of the Auxiliary money must be used for the purpose, it is believed that individuals from each Diocese will be interested to contribute towards erecting this memorial so that it may be inscribed as the gift of the Woman's Auxiliary throughout the nation. Such money may be sent to the Treasurer of the New York Diocese, who will collect the requisite sum and put it in the hands of a competent committee to attend to the ordering and erecting of the tablet. Checks should be drawn to the order of Mrs. Thomas Ewing, Treasurer, and sent to 45 East Sixty-fifth Street, New York City.

Archbishop Lang Welcomed to Canterbury.

The Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, formerly Archbishop of York, is to be enthroned with great ceremony as Archbishop of Canterbury on December 4, provided King George's condition is not considered serious enough to interfere. The new Archbishop will deliver his address in the great Canterbury Cathedral before representatives of the Church of Sweden, the Old Catholic Church of Holland, the American Church, the Greek Church, the German Lutheran Church, the Russian Church, besides dignitaries of the Church of England, from all over the world.

When Dr. Lang arrived at Canterbury from London last Saturday country people as well as townspeople were crowding the streets to give him an enthusiastic welcome. His car passed under the ancient West Gate Tower and carried him straight to the Guildhall. Here the mayor of the town presented an address of welcome in an oaken case and referred to the friendship between the ecclesiastical authorities and the municipality.

In his response Dr. Lang humorously referred to former feuds between the Dioceses of Canterbury and York and then concluded his address with praise for the sterling worth and character of the British working people.

Begin Right at Home.

At the recent National Convention of B'Nai B'Rith, the great Jewish charitable and religious organization, held at Washington, rabbis and other leaders of that wonderful race deplored the increasing tendency of their young men and women toward atheism and abandonment of all religion and beliefs. This confirms the observation of Gentile observers. Younger Jews, by scores of thousands, faith in the teachings of their fathers shattered by conditions and surroundings, drift to moral and intellectual chaos and confusion.

Putting aside the matters of spiritual welfare and the duty of Christians to unbelievers and their fellow citizens, people in this country have to consider the plain fact that we have here more than four and a half million Jews, many of them substantial and influential people, and that a large proportion of them left to become Atheists would constitute a serious menace to Christianity and our most cherished and essential institutions. Self interest and the impulse of self protection, if we consider no higher motive, suggest earnest, organized effort to combat these dangerous tendencies.

Many facts indicate that the time is ripe for bringing the ancient people of God to the true faith, to acceptance of Jesus as their promised Messiah. It is impossible to imagine a nobler or finer work or higher purpose than the bringing of these people, noble and fine as so many of them are, into the great fold, after their centuries of straying, for which they have been made to suffer so bitterly.

If Episcopalians and Christians generally are in earnest in the declared determination to make next year the beginning of an epochal evangelizing campaign, they can find no field more hopeful, more valuable or more difficult than among our Jewish neighbors, all about us, with many whom we are in daily contact, many of whom we are proud to number among our friends. One special reason why they are difficult to approach on the subject of religion is the inherited prejudice, to the shame of Christianity too well justified, resulting from the persecutions, in various forms, to which their race has been subjected in the name of the Saviour.

B. A. M. Schapiro, 405 Bible House, New York City, has written and published a number of tracts designed to meet the difficulty in approaching intelligent and open-minded Jews, the substance of some of them having been published in The Southern Churchman. He is a highly educated, clean strain Jew of unquestionable sincerity and earnestness. One of his tracts especially appealing and valuable, is "Why I, a Jew, am a Christian". It should be put in hands of every thinking Jew in the country. Written conservatively, clearly and convincingly, it gives facts, quotations from the Old Jewish records and Hebrew Chronicles, which, at least, must cause honest-thinking and self-searching among conscientious Jews seeking to be and do right.

Copies of this may be obtained by writing to Mr. Schapiro at the address given. They can be presented tactfully and without offense, with simple request that they be read at leisure and discussed, if discussion is desired, with Mr. Schapiro, by correspondence, or with the nearest clergyman.

The year 1929 has been designated as the time for the beginning of great work, for the sowing of seed for mighty fruitage. The Jews are here, right at our hands and within touch of us. They can be made a tremendous power for good or left neglected to become a fearful power for evil.

If we are to begin work, now is the time to begin and here is the place to begin.

Missionary Bishop of Tohoku Consecrated.

St. Alban's Church, Washington, D. C., was the scene of the elaborate ceremonies of the consecration as missionary bishop of Tohoku, Japan, of the Rev. Norman Spencer Binsted, on Monday morning, December 3. Bishop Henry S. George Tucker of Virginia, formerly Bishop of Kyoto, Japan, preached the sermon and spoke of the tasks of Christian missionaries in foreign fields. Following the sermon Bishop Freeman and Dean Bratenahl of Washington presented the Rev. Mr. Binsted to Bishop Murray, who was standing at the altar.

Bishop Murray called for Mr. Binsted's testimonials and the Rev. Charles L. Pardee, Secretary of the House of Bishops, read the certificate of election; The Rev. Charles T. Warner, rector of St. Alban's Church, read the canonical testimonial, and the Rev. Giles B. Palmer, of Richmond, Va., read the certificate of ordination. When the Rev. Mr. Binsted pronounced his promise of conformity to the doctrine, discipline and worship.

The Presiding Bishop and the other bishops present laid their hands upon Mr. Binsted while Bishop Murray intoned the formal charge to "receive the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a bishop in the Church of God, now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands". Bishop Murray then presented the new consecrated bishop with a Bible and a further charge to "give heed unto reading, exhortation and doctrine".

At the conclusion of the consecration ceremonies the communion service was held, at which the attending clergymen and the new bishop communicated.

Bishop Binsted is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Binsted of 5210 Sherier Place, Washington, D. C., and both parents were present at the consecration service. Born in Toronto, Canada, he was brought to Washington when only six months old. He passed his childhood there and was graduated from the Western High School. He subsequently graduated from St. John's College, Kentucky, and in 1920 he did special work at London University. He received his theological training at the Virginia Theological Seminary, at Alexandria, and was ordained a deacon at the Bethlehem Chapel, of the Washington Cathedral, in 1915. The following year he was ordained priest at Tokyo, Japan. in 1917 he married Miss Willie Gibson, of Warsaw, Ky.

Only thirty-seven years old, Bishop Binsted is one of the youngest bishops of the Episcopal Church. On his return to Japan next spring, he will preside over the Tohoku District, containing 13,000 square miles and 6,000,000 people.

Bishop-Coadjutor of Honan Elected.

A cable from Shanghai informs the Department of Missions that the Rev. P. I. Lindel T'sen has been elected bishop-coadjutor of Honan at a special session of the Diocesan Synod. Honan is the one diocese for the development of which the Church of England in Canada has been responsible. It lies immediately north of the Province of Hupeh, of which Hankow is the see city. During the past five years, especially, the Province has been one of the battle fields of China. Moreover, its people have suffered enormously from brigands and fanatical societies, such as the Red Spears.

The bishop-elect became a Christian through the work and fatherly care of the Rev. Frans E. Lund, of our station at Wuhu. He was graduated from St. James' Middle School, Wuhu, and later from Boone College and Divinity School. His first independent work was as minister-in-charge of the important inland city of Nanling, one of the outstations of Wuhu. Here Mr. T'sen did a work of far-reaching importance, winning many of the townspeople and the surrounding farmers to the Christian way of life. Upon the formation of the Board of Missions of the Church in China in 1915, Mr. T'sen was elected its first general secretary. In addition to rallying the forces of the Church in China, for the support of the mission established by it in the City of Sian in the Province of Shensi, Mr. T'sen personally visited the field on various occasions and greatly encouraged the workers by his energy and wise counsel. His last visit was made during the year 1928 at a time when the mission was suffering great distress.

Mr. T'sen was also selected by his fellow-Christians as secretary of the interdenominational evangelistic effort known as The China for Christ Movement.

In 1924, Mr. T'sen came to this country for post-graduate study at the Virginia and Philadelphia Theological Seminaries.

On his return to China in 1926, he became Dean of the Cathedral of Our Saviour in Anking. In common with other Chinese leaders, he was compelled to leave the city by the anti-Christian movement, which came to a head in Anking immediately after the Nanking incident of March 24, 1927. Later, Mr. T'sen was able to return to Nanking, but it was a long time before the Cathedral Church, which had been occupied by the military, was restored to the congregation. Recently Mr. T'sen has been living in Wuhu.

Attractive Calendar.

The Alaskan Churchman, an illustrated quarterly published in the interests of the Church's Work in Alaska, has issued an attractive calendar for the year 1929. There is a very pretty cover in red and gold and on each page there is an interesting photograph taken in Alaska. The Sundays and special days of the Church Year are clearly indicated. This little calendar is certain to prove a useful and welcome Christmas gift and at the same time, as Bishop Rowe says, it aids the work in Alaska by keeping it before people's minds.

The Calendar is published in a limited edition and will be sent, postpaid, for fifty cents as long as the edition lasts. Address: The Alaskan Churchman, Box 6, Haverford, Pennsylvania.

Archbishop of Canterbury Retires.

On Sunday, November 4, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Davidson, delivered his farewell sermon to a congregation of about six thousand people in the great Cathedral at Canterbury. The Church of England newspaper relates the event:

"The Mayor and Corporation of Canterbury attended, and among the clergy present were two of the Primate's former chaplains, the Bishop of Dover and the Dean of Canterbury. By the side of the throne and the pulpit were groups of red and pink roses, the gift of the inside staff of the Cathedral and of the old Palace. To those who listened in to His Grace's sermon over the wireless there could almost be felt the 'atmosphere' of the great occasion, and one could visualize the mighty congregation as it followed every word of the good-bye message from him who has been the chief pastor of our beloved Church of England for the past quarter of a century.

"The conferment by the King of a peerage on the retiring Archbishop of Canterbury is an honor that all people have loudly applauded. Thus his retirement will not rob the House of Lords of either his presence or his wisdom. He has been a member of the Upper House since 1895, first as Bishop of Winchester and then as Archbishop."

Warning.

The clergy, especially of the Southern States, are warned against a rather short, heavy set man, appearing to be about twenty-five years of age, who has been attempting to fleece the clergy with the tale of having a mother dead in a nearby city, and asking for money for transportation thither. In this city he gave the name of ady and claimed to be a nephew of the Rev. Frank Cady, of Tyrone, Pa., and claimed knowledge of a cousin and priest of the Church in Charleston, W. Va., by the same name. In homasville, he claimed to be my nephew and to have a mother dead in this city. He seems to have considerable knowledge of the clergy of the Church and can summon quite a flood of tears at will. He is a rank imposter and should be handed over to the police.

Women to Aid St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo.

Women of the Church everywhere will be given an opportunity to have a part in a great undertaking in the interest of St. Luke's "to sweep the entire country", according to a statement made recently by Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the National Council, relative to the $2,656,500 campaign for St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo. The women's part in the movement will supplement the work of the men's committee, headed by the Hon. George W. Wickersham.

Because of the Every-Member Canvass no soliciting for St. Luke's will be done before Christmas. January and February have been designated by the National Council as the months for the intensive work for St. Luke's, and it is during this period that the women's united effort will take place. Individuals of broad humanitarian interests of other denominations are making contributions to the St. Luke's fund, but responsibility for its successful completion rests with the people of the Episcopal faith.

Members of the American Executive Committee for the hospital are extremely gratified that Mrs. Henry P. Davison, of New York City, has accepted the chairmanship of the National Women's Committee. Mrs. Davison is a woman of wide philanthropic interests. It will be recalled that her husband, the late Henry P. Davison, was chairman of the War Council of the American Red Cross during the war.

Mrs. Davison said after accepting the chairmanship:

"Not long ago former Senator George Wharton Pepper characterized St. Luke's as the outstanding achievement of the Church in the mission field. Every one who knows about the work of St. Luke's realizes that this is true. But in addition to this St. Luke's has a special significance for women of the Church because in opening the first recognized College of Nursing it is creating a new field of endeavor for Japanese women. Also its wonderful service to women and children through its clinics for mothers, infants and school children is pioneer work which should have an especial appeal for us. I am sure that all women who have the interests of the Church and of humanity at heart will want to have a part in this inspiring movement."

The National Women's Committee now is being formed and a strong group already have accepted memberships.

Women's local committees already are being formed in many of the larger cities, and it is expected that such groups will be organized throughout the various Dioceses before the first of the year to be in readiness for the campaign in January and February.

CAUTION.

Church people, especially in Southern towns, are cautioned against having dealings, business or social, with a woman who calls herself Mrs. C. E. Taylor and claims that she and her "husband" are Episcopalians.

Particulars may be had by addressing the undersigned.

Combined Services.

Sunday evening services in Georgetown have received a decided impetus by the combining of St. John's and Christ Church congregations at the two churches on alternating Sundays. The services are held in Christ Church on the first and third Sundays and in St. John's Church on the second and fourth Sundays. Rev. F. Bland Tucker has been the preacher for all of these services in the month of November, and Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth will be the preacher in December. It is planned to combine services in somewhat the same way during the Lenten season.

COLLECT FOR SECOND SUNDAY IN ADVENT.

Blessed Lord, Who hast caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning, grant that we may in such wise hear them read, mark, learn and inwardly digest them, that by patience and comfort and Thy Holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast, the blessed hope of everlasting life which Thou hast given us in Our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

WE BESEECH THEE TO HEAR US.

F. B. Stone.

We ask Thy highest blessing, Lord,
Upon the Church we love;
A Pentecost. We plead for light
And power from above;
For light to see that she must preach
The Gospel, Lord, that Thou didst teach.

'Tis still the Pentecostal age,
And men must still receive,
The Baptism of the Holy Ghost,
And in His gifts believe,
If they would follow in Thy way,
Fulfilling Thy commands today.

The two-fold Gospel Thou didst give,
To preach and heal the ill,
Has not been cancelled yet, dear Lord,
And it is still Thy will;
But half the story has been told,
The rest the Church must still unfold.

The power to do this still must come
From Pentecostal fire,
When consecration is complete,
Thy will her sole desire;
Then lo, the whole wide world shall see,
Great multitudes brought unto Thee.

Oh, give Thy Church the vision, Lord,
That she received at birth,
The whole man fitted for Thy use,
Thy temples on the earth
Recovered from the evil one,
By Thee our Saviour, God's dear Son.

And these the temples to endure,
Not wrought by mortal hands,
But shaped by Thy diviner touch
While doing Thy commands;
Obedient to Thy molding hands,
Christ-like shall men before Thee stand.

"The Neglected Age."

"The neglected age" is a term that we are hearing with increasing frequency—at lectures, in newspapers and magazines. What is the neglected age?

Two years ago, Miss Jessamine S. Whitney, Statistician of the National Tuberculosis Association, in analyzing tuberculosis deaths by age groups, found that while the death-rate from tuberculosis in general had declined thirty-six per cent in the last decade, the death-rate at the ages fifteen to twenty-five had declined only one-half that amount, or eighteen per cent for the same period. The greatest decline was shown for children under five, while in the age group twenty-five to forty-four it had declined forty-two per cent. For children between the ages of five and fourteen it had declined forty-one per cent. It was the group from fifteen to twenty-four that had made little progress in overcoming tuberculosis. This period she therefore named "the neglected age".

Why is it that with better living conditions, increased knowledge of sanitation and health rules these younger people are not benefiting as they should? This is a question that at present cannot be answered. Conjectures have been made and the problem presented by this group are in the embryonic process of being solved.

Over one-third of the boys and girls from fifteen to nineteen years old are in high schools. As students they are not supposed to suffer hardships that are often forced on their less fortunate brothers and sisters who are out earning money at this age. It is known, of course, that the physiological changes taking place in the adolescent period tend to weaken the resistance of boys and girls. And girls who at this age think it proper to diet and keep slim, as their mothers are doing, really are injuring their chances for health. Late hours, fatigue, scanty clothing (for after all warmth outside is as necessary as is the inside warmth furnished by the fuel, food), extra strain and responsibility that oftentimes come with student life, as well as with factory or industrial life, all help to influence this high mortality from tuberculosis. For that disease attacks the run-down body. The healthy person readily overcomes the tuberculosis germs that invade the body.

What can be done to help the situation? We do know the answer to that question. During these years, whether your boy or girl is in school, college, or out in the business world, careful watch should be kept over the general health. Teeth should not be neglected, infected tonsils and adenoids must be removed, defects of vision and hearing must be corrected, skin disorders treated, frequent colds must be considered serious. Above all things, good nourishing food with plenty of fruit and vegetables and sufficient rest and fresh air will go far toward building strong bodies and a physical system that is fortified to throw off sickness. In other words prevention, that plays a far more important role in modern medicine than cure, will anticipate the attack of tuberculosis.

For twenty-five years the National Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated state and local associations, have been seeking to teach the importance of sickness prevention. They feel that if health rules are practiced in childhood it is far easier to follow the good habits in older life. Their campaign is supported by the annual sale of Christmas Seals in December. Help them to solve the problem of the "neglected age".—Elizabeth Cole.

The Meaning of Christmas.

To a person who has lived for half a century Christmas may be, in a sense, a very painful thing. There are always the memories of former Christmases that come flooding over him, and he is bound to miss the bodily presence at least of many persons whom he has loved in years past. Indeed it can be one of the most melancholy seasons of the year, and no doubt many persons who read this have, at certain periods of their lives, almost dreaded the coming of Christmas on account of the recollections of past happiness and joys it was sure to bring them.

The antidote for this very real sort of melancholy I suppose lies in the determination to realize Christmas as a spiritual meeting time for all those who have gone before, even though they are not present in the flesh. In other words, for the person who has lived for many years it must be either a spiritual occasion, shot through with all the colors of spiritual joy, or it becomes merely a material time of good living with many melancholy connotations.

It is only by clinging to the thought that there is no death, that there can be no death, that Christmas becomes tolerable to many of us. So it is terribly true that unless you do make Christmas a really Christmas festival, you do not have any Christmas at all. You have only a rather gross physical parody of the true spirit of the thing. The ostentatious giving without the giver's heart in the gift, the stuffing of one's self with too much rich food—these things go to make up a debased burlesque of Christmas. To repeat, it is a Christian festival, or it is nothing; you can't have it any other way; if you try to have it any other way, you simply don't have it. You have something else that is as foreign to Christmas as a pagan celebration.—Don Marquis, in Designer.

Telling the Truth.

Whenever Mrs. Joshua Ebely declared that for her part, she believed in telling the truth and not mincing matters, her hearers knew that somebody's reputation was about to suffer. She herself said that she always had been outspoken, and she always intended to be. Her neighbors said—various things. The fact of the matter was that she was the possessor, in addition to her sharp tongue, of an imposing presence and much force of character, nobody in the village dared openly oppose her.

Nobody, that is, until the new minister's wife came. The new minister's wife was a slender, girlish-looking creature whom Mrs. Ebely "sized up" at once as being one of those women who need somebody to form their opinions for them, and this responsible duty she promptly took upon herself. She was the first to call, and in the course of a long monologue, she enlightened the minister's wife in regard to the failings of a large number of her husband's parishioners.

"I think it is better to know the truth in the first place," she declared, "slowing up" a moment for breath.

In her absorption of the theme, she had not noticed how color had arisen in the little woman's face, nor that she had been waiting for an opportunity to speak. Now she spoke with quick earnestness:

"I quite agree with you, only I think that, after all, there is nothing so difficult to know as the truth. Because, of course, the truth about a person means the whole person; it is no more fair to pick out one trait and call that the truth than it would be to define a rose bush as a bush with thorns. That is true, but it is only a part and a very small part, of the truth.

"I've thought a good deal about this since I've been a minister's wife, and I've made up my mind to learn just as much of the truth as I possibly can. This is especially necessary in coming to a new place, where we don't know anybody; and that's why I'm so glad that you came.

"You are just the one to help me, you've lived here so long, and know everybody so well. I'm going to ask you, just as a beginning toward the truth, if you won't go over the list of church members with me, and tell me the very finest and bravest thing you know about everybody. You've no idea how it will help."

The neighbors reported that something must have happened at the minister's, for Mrs. Ebely was a changed woman from that day.—Exchange.

OUTCAST.

Edith Mirick.

With look and word
Sharp-edged as thorn,
They cast their stones
(Who only scorn)
Upon my heart
As, blow on blow,
They bruised a stark
Back long ago.
I falter, Christ,
I blindly kneel--
With trembling, eager Fingers feel—
Ah, grope to find
The words Your hands
Wrote there, for me,
Upon the sands.

Among the Lepers.

My first visit to a Leper settlement was in 1905. It is on an island in the Atlantic Ocean, near San Juan, Porto Rico. It is a desolate spot. The accommodations were crude, the waves hurled themselves upon the rocks, the sea was in all directions with the exception of the faint outlines of the Morro and San Juan in the distance. My friend and I had a meeting with them. At first some of them feared to be beguiled by the invitation of "the Protestant priest", as they called me. That day my eyes were first opened to the thirst for sympathy and gospel cheer on the part of these afflicted people. How they drank in every word! How my own heart was stirred as I beheld their twisted limbs and distorted faces! I confess to feeling that that afternoon's service alone repaid me for my journey of thirteen hundred miles to Porto Rico.

I remember asking one of the patients through an interpreter how they passed their time. He replied, "We read a little, we talk a little and cry a great deal." I asked, "Why do you cry?" His response was, "We want to see our people". As our little boat tossed its way back to San Juan the government official, who had accompanied us and who did not profess to be a religious man, thoughtfully remarked, "After all, say what you will, religion is a great solace".

Another Leper colony, surrounded by an oftentimes restless sea, is Robben's Island about one hour's run from Cape Town, South Africa. Glorious Table Mountain, behind the city, recedes from view as we approach the landing. Here are hundreds of patients, mostly natives, awaiting their doom. Every care that can be afforded, according to the depleted financial resources of the government, has been granted. The world war left the country very poor and when I was last at Robben's Island, many partly arrested cases were being returned home. The wisdom of such a reduction of expenditures seems questionable.

I recall a funny incident when going over the hospital. I was endeavoring to comfort a native who could barely articulate because much of his face and mouth had been destroyed, but who brokenly conversed in the English language. Finally, rather inanely, I said, "We must leave our afflictions with the Lord". He replied, "We can't do better and we can't do worse". Of course, I knew what he meant.

In the high altitudes of the Transvaal, South Africa, one thousand miles north of Cape Town, is a large Leper settlement. That lovable little Frenchman, Chaplain Bourquin, accompanied me when visiting it. The number of patients—Christians and non-Christians—were about one thousand, probably one hundred and fifty of them being of white or near-white parentage. There was a large group of young folks from six to sixteen years of age. I asked how long these children were likely to live, and was informed that possibly within eight years the remorseless malady will have completed its course.

At this colony I had two Leper interpreters, one a negro minister who translated into Zulu, the other into Santo. Elsewhere in Africa a full-blooded Kafir proved to be one of the most responsive interpreters I have had in any part of the world. Englishmen acquainted with him declared that he was the most nimble-minded man they had ever known, being apt at numerous languages, he also being a Leper.

Chaplain Bourquin told me that a few days prior to my visit, when he had administered communion to two hundred and thirty of these people, he in many cases had been compelled to hold the cup to their lips. It has always been a nerve-trying experience to address these deformed, scarred, mutilated wrecks of humanity with their blighted hopes, their sufferings, their fears. What could I say to them? I admit that after meeting with such pitiful congregations I have been glad to leave the fetid air, yet thankful because of the happiness which visits from a stranger seemed to bring into their monotonous lives.

After a meeting with the natives in the over-crowded assembly room of the settlement in the Transvaal, Chaplain Bourquin overheard one man say to another,"Now I know that God loves us. See, He sent this gentleman all the way from America to tell us how sorry he is for us. Now I am sure God loves us!" How uplifting is a simple faith!

White Lepers seem to suffer keenly from mental depression. Among the white patients in this large settlement were two brothers, both young men of fine physical appearance and presenting no exterior indications of trouble. I have been told that leprosy is "not contagious but is transmissible", yet have observed that whilst in many cases it has been transmitted where the most intimate relationships have existed there are other cases which seem to justify the belief that it can be communicated to others.

On the Canal Zone, 1916, I visited Palo Seco, a Leper colony near Panama. It is controlled by the United States government. The location is beautiful. Trade winds sweep through the rustling palms and lovely tropical foliage. The views across Panama Bay, for miles dotted with islands, are charming. The patients are given occupations in harmony with their physical ability. Ground is allotted to them, which they till, and the products are paid for by the institution at market value. When I was there 200 reels of moving picture films were soon to be delivered to the colony. There is a little library. Tokens, made of metal representing the value of the denominations of United States money, are used by the patients. This does away with the possibility of money finding circulation outside of the colony after the Lepers may have used it. A dollar of tokens has the same value among them as has a United States silver dollar.

There is a tiny church in this community. Romanists and Protestants use it alternately. Both have their own accessories for the one altar. An interesting history is attached to the brass bookholder in this little house of prayer. Years ago the Lepers of Palo Seco heard through a visitor of a Leper settlement in Japan. They saved $10 and sent it to Japan. The Japanese Lepers in return raised $10 and forwarded it to Palo Seco. The proceeds were invested in the bookholder. International sympathy can be experienced by all peoples of any race or clime.

About eighty Lepers have been declared cured at Palo Seco, and returned to their homes after treatment with the chaulmoogra oil remedy. Probably about twenty per cent of Lepers to whom it elsewhere has been applied have been cured; but after having been released they have continued under medical observation. The same percentage of cures is being realized among thousands of Lepers throughout the world. For centuries the oil of the chaulmoogra tree has been known in India as a remedy for leprosy. It has been comparatively of recent years that the identity of this tree has become known to European and American physicians and the process of extracting the oil into a reliable medicament has become established. It is stated that after a few applications of the modern preparation, both physical and mental conditions improve. The awful sores eventually heal up. Of course, lost members can never be restored and disfigurements remain.

The dark-skinned peoples of the Caribbean Sea are apparently susceptible to leprosy. They are often very religious. Their magnificent voices, strangely rich in pathos, pour forth such grand old hymns as "Jesus, Lover my My Soul", or, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus". Every syllable swings out to a true note—every word carries a personal appeal to the Saviour, their abiding hope.

The number of Lepers throughout the world is probably as large as ever. It is stated that in portions of East Africa one per cent of the native population suffers from the disease. The victims of this malady constitute a menace to the physical and economic life about them. They become destitute in almost every relation of life. They suffer in untold ways. The American Mission to Lepers aids more than one hundred hospitals in twenty different lands. I want my readers throughout our much-blessed country to help these suffering people.—William C. Allen, in Unity.

BUILDING BOATS.

Charles Ballard.

You may build a steamboat;
I'd sooner make a dream-boat,
A slender little stream-boat,
In silver paint and gray.
All day on a crooked river
I'd watch the water quiver,
And moor against a willow-root,
To slep the night away.

THE TURKEY.

At Christmas time the Poulterer's is all a blaze of gas,
With rows on rows of turkeys that will strut the farm no more;
The shopman smoothes his apron and assures the folks who pass
That never was such plump and pleasing poultry seen before.

I'm sorry for the turkey, yet the fault s
his own, I fear;
For had he kept his counsel he'd have grown an older bird;
But having bade us "Gobble! Gobble!
Gobble!" all the year,
He can't complain, at Christmas, if we take him at his word.

—E. V. Lucas.

Mamma's Christmas Gift.

"Mamma," said Billy, "what do you want for Christmas?"

"Dear me," said Billy's mamma, "I don't know of a single thing I want."

"But you must want things," said Billy. "You must—it's a sort of game. It doesn't matter whether you really want the things or not."

"Oh, I didn't understand," said mamma, entering into the game. "Well, then, let me see. I should like a diamond pin."

"And what else?" said Billy. "You must want more."

"I want a long sealskin ulster."

"Say something else—say lots of things."

"I want a new carriage, and a lace collar, and some curtains for baby's room."

"Mamma," said Billy, coming to her side and speaking earnestly, "don't you want a card like that one I painted this morning?"

"Oh, dear, yes," said mamma, quickly; "I should love to have a beautiful card like those you paint."

Billy went to the window and looked out at the snow and the sparrows, hopping on the walk which ran down to the street.

After a minute or two he came to mamma's side again: "Mamma," he said, very solemnly, "I won't say which, 'cause I don't want to spoil your surprise, but one of those things you told me you want you're surely going to get for Christmas."

Mamma leaned over and kissed the bright little face, and said softly: "I do wonder which it will be."—Exchange.

Chips.

Ned and Jack were sitting on the back porch, busy with their fishing tackle, when Peter came around the house with a very large smile on his face and a basket on his arm.

Peter was a boy who had come to the next farm the year before with other fresh-air children, and the farm people had liked the little fellow so well that they had kept him ever since. He was younger than Ned and Jack.

"I'm going all day with some boys to get wild flowers," he said, the smile growing larger, if possible. "I've got an errand for your mother."

"Is that in the basket, too, Peter?" asked Ned.

"No; that's on my tongue. I'm to meet the boys down at the corner. I've never picked a wild flower in my life."

He set his basket in a corner of the porch and went into the house.

"Say," said Ned, "let's play a joke on Peter. Let's take his lunch out and fill his basket with chips."

"All right!" said Ned, "but we needn't be bothered emptying it. There are plenty of grape baskets in the tool house just like it—we'll take one of those."

They filled the basket with the chips and set it in the place of Peter's which they hid inside the door. Then they went back to the tool house for their fishing rods.

Mother passed it as she came in from the garden and said:

"Don't forget your lunch, dears. Wait—I'll bring it around to you."

"Thank you, mother," they said, as she brought the basket. "Good-bye!"

They had a long walk before reaching the shade of the river. "Jane must have put us up a big lunch," said Ned, who carried the basket. "It gets heavier and heavier."

"Never mind," said Jack. "It'll taste good by the time we get to it."

They had poor success fishing, and at length decided to go farther up stream.

"Oh, but this basket's a tug!" said Ned.

"I'm hungry enough to eat—chips," said Jack, laughing as he thought of Peter's lunch. "I wonder what Peter thinks by this time?"

"Well, I'm ready for my lunch," declared Ned.

He took off the cover of the basket, then a brown paper, under which he expected to see a white napkin, and cried out in amazement and dismay.

"What?" asked Jack, looking closer. "Why—it's—"

"Chips!" wailed Ned.

And both sat despairingly gazing at the chips they had fixed in it for Peter's lunch.

How had it happened?

Mother had seen the basket of chips on the porch, and, thinking it was for the boys, had taken it to them. A few minutes afterwards Peter came out, did not see his basket, where he had left it, but found it behind the door, and took it. A little later Jane brought out the boys' lunch and both she and mother were much puzzled about things. And as two hungry boys walked wearily home Ned said: "I guess the joke's on us after all!"—The Young Christian Soldier.

David and the Rabbit.

David went to the door when the door-bell rang.

"Do you want something?" asked a gruff, kindly-faced mountaineer. "I've brought it down especially for you."

David nodded.

He could scarcely restrain his curiosity as the mountaineer took from his wagon a small box. David looked through the strips nailed over the top. Inside was a very small rabbit, not more than three or four weeks old.

"And this is for me?" asked David, excitedly.

"It's your, if you want it. I caught it wild up in the mountains especially for you."

"Oh, thank you, thank you. I've always wanted a rabbit," said David, in great rapture.

David spent a day building a pen for the rabbit. He was very careful to see that he fixed it so that the little animal couldn't burrow out and make his escape. The rabbit grew fast, and in another month was attaining the full vigor of young rabbithood. David was very proud, feeding and watering it every day.

But when the rabbit was half grown, a change came over it. It ate less and less. The choice plantain and alfalfa leaves that David gave it were left untouched. Choice grains, bran, and bread it treated the same way. It never seemed to drink any more. It became thinner and thinner, more and more listless. And David grew sadder and sadder. If this kept up, the rabbit could not live very much longer. David thought and thought and thought. Finally, he made his decision.

"It must be," he mused to himself. "It would be different if this were a tame rabbit. But to take a wild one, used to the freedom of the mountains and the fields, and expect it to be happy, and grow, and thrive in a pen four feet square is asking too much even of Mother Nature. How would I feel if I were shut up in a room, never allowed out, and gazed at nearly all the time? Guess I'd feel about the same way, and lose my appetite and grow thin."

These thoughts came to David just before he fell asleep one night. The next morning he arose, put the listless rabbit in a box, and went up to the edge of the mountain. There he set it free. He could not help thinking of a poem he had read not long before, one by Jas. Whitcomb Riley, his favorite poem, called "Good-by, Jim, Take Care o' Yourself". As the rabbit scampered joyously away among the trees, David whistled to it, and called, "Good-by, bunny! Take care o' yourself."—Our Dumb Animals.

The Treasures of the Forest.

In a little hut on the edge of the forest of India lived a poor wood-cutter and his family. Every morning at sunrise the wood-cutter shouldered his ax and went into the forest to hunt for the dead branches of trees, which he cut for fire-wood. One evening, when he was returning home he met a sage. Now, a sage is a good and holy man who always speaks words of wisdom. The sage said to the wood-cutter, "My friend, why do you not go onward, deeper into the forest?" The man replied, "Why should I go deeper into the forest when I find enough firewood near the edge?" "My friend, go onward, deeper into the forest".

All night the wood-cutter lay awake thinking of what the sage could mean by his strange words. In the morning he arose with the sun, shouldered his ax, and started out. As he reached the place where he had met the sage, he heard mysterious voices saying, "Onward! go onward!" and though he knew no reason for doing so, he passed the place where he usually gathered firewood, and went onward. He had not gone far before a sweet odor came to his nostrils, the odor of sandalwood, very valuable because of its fragrance, the wood-cutter cut down as many trees as he could carry and took them to the village and sold them.

Next morning he arose and started on his day's work; and as he passed the place where he met the sage, it seemed to him he could hear the words, "Onward, go deeper into the forest". And then, not knowing any reason why he should not do so he passed the place where he had gathered the sandalwood. This time his path lay amid thorns and briers. He became discouraged, and was just about to turn back, when his eyes fell on some rocks with green spots on them. He picked them up and examined them; he found them to be copper. In the depths of the forest he had found a copper mine. He took the specimens to the market and sold the copper mine for a large sum.

The next morning he started out to the forest again. As he reached the place where he had met the sage, he seemed to hear again the mysterious words he had heard the day before. He passed the firewood, the sandalwood, and the copper mine and went deeper into the forest. The path became so dense with thorns and briers that he became greatly discouraged and was turning to go back, when he noticed some shining particles on the ground. In the depths of the forest he found a silver mine. He sold the mine for a large sum. This made him the richest man in the village.

The next morning when he went into the forest, it was as before, the same mysterious words reached his ears. The wood-cutter passed the firewood, the sandalwood, the copper mine, and the silver mine. The way grew so hard that he could hardly go along at all; his hands and feet were bruised, and his body ached with fatigue. Again he became discouraged and decided to go back. As he turned he noticed a peculiar rock at his feet. He picked it up and found that it contained gold. He sold the mine for an immense sum. He was now the richest man in all India.

The next day he went again into the forest, hearing again at the same place the mysterious words, "Onward, go onward into the forest." He pushed on. But the road was beset with dangers; he was attacked by wild beasts. He became so frightened and discouraged that he turned to go back. But as he turned, his eye caught sight of something bright and shining upon the ground. He stooped and picked it up. It was a diamond. He had found a diamond mine in the depths of the forest. When he sold the diamond mine, he became the richest man in all the world.

Many years passed; and the wood-cutter, now a rich man, lived in a palace; he and his family had everything their hearts desired. The wood-cutter thought many times of the sage who had urged him onward. He wanted to thank him. He started out on his journey, and, after traveling many days, he found the sage in a distant village teaching a school of young men. They were all seated on mats around the sage. The wood-cutter told the sage he had come to thank him. The sage said, "I know that treasures are in the forest awaiting all those who seek them; I have known men who possessed perseverance enough to seek and find the treasures. But I have not known many who, after finding the treasures, remembered to return and thank the one who had pointed the way to the treasures."—From Favorite Stories, by Mabel Lee Cooper.

The Manners of a Prince.

In the morning mail was a book from Albert's aunt, who lived away off in California.

"Oh, goody!" cried Mortis, Albert's little sister. "What a wonderful book! Do sit down and read it to me."

But greedily Albert wanted to enjoy it all by himself, so he got up in the big rocking chair and began to read to himself. The story was all about a prince. Albert stopped reading every once in a while to dream about the story. How nice to be a prince and be able to order people about and to wear velvet coats and hats with plumes! The more Albert thought about it, the more he wished he was a prince. Finally, he put down the book and decided he would try being a prince. He dressed up as much like a prince as he could, and with chin up and head held high he walked across the lawn to the house next door. He went up the front steps and knocked loudly on the door.

"Woman,' he shouted when the door was opened. "I am nearly starved. Give me something to eat at once."

"Who are you that demands something to eat?" asked the woman.

"I am a prince," declared Albert, scowling.

"You do not look like a prince," objected the woman.

"Can't you see how finely I am dressed?" asked Albert.

"Clothes do not make a prince. You have not the manners of a prince. You frown and you give orders unpleasantly. A real prince would smile and bow and speak politely. I do not believe you are a prince at all.' And the woman closed the door.

Albert went down the street to another house. This time he did not knock so loudly on the door, and when it was opened he doffed his hat, bowed low to the ground and said: "My dear woman, I am hungry. Will you please give me something to eat? I am a prince traveling through your country."

"Pray enter," said the woman, who looked enough like Albert's grandmother to be her sister. "I am delighted to entertain a prince."

She set before Albert a plate upon which were two pieces of cake, one large and one small one.

"Will you be seated and feast with me?" she bowed to the prince.

Albert reached greedily across the table for the large piece of cake and began to stuff it into his mouth. At once the woman flung open the door.

"Begone!" she cried. "You are not a prince. You are an imposter. You have not the manners of a prince. A real prince would have served the lady first. A prince is never greedy nor impolite."

Albert walked around the square until he came to a house where a little boy and his sister lived. He tapped gently on the door and when it was opened made his best bow.

"Dear lady," he said, smiling, "I am a prince traveling in a far country. Will you kindly give me something to eat?"

And when the lady, who looked enough like Albert to be his mother, brought out a plate with two oranges on it, one small and one larger. Albert took the small one and passed the other to her.

"You have the manners of a prince," said the lady. "And yet I do not believe you are a prince at heart. A real prince would not leave a little sister to cry all alone in his castle while he traveled about and enjoyed good things to eat. I fear you are not a prince, after all."

Albert hung his head. Being a prince seemed to be much more than wearing fine clothes and ordering people about. He would have to read the book again to find out how a real prince acted. This time Albert read it aloud to his sister, and it was a very different story indeed. Albert found out that the prince was wise and good, kind and generous, ever ready to share with others, and that when he grew up he was much beloved by his subjects because he was such a good ruler. And Albert decided that he would practice all these things before he tried again to be a prince.

When he doffed his hat to the girls and ladies whom he met on the street, father said he was a prince. When to his neighbors he always remembered to say "thank you" they called him the "thank you" prince. When he passed the cake plate to his sister with the biggest piece of cake pointing right at her, mother said he was truly a prince —Christian Observer.

THE CHILD OF THE NEAR EAST.

Little Lord Jesus, when you were here,
You were a Near East Babe so dear.
In Bethlehem town where you were born
Near East babes are playing this morn.
In the carpenter shops of Nazareth Town,
Near East boys walk up and down.
These are your brothers and sisters small,
Who for love of you have lost their all.

As Wise Men brought you their gifts from afar
Following beams of a silvery star,
So we eat a Golden Rule meal today
And share with the children of Far-away
Who live in the land and walk on the street
That once knew the pressure of your dear feet
Doing to them, as we'd like to do
If the Near East babe, dear Lord, were YOU.

Finishing the Job.

"Jimmy, you've left your lawn mower out again," reproved daddy, as he seated himself at supper. "Just go and put it away before you eat."

Jimmy looked at his mother with a quiver of the lips, but arose to obey.

His father, noticing the look, called him back a moment, saying:

"I want you to know, Jim, that I was pleased at your cutting the grass for me, but I don't like a thing half done."

"I thought I did it nicely," Jim answered.

"You cut the grass well," his father admitted, "but you did not finish your job. Putting away your tools is as much a part of cutting the lawn as getting them out is. Better be sure the clippers are put away, too. Always finish your job."

When Jimmy had gone out, his mother said: "Poor boy, he worked so hard to get it looking nice for you."

"Yes, I know," replied daddy; "I appreciate it. But if we don't teach him to be tidy, who will? When he is grown up his wife will blame you if he doesn't put away his clothes, and his employer will hold him responsible if he carelessly leaves a government bond out of its place where some one can run off with it. He must learn now."

It was hard work, but Jimmy gradually did learn to finish his job. It is a great thing for a boy to have a father and mother to help him to learn things like this through which he may become a successful man.—The King's Own.

Poor Little Effie.

"Mamma, what do you think? There is a little girl in our school who never had a doll in her life! She says she has a rag doll but not a real one. I feel so sorry for her."

"Do you want to give her one of your dolls, dear?" asked her mamma.

"Why, no, I hadn't thought of that, mamma, but I feel sorry for her. She lives way down by the river in a little bit of a house, and I guess her folks are awful poor."

"Perhaps you had better divide your playthings with her," said Mrs. Rose; "you have too many for one little girl, anyway."

"All right, mamma," said Amy, who was a generous little girl. "How can I get them to her?"

"I am going to see if Effie's mamma can do some washing for me," said Mrs. Ross, "and you may go with me. Pick out the doll you want Effie to have, and we will start at once."

"Poor little Effie!" said Amy as they neared the little house. "Just think of living in that little bit of a house and having no playthings!"

But when they reached the house three rosy little children were digging their pink toes into a heap of warm, white sand, and having the best time in the world. There were corn cob dolls standing solemnly around the sand pile, and each child had a tiny farm with pebbles and shells for animals, and little stick fences to divide the fields. Amy dropped right down to see the wonderful things the children had made, and forgot all about Polly Dolly, wrapped up in a newspaper.

"What did Effie think of Polly Dolly?" asked mamma when they started home.

"I didn't give her to Effie, mamma," said Amy. "She has the loveliest playthings in the world, and mine aren't half as nice. She isn't poor at all, but rich."

"All little boys and girls are rich who know how to have good times and be happy," said her mamma. "Never forget that, dearie! WHEN COMPANY COMES.

When you're all by yourself,
You may play as you will—
Play storekeep or railroad
Or grind at the mill;
But when company comes,
It is nicer to say:
"My dear little friend,
"What would you like to play?"

When you're all by yourself,
You may play as you will—

HIS HEAVEN.

If God with such perfection can adorn
A desert lily—blossomed in the waste,
A fragile thing upon a brittle stalk,
And destined but a little while to last,

If he can clothe the valley violet
In purple richer than a monarch wears,
And leave it hidden by the water side,
Hemmed by a multitude of grassy spears,

If he can lavish beauty such as this,
Upon frail things enduring transiently,
If he has wrought such wonders upon earth,
How very lovely must his heaven be!

One literature alone has comprehended, in its entirety, the age-long drama of human existence. And that literature—likely to be again discovered—is the Bible. By the Book of Genesis a hundred generations have been taught the truth of a progressive creation, magnificent in the unity of matter which is shared by ourselves and the remotest star, and controlled by one eternal will. —P. N. Wilson.

THE QUEER LITTLE HOUSE.

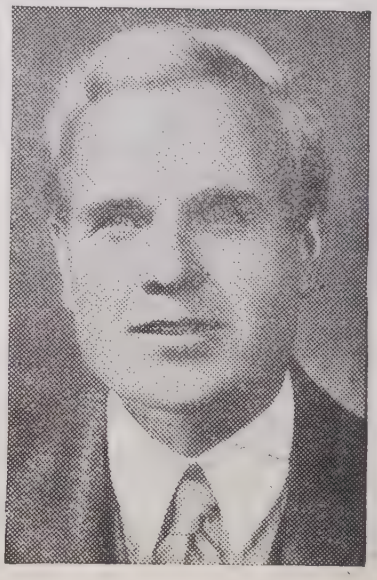
There's a queer little house,
And it stands in the sun,
And when the good mother calls
The children all run.
While under her roof
They are cozy and warm,
Though the cold wind may whistle
And bluster and storm.



In the daytime this queer
Little house moves away,
And the children run after it,
Happy and gay;
But it comes back at night,
And the children are fed,
And tucked up to sleep
In a soft feather bed.

This queer little house
Has no windows or doors—
The roof has no shingles,
The rooms have no floors—
No fireplaces, chimneys,
No stoves can you see,
Yet the children are cozy
And warm as can be.

The story of this
Funny house is all true;
I have seen it myself,
And I think you have too.

At what age is a man in his prime?

Many a young man old before his time

EVERYBODY will tell you something different. Some people are past their prime by the time they're forty. A few never know what it's like to feel in their prime. And then you talk to some hale and hearty man of 65, and he'll tell you he's been in his prime as long as he can remember.

"I'm still in my prime," he'll declare. "It's all a matter of how well you feel. And that's largely a matter of keeping your system in good working order. Living by regular schedule.

"Nujol helps things function like clockwork. Makes everything normal and regular, just as Nature intends it to be. Nujol is not a medicine. It contains absolutely no medicine or drugs. So it can't possibly upset or disagree with anybody.

"It's just a pure natural substance. It not only keeps an excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them), but aids in their removal. It's these poisons that sap your health and energy, slow you up, make you old before your time."

Start the Nujol habit now — no matter whether you're only 20, or whether you're getting on in years. Buy a bottle today. You'll find Nujol at all drugstores. Perfected by the famous Nujol Laboratories, 26 Broadway, New York. Sold only in sealed packages.

Keep up the treatment for the next 3 months — faithfully — and you'll never want to go back to just trusting to luck again.

"THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS"

Is the Subject of Discnssion

Everybody agrees that it is thoroughly and continuously good; that it is readable; that it presents fairly and interestingly in text and pictures the missionary work of the Church, as well as the work and varied activities of the Departments and co-operating agencies.

In enthusiastic chorus, clergy and laity express the wish that it might be read in every Church family. Yet thousands of Church people have never seen it,—simply because no one has brought it to their attention. With the splendid effort of the Woman's Auxiliary, begun in 1925 and re-affirmed at Washington, it is now possible to see the magazine and learn about it from Parish Representatives all through the Church.

VITAL FACTS

ABOUT

JAMESTOWN, YORKTOWN, WILLIAMSBURG, COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY

1617.—King James I. authorized the bishops and clergy of England to make collections "for the erecting of some churches and schools for the education of the children of those barbarians in Virginia."

1618.—The London Company gave orders to lay out grounds for a university at Henrico, of which the Indian College was to be a branch, and endowed it with 10,000 acres of land.

May 26, 1619.—Sir Edwin Sandys reported to the London Company that 1,500 pounds had been collected for the proposed college.

July 31, 1619.—The General Assembly of Virginia petitioned the company to send workmen for erecting the university and the college.

May 11, 1620.—George Thorpe appointed deputy by the company to have charge of the college lands.

March 22, 1622.—Indian massacre, in which George Thorpe was killed and Henrico annihilated. Plans for university and college abandoned.

1661.—The General Assembly enacted that "There be land taken upon purchases for a college and free schools".

1690.—At a convention of the clergy in Jamestown, Dr. James Blair submitted a paper entitled, "Several propositions for a free school and college, to be humbly presented to the consideration of the next General Assembly".

1691.—Dr. James Blair was sent to England by the General Assembly to secure a charter and endowment for a college.

February 8, 1693,—Charter granted the college by King William and Queen Mary.

May 14, 1694.—Coat-of-Arms granted William and Mary College by Herald's College in London.

1694.—Work was begun on the college building. The grammar school was opened.

1700.—Beginning in 1700 the college building was used as the headquarters of the colonial government. The General Assembly met in the building for the sessions of December, 1700; August, 1701; May and August, 1702.

1705.—College building accidentally burned.

1716.—The grammar school and Indian schools were continued in the period between 1705 and 1716. In the latter year, it is stated that the college building was well-nigh completed again.

1723.—The Brafferton building erected by means of funds supplied by the executors of the estate of the Honorable Robert Boyle. An Indian school was conducted in this building.

February 27, 1729.—All departments of the college established. The transfer of all college realty and personalty from the trustees to the faculty.

1732.—The president's house and college erected.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

Legacy to Christ Church.

Christ Church, Georgetown, has lately become the beneficiary of a legacy left by Mrs. Downs L. Wilson for the enlarging and improvement of the parish hall. Plans for the work are now under discussion, and it is hoped that the building operations may begin in the spring. The present parish hall is wholly inadequate to the needs of the parish and the enlarged and improved building will be a great asset in the work of the whole church. Mrs. Wilson has left this legacy in memory of her husband, Downs L. Wilson, who was for many years a vestryman of Christ Church.

Union Thanksgiving Service.

The Episcopal Churches in Georgetown all joined in the community Thanksgiving service which was held in Dumbarton Methodist Church.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor

Woman's Auxiliary.

The thirty-sixth annual meeting of the Southern Virginia Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in St. John's Church, Halifax, and Trinity Church, South Boston, on November 6, 7 and 8.

Mrs. Walter Whichard, presiding officer; the Rt. Rev. R. E. Campbell, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Liberia; Rev. H. W. Foreman, National Secretary for Rural Work; Miss Grace Lindley, National Executive Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Deaconess Blanche Adams were the special guests during this meeting.

The Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., LL. D., made the opening address on Tuesday evening.

At the Corporate Communion on Wednesday morning a commemoration of the departed members of the Auxiliary was made.

The Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., conducted the devotional service and meditation on Thursday morning.

Mrs. Frank Holladay, Diocesan Secretary, gave a report of the triennial meeting.

Rural Work was especially emphasized.

Reports were made from the four community houses in this Diocese.

Pilgrimages were made to "Phoebe Anne Community House", where Miss Annie Hankins is in charge, and to "Dabney House", Miss Mildred Edmonds in charge.

Miss Clark told of the founding of "Clarkton House", and the work here was reported by Miss Pencye Connor and by the health nurse for the county.

Rev. M. B. Marshall reported "The Fork"; Miss Edith Gage, "Jackson-Field Home".

The delegates were luncheon guests on Thursday at Chatham Hall, our Diocesan School. Rev. Edmund J. Lee, rector of the school, gave an informal talk about the aims and ideals of this Church School.

Mrs. Edmund Lee gave a delightful talk; her subject, "A Message from China".

A beautiful organ recital, arranged by Mrs. Hankins, organist St. John's, Halifax, was enjoyed on Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Easley was hostess on Tuesday evening at a charming reception to the visitors.

Afternoon tea and a program of music and readings was given at Phoebe Anne Community House by Miss Annie Hankins.

Preaching Mission.

St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, Va., the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, rector, has just completed a most successful Preaching Mission. The Rev. John Gass, of St. John's Church, Charleston, W. Va., was the preacher, and splendid congregations were in attendance each night from Sunday, November 19, to Friday 23. The interest manifested in these services by members of other Christian bodies was marked, as was the cooperation of all the Episcopal Churches of the city. The Rev. Mr. Gass made a profound impression upon all who heard him, and his visit was a blessing to the whole community.

NORTHERN INDIANA.

Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop.

Church School Institute.

The second monthly meeting of the Church School Institute of the South Bend District was held at Howe, Ind., Sunday afternoon, November 11.

Dress parade at Howe Military Academy was witnessed by members of the Institute, who then went into a business session followed by a talk on "The Life of Our Lord", given by the Rev. Lawrence C. Ferguson, rector of St. James, South Bend.

NEW YORK.

William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, Suffragan.

MEMORIALS.

A group of three windows in memory of Charles W. Luke, Jr., the ten-year old son of Charles W. Luke of this city, were dedicated at St. James' Episcopal Church, Madison Avenue, and Seventy-First Street, on Sunday morning (Nov. 25th) by Rt. Rev William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York. The central lancet of the group represents King Solomon, with a small medallion top and bottom showing incidents from his life. The left lancet depicts the prophet Daniel, and the right shows Elijah raising the widow's son from the dead. These windows are in the north aisle of the chcurchc.

Four other windows were also dedicated by Bishop Manning that morning. One in the south clerestory of the nave is given in memory of Mrs. Ella Frances Burlingame by her son Frederic A. Burlingame, and depicts St. Catherine of Sienna in the central panel with Cranmer to the right and Wycliffe on the left. The remaining three windows are in the sacristy and are the gift of an anonymous donor. Bishop Manning was also the preacher Sunday morning. Rev. Dr. Frank Warfield Crowder is rector of St. James'.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop.

THE FALL CAMPAIGN

The Convocations are devoting the fall meeting to the Church's Program. The Convocation of Scranton gathered for three days at St. Stephen's Camp while Bishop Gardiner and the Archdeacon delivered each four addresses on the work just in hand. Afterward the laity of this Convocation met in St. Stephen's Parish, Wilkes-Barre and had a day with Dr. Lewis J. Franklin. On Sunday, Nov. 4th., a big mass meeting was held in St. Stephen's church—all the Episcopal churches of the Wyoming Valley assembling to hear Dr. Franklin on World Evangelism and Dr. Glazebrook on Soul Winning.

The Convocation of Reading met in the Pro-Catherdal of the Nativity, Bethlehem. Clergy and laity met together and Dr. Franklin had the entire day with them. In the evening there was a banquet in the Masonic Temple at which time Dr. Franklin and Dr. Glazebrook and the Bishop of the Diocese where the speakers to more than 300 diners.

The Church Home For Children

With great regret the Executive Committee of the Home accepted the resignation of the House-Mother, Mrs. Wagstaff to take effect on Jan. 1,1928. Her husband, the House Father died just about a year ago. Mrs. Wagstaff carried on bravely during the year, keeping the Home up to its efficiency and splendid work, but she finds the task too heavy.

The Executive Committee elected Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Kisner of Christ Church. Towanda of this diocese to be House-Father and House-Mother on January 1st. These good people have considerable experience in such work. They started years ago in the goodness of their hearts to take into their own home boys or girls who were homeless. About five years ago they were instrumental in having Bradford County open a home for homeless children. They were elected to take care of it. They have done exceedingly well and the whole county mourns their going, but they would rather work for the Church.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan

Bishop James R. Winchester, who spent the summer months in Chicago with his daughter, Mrs. Montgomery, has returned to Little Rock. We are glad to hear that his health has much improved.

During the summer Bishop Winchester made an effort to secure gifts to lift the debt hanging over the Negro Industrial School at Forrest City. The Bishop was entirely successful and the entire debt of three thousand dollars has been paid. The greater amount of the fund was raised outside of this State.

The annual canvass in this Diocese was conducted on Sunday, November 25.

Bishop Denby, of this Diocese, has in his care the negro work in the six States of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas and Arkansas, in which there are 1,850,000 colored people. He is carrying on a difficult work splendidly, but he is desperately in need of funds with which to extend the work.

At a recent meeting of the Chapter of Trinity Cathedral, Little Rock, they took action to add $600 to the dean's annual salary. The Chapter, under the leadership of Dean Williamson, is planning to make extensive additions to its working plant. Within the next month the new Moller organ will be installed.

In Christ Church, Little Rock, plans are going forward for the erection of a new parish house. It is expected that the contract will be let at an early date.

In Camden, on the evening before Thanksgiving Day, all the ministers of the city held a union Thanksgiving service in the Baptist Church. This is an annual event in Camden. Of course, the regular Thanksgiving service is also held in St. John's Church on the appointed day .

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop

Meeting of Northern Archdeaconry.

The meeting of the Northern Archdeaconry was held in St. Luke's Church, Blossburg, on November 2. The day began with a Celebration of the Holy Communion with the vicar of the parish, the Rev. H. H. Gillies, as celebrant. The business meeting, which followed, with Archdeacon Harold E. Schmaus in the chair, showed considerable progress being made in the missions of the Archdeaconry. One of the clergy, the Rev. H. H. Gillies, is in charge of six missions, and during October motored over two thousand miles for confirmation classes, services, and parochial visiting. At the evening service Bishop Darlington was the preacher. During the day, the Bishop also called personally to bring cheer to some invalids who were unable to attend the sessions of the Archdeaconry.

Archdeaconry of Harrisburg.

The autumn meeting of the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg was held in St. Andrew's Church, Harrisburg, the Rev. Hollis W. Colwell, rector, on Tuesday, October 30, 1928. The day opened with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, following which business sessions were held, Archdeacon Paul S. Atkins, presiding. Bishop Darlington, Archdeacon Atkins, and the Rev. Archibald M. Judd, deputies to the General Convention, gave a report of the activities of the General Convention held in Washington. A new constitution and rule of order for future meetings of the Archdeaconry was tentatively adopted. It is planned that future meetings will be held for two successive days. This will allow time for devotional exercises and intellectual discussions, as well as giving time for the transacting of the usual Archdeaconry business. The next meeting will be held in St. John's Church, Lancaster, the Rev. F. P. Houghton, rector.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The autumn meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg, was held in St. Luke's Church, Mount Joy, on the Eve of All Saints. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the rector, the Rev. W. S. J. Dumville. Noon day prayers and meditation were conducted by the Ven. Paul S. Atkins. The speakers of the day were Bishop Darlington, Bishop Campbell of Liberia, and Mrs. Caleb S. Brinton of Carlisle. Reports were given by Mrs. William Rote, of Lancaster, and Mrs. J. H. Heiges, of York. A feature of the meeting was an "Officers Conference", Mrs. John Weimer, leader.

Personal Notes

The Rev. W. F. Carpenter, who has been engaged in mission work in connection with St. Alban's Parish, Washington, D. C., has succeeded the Rev. Warren A. Seager as rector of St. Paul's Church and Grace Chapel, Haymarket Parish, Haymarket, Va.

The Rev. Robert Franklin Wilner, formerly Assistant Treasurer of the Chinese Mission, has accepted a position on the staff of the Philippine Mission, temporarily connected with the Cathedral of St. Mary and St. John, Manila, with charge also of St. Stephen's Mission to the Chinese. His new address is 154 Calle San Luis.

The Rev. P. L. Donaghay, B. D., rector of St. Anne's P. E. Church, Middletown, Diocese of Delaware, for the past twenty years, has declined a call to become rector of Trinity Parish, Elkton, Md., Diocese of Easton.

The Rev. C. H. Jordan, rector of Grace Church, Weldon, Church of the Saviour, Jackson, and St. Mark's, Halifax, in the Diocese of North Carolina, has sent his resignation to the vestry to take effect on March 1. No action has yet been taken by the governing body of the church. Mr. Jordan came to Weldon from Crescent City, Pa., in January, 1925, to become the rector of the Weldon and Jackson Churches. In August, 1926, he was appointed by the Bishop rector of St. Mark's Church at Halifax.

ORDINATIONS.

At 10:30 A. M., on Friday, November 30, 1928, the Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Bishop of Southwestern Virginia, ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Alfred Clarence Bussingham, in St. Peter's Church, Roanoke.

The Rev. C. T. Warner, of St. Alban's Church, Washington, D. C., preached the sermon.

The Rev. G. Otis Mead, now of Altavista, Va., formerly rector of Christ Church, Roanoke, presented the candidate; the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley read the Litany; the Rev. H. H. Young said the prayers; the Rev. Jas. A. Figg read the Epistle and the Rev. Roland J. Moncure read the Gospel.

Assisting the Bishop in the laying on of hands were the Rev. Messrs. C. T. Warner, of Washington; Alfred R. Berkeley, of St. John's, Roanoke; G. Otis Mead, of Altavista; H. H. Young, of Bluefield; James A. Figg, of Christiansburg; Roland J. Moncure, of Salem, and J. C. Wagner, of Petersburg.

Mr. Bussingham has been serving his diaconate as minister-in-charge of St. Peter's Church, Roanoke. Under special appointment by the Bishop he will continue in this work, St. Peter's being a small but thriving mission in the northwest part of the city.

The Use of the Blackboard

Sunday-school teachers and superintendents in increasing numbers are recognizing the striking way in which simple blackboard illustrations often serve to impress the lesson theme upon the pupils' minds and hearts. As Dr. R. F. Y. Pierce explains in his so helpfully suggestive book, "Blackboard Efficiency", "Efficient blackboarding has come to be such an important factor in our educational work that successful teachers are employing every agency which will arrest the attention, stimulate the thought, and rivet the truth on the mind and heart of the student. Teaching through the eye has long been the handmaiden of preaching. Instructive art has for centuries been the companion of inspiring song."

Neither great skill nor large expense is involved in securing good results here. Numerous Sunday-school supply houses have made a specialty of various types of blackboards with suitable crayon material. Upright standards or easels may also be secured at small expense, or the blackboard may be fixed permanently to the wall.

Many helpful books, including the one just mentioned by Dr. Pierce, may also be obtained through the denominational or supply houses, and from them any teacher or superintendent may obtain ideas for simple outlines or sketches which any one with ordinary skill can easily draw. The illustrations thus obtained will drive home the lesson in a most forceful manner.

If as a reader of this publication you would like to obtain further information regarding blackboard equipment or helpful books, Church Equipment Service stands ready to put you in touch with reputable houses which carry this kind of material and you will also find their products advertised in these columns from time to time. Please address Church Equipment Service, The Southern Churchman, 628 East Main Street, Richmond, Virginia.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The more self is visible in a person the more invisible is Christ.

It is a greater thing to help make another strong than to carry his load.

We are not poorer, but richer, because we have through many ages rested from our labor one day in seven.—Macaulay.

"One man's happiness can never be built out of another's misery."

"A man's faith may be known by his faithfulness."

Aim at the highest in the Christian life. Too many are contented with meagre attainments in grace. One must hunger and thirst after righteousness to obtain it.

In Christ all men are brothers; we are bound together by ties which man did not invent and which man cannot destroy; and men grow stronger through self-sacrifice than through self-assertion.

Oh, that believers had not lost their bright hope of the Lord's return, while they faithlessly and continually talk of death as their portion! True, we may "fall on sleep", and no man knoweth the hour of Christ's coming, save the Father; but the one bright hope of faithful Christian hearts is ever this—The Lord Himself shall come.—G. Campbell Morgan.

Humility gives us the best chance to serve the world. The world meets us in very much the same spirit that we take to it. If we push men out of our way, they push back; if we plot and strive against them, they strive and plot against us; whereas, if we show ourselves friendly, they are not unwilling to be our friends; if we are unaffectedly meek and pure, they honor us for virtues, which they may not themselves possess.—Samuel Cox.

Mr. Moody used to say that he had a great many who used the penitent thief as an excuse for not deciding for Christ. "I was urging a man to repent, and he put me off by saying, 'You know the penitent thief got into paradise just at his death'. 'Yes,' I said, 'and probably he accepted the first invitation he had ever received. Can you say that?' "—The Sunday School Times.

God alone can cry for God; heaven alone can desire heaven; goodness alone can crave goodness. There are prayers whose arrow is sped, not by the rainbow of night, but by the rainbow of morning. They are shot forth, not by the empty, but by the full hand. My prayers for Christ are like the murmur of the shell; they are the voice of the parent sea within me. Their cry is a memory. They are not so much in search of something new as in touch with something old. They are not voices of my poverty, but of my wealth, they are not winged by the famine of the far country, but by the music of the Father's house. Without the memory of that Home all the scarcity of the swine-husks would never have evoked the cry, "I will arise, and go to my Father."—George Matheson.

"EDUCATION"

"He gave them their hearts' desire; but sent leanness into their soul."

More than a hundred years ago John Randolph, of Roanoke, in one of his bitterly incisive speeches, replying to a highly cultured member of congress, who had attacked him, said the gentleman reminded him of some lands on lower James River. Uncultivated, they yielded sparsely. Cultivation ruined them and made them absolutely useless, worthless and barren. Mr. Randolph was partly mistaken. Experience since his time has proved that the land of which he spoke, while impossible for such world important crops as wheat, corn and tobacco, give, when wisely treated, fine and profitable yield of potatoes, cabbage and onions. The Randolph idea has been repeated recently in a smart newspaper paragraph saying that one error of modern "education" is constant effort to load a forty-five-calibre "education" in a twenty-two-calibre mind; inevitable results being futile sputtering or self destructive explosion.

In actual results we read in the newspapers and magazines illustrations of the lesson of the lower James land and the deep philosophy of the paragrapher. Minds well fitted for onions and cabbage, plain, wholesome and homely products, are stuffed and crammed and incited to undertakings and ideas far beyond their limitation and, consequently, yield weeds, more or less poisonous and harmful. Given influence over other minds, especially young, growing and immature minds, they spread corruption and peril. As those of us who are young grow older we develop natural and proper ambitions for "education" and those of us who are older look forward to "education" for our children and to fitting them for progress and usefulness. The question of what we mean by "education" and what kind of "education" we should try to obtain for ourselves and our sons and daughters becomes subject for careful thought and very earnest prayer for guidance. Consequences to lives here—perhaps to many lives—and results in eternity, may depend on our decisions.

There is much suggestion in an address by Frank A. Goodwin, who seems to be an outspoken, plain, practical, hard-headed, all-American, before the Kiwanis Club of Lawrence, Massachusetts, on the case of Sacco and Vanzetti, the two Italian Anarchists, who were convicted of cold-blooded, treacherous, mercenary murder, and executed after seven years of battle in the deliberate, dignified, orderly judicial processes of that State. The two murderers were given every possible consideration. Their rights were protected as carefully as if they had been exemplary native citizens. Leaders of the so-called "educated" and cultivated elements of the North and West joined with the dregs and scum of society in frantic effort to save these men from deserved punishment, insisting, in face of clear evidence and plain facts, that they were convicted and condemned because they were Anarchists, Atheists and declared foes of God, government, church, family, all that we Americans revere and hold dear. As Mr. Goodwin showed by the record, Felix Frankfurter, Austrian, professor at Harvard College; Robert M. Lovett, another Harvard product; Dean Roscoe Pond, originally of Nebraska, now of Harvard; Roger N. Baldwin, also of Harvard, who served in jail for obstructing the draft in the World War, were leaders for Sacco and Vanzetti. They cooperated cordially with Bill Haywood, convicted of inciting Industrial Workers of the World to murder, bomb-throwing and incendiarism, and W. Z. Foster, whose mission was to "bore from within" and make the labor union instruments for overthrow of our government, churches, family and business life. This is a specimen of Harvard "education"—results of high cultivation on onion, cabbage and potato soil. Mr. Baldwin is the happy husband of Mrs. Madeleine Zabriskie Doty, lawyer in New York, graduate of Smith College, "for the higher education of women", Northampton, Massachusetts. This institution has as its president an imported Scotchman, Harvard graduate with foreign born wife. Its faculty and graduates were enthusiasts in behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti. Mr. Goodwin recited a list of questions submitted by its faculty to the senior, graduating, class of girls, recipients of its "higher education". Most of these are too flagrantly indecent for publication. Their character may be judged from one—"Do you think women who are able to support themselves should be permitted to have children without marriage?"

Another leading educator of youth, active for the Anarchists and Atheists, is, according to Mr. Goodwin, Prof. Harry F. Ward, of Union Theological Seminary, English born. Charlotte A. Whitney, very rich woman, graduate of Wellesley College, non-sectarian, exclusively for the "education" of women, served a term in the California penitentiary for publicly and violently advocating overthrow of the government by revolution, destruction and murder. The woman president of Wellesley, which also is in Massachusetts, is holder of an honorary degree from Smith College, and was partly educated at Cambridge University, England.

It is to be noted, sadly, that all three of these institutions were founded by devout Christians, believers in God, orderly government and civilization. All have endowment funds—given chiefly by God-fearing, industrious and legitimately successful people—which enable them to defy public sentiment and to flaunt insolent insult and challenge to the country's conservatism and instincts of propriety.

Mr. Goodwin well said in his address—"Thank God for the fundamentalists, both religious and constitutional. They may not be able to appreciate the idealistic attainments or the superiority complexes of our distinguished college professors, but they are practical enough to know that it is better to hold fast to what we have."

"Education" does not mean cramming the mind with facts and theories, various essays on diverse philosophies and speculations, nor the 'ologies or 'onomies or 'onies, mathematics, history, languages. The Latin root and real significance of the word is training, guiding, developing, helping to grow to usefulness and right living. That must begin at home, with patience and love and careful thought from first consciousness. As the twig is bent so is the tree inclined is the exact and full truth. The unknown New Englander who wrote, nearly two centuries ago:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take,
For Jesus' sake,"

has given soothing and balm and comfort and hope at the ends of hundreds of thousands of troubled days and the beginning of nights black with fears and anxieties. He, or she, has done more real good for human hearts and souls than all the learned higher critics and profound speculative philosophers who have cumbered library shelves with vast volumes. The mother who teaches her child that, and the meaning of it, the Golden Rule and the meaning of it and the duty to God and my neighbor in the Church catechism, has given solid foundation for a happy and fruitful life and educated the child for its purposes and in sound principles of sociology and political economy—certainly more safely, sanely and decently than Prof. Frankfurter or Prof. Ward or Dean Pond or the heads of Smith and Wellesley—cabbage and onion and potato soil over-cultivated for more ambitious products.

It is time to keep unremitting watch on the lower schools. The Society for the Promotion of Atheism, financed by another cabbage and onion over-cultivated mind, inheriting a huge fortune from a thrifty and well-conducted father, is busy spreading through these schools propaganda of the vilest and most insidious kind, tending to abandonment of personal morality and all the natural, religious and civic obligations on which our civilization and hope for the future in this world and the next depend. We are given broad glimpses of the character, characteristics and teachings of some of the more pretentious and assidiously advertised colleges. Thanks be to heaven we have many colleges, universities and higher schools, state, denominational and private, conducted by Christian gentlemen and gentlewomen, clean strain Americans, sound to the core in principle, belief loyalty and teaching. These are the sources of real "education" for real Christians and Americans and to them the fathers and mothers and guardians should turn always.

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA

Alfred B. Williams

LIKE DEATH IN THE SOUTH.

The strength of the Church had shifted from South to North. In Virginia an effort by Bishop Madison to gathering back the Methodists into the Episcopal Church was rejected and feeling against the Church as an aristocratic and English institution hardened. In 1802 the General Assembly ordered the selling of the Church glebe lands for the benefit of the State. Patrick Henry had fought this successfully until his death, in 1799. Influence of the French revolution and its atheism was dominant. Church buildings, Communion plate and baptismal fonts were seized and sold. Chief Justice Marshall, devout Churchman, thought, and said, the Church was too far gone in Virginia ever to be revived. In Maryland and Delaware half the parishes were vacant. In South Carolina no State Convention was held from 1798 to 1804. Georgia gave no sign of life in the Church and, as has been stated, there was but the feeblest flicker in North Carolina.

The sixth General Convention was in Baltimore, May 17 to 26, 1808, seven States represented and two bishops present. Amendments to the constitution and the canons were adopted. Two points decided were that no minister of the Church should officiate at the funeral of a person killed in a duel or at the marriage of a person divorced save for one cause. Thirty hymns were added to the list of those to be sung in churches.

TWO MORE BISHOPS.

The seventh Convention was at New Haven, Connecticut, May 21 to 24, 1811. Bishops White and Jarvis and representatives from nine States attended. The presence of but two bishops made necessary the consecration of Dr. Hobart as assistant bishop of New York, and the Rev. Alexander V. Griswold as Bishop of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island, at New York, where Bishop Provoost, suffering with severe physical infirmities, joined the other two bishops to complete the required three. At this Convention the formal organization of the Church in Vermont was officially announced and acknowledged. It was in this year that William Meade offered himself for ordination, at Williamsburg, Virginia, amid general surprise that a college-bred gentleman should be taking such work. Tiffany's history says Mr. Meade was ordained in presence of a small party of relatives, two ladies and fifteen gentlemen, while students of the college strolled by the windowless and dilapidated church building, perhaps continuing the debate in which they had recently engaged, in public, on whether there was a God and whether Christianity had done more harm or good.

THE EIGHTH CONVENTION.

The eighth Triennial Convention was at Philadelphia, May 17 to 24, 1814. The country then was again at war with Great Britain. Five bishops attended, including Bishop Dehon, of South Carolina, and Bishop Richard Channing Moore, of Virginia. Bishop Dehon had been consecrated in 1812 at Philadelphia and Bishop Moore was called from New York, where he had been successful as rector, to Richmond, where he was rector of the Monumental Church—built on the site of the old Richmond theatre, destruction of which, by fire, causing the deaths of Governor Smith and more than seventy other persons, December 26, 1811, is one of the memorable tragedies of Richmond history. It was believed that the salary as rector and what could be collected in the State would be sufficient for support of the bishop, who was consecrated at Philadelphia in May, 1814. Bishop Madison had died in 1812.

At this Convention recommendation that congregations stand during the singing of hymns or psalms was adopted, the former custom having been to sit through those parts of the service, and a number of canons were considered and revised.

CHRIST IS COMING

An Advent Message by the Reverend Dyson Hague, Toronto, Canada

CHRIST is coming again, because He said He would come. The prominence and priority of this subject in both the Old Testament and the New Testament is extraordinary. The Old Testament as a whole is an historic and prophetic revelation of the Christ who was to come, and the New Testament is an historic and prophetic revelation of the Christ who did come and is to come again. The unity of the Bible as a whole is Christ-centric from the beginning. The end is the point of view from the first, the coming King, whose incarnation and final victory as the seed of the woman is told in Gen. 3:15, and whose blessed reign and universal domination as the seed of Abraham and the Shiloh Prince is foretold in Gen. 22:18; 49:10. Even the Old Testament saints had anticipative glimpses, not only of Christ's first Advent but of His second Advent as far back as Enoch—Jude 14—and not a few of the most competent exegetes refer the great bulk of the Messianic prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea, Joel, Zechariah and Malachi, not to His appearing in Incarnation and humiliation for rejection, but to His second appearing for regal power and glorification. The famous passages in Dan. 7:9-14, can have no other interpretation. When we go to the New Testament we are amazed with the multiplicity of the references to Christ's Second Advent. There are more passages in the New Testament on the second coming of Christ than on any other subject whatsoever, and a careful Biblical student has calcuated that there are over three hundred and seventy-five statements and pasages concerning the second coming of Christ. The Eschatological teaching of our Saviour is embodied in the Gospels and the Epistles as the heart in the body. It occurs not only in hints and outlooks and parabolic suggestions, but in statements definite, vivid, personal. The most remarkable is the prophetic delineations of the termination of the age( unfortunately translated world in our Bible), and the second Advent in Matt. 13:40-41-49; Matt. 24:3 to 51; Matt. 25:1 to 46; Matt. 26:64; Mark 13:4 to 37; Luke 12:35 to 48; Luke 17:20 to 37; Luke 19:11 to 27; Luke 21:7 to 36; John 14:3. Time and its changes, criticism and its differences cannot evacuate these reiterated assertions, of Him Who is the Truth, of their simple meaning emphasized by the white-apparalled messengers in Acts 1:11.

Christ is coming again, then, because He said He would, and from the time the upgazing disciples watched the Saviour disappearing in the azure, to the last word of the last Apostle in the last chapter of the last Book of the last section of the Bible: "Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus" (Rev. 22:20), the attitude of the Church has been the attitude of expectancy. Further, we answer the question why is Christ coming? by saying that His Advent is the consummation of the divinely ordained climax of the great program of the ages. The Bible as a whole is the revelation of God's scheme of Redemption divisible into certain great segments which delineate the historical developments of the race of Adam in the light of the Advent of its coming Redeemer and its final glory through His Personal return. The Old Testament as a whole tells of the craving and cry of humanity, as ignorant, for the revelation of a Prophet; as rebellious, for a Ruler-King; as sinful, for a propitiatory-mediator—a Priest. The New Testament tells us of the fulfilment of that age-long cry in the coming of the Incarnate, Crucified and Ascended Christ as Prophet, Priest and King, who, before He ascended into heaven, to reign in glory, promised He would come back again once more to the earth that rejected Him as King. The age in which we now live is the interim spoken of in Luke 19:12 and Matt. 25:5; and it is to be noted that there are in the many passages relevant to this aspect of the subject, significant hints of a long delay as, for instance, Matt. 24:48; Matt. 13: 34-35; Luke 12:37, with which might be compared Heb. 11:36-37, and that wonderful passage 2 Peter 3:4-8.

This dispensation is the parenthetical period spoken of by St. James, Acts 15:14-16, which contains in an inspired epitome of revelation the intention and reach of this dispensation. It is beautifully enshrined in all its doctrinal clearness in the Burial Service of the Church of England: "That it may please Thee of Thy great goodness shortly to accomplish the number of Thine elect and to hasten Thy Kingdom", the transparent meaning of which is that when the last one of His own shall have been gathered into the Christian Church, then the King will come back to His own again.

We are now in the Times of the Gentiles, Luke 21:24. that enigmatic but vivid expression of our Lord Jesus, which designates the age-period from His Ascension to His Return, during which the branches of the olive tree, the Jews, are to be broken off by unbelief, and the wild branches, the Gentiles of the Christian Church, to be grafted in. The Jews are at once the enigma of revelation and the paradox of history, and it is a great wonder to us that a people whom God has insulated from all nations, should now be mingled with all nations, and yet be an indestructible people, whose dispersion and desolation are a perpetual witness to the everlasting promises of God, that when the fulness of the Gentiles has been brought in, Christ will return ,and so all Israel will be saved. The most up-to-date and fascinating study of the present day in this period is the position of Palestine and the future movements of the Lord's ancient people. See Hosea 3:45 and Rom. chapters 9, 10 and 11.

This age period, moreover, is one of mystery in that it is an age of manifestation of the powers of evil, which, as the terminal days approach, will be accentuated by outbursts of indifference, lawlessness, selfishness, pleasure love, ingratitude and irreverence so marvellously delineated in 2 Tim. 3:1-5. The growth of that mysterious series of personalities and systems designated by the name of anti-Christ 1 John 4:3, will apparently head up in the final consummation in some great personality, 2 Thess. 2:3-8 and Revelation 13:11-18, signifying the violence of the opposition to the reign of the King of Kings. In the twenty-fourth chapter of the Book of St. Matthew and elsewhere our Blessed Saviour clearly delineates the antecedent final signs. The distress of nations, the prevalence of war and war rumors, Matt. 24:6; Luke 21:25-6, the waning love of Christians, Matt. 24:13, the rise of pseudo-prophets, Matt. 24:11 (and what more graphic word could describe Spiritualism, Christian Science, Mormonism, Dowieism, Russellism, Theosophy, New Thought, etc.). The wonderful descriptions of the times as the days of Noah, Matt. 24:27-38, times of commercialism and pleasure-pursuit unparalleled. The missionary propagandism, Matt. 24:14, and the revival of Advent interest, Matt. 25:6, which is so marvellously fulfilled in the last one hundred years, after centuries of apathy and slumber with regard to this all important subject. So we see that all through the teachings with regard to this Christian dispensation or intervening period, the one objective is the Return of the once rejected Saviour, and the Day which is to be the glorious consummation of His redemptive mission. He is coming to judge. Far back in the Book of Psalms, Ps. 96:13, this is foreseen, and in 1 Cor. 4:5, 2 Tim. 4:1, Rev. 20:11, Jude 15, we have accumulated witness to the fact set forth by the Apostle, Acts 10:42, Acts 17:31, that He will be the Judge of the living who are alive upon the earth at the time of His return, and of the dead who have departed during the centuries. That a time period intervenes and a differentiation exists between the judgment of the believer and the judgment of the multitude seems to be the teaching of 2 Cor. 5:10, Romans 14:10, Rv. 20:11, where Christ's Bema is put in contrast with God's Throne. He comes to receive and take up His own, John 14:4. Nothing seems clearer than this oft-stated fact, most clearly set forth in 1 Thess. 5:15-17. He comes to reign. All through the Prophets and prominent in the New Testament is the idea of the King and His Kingdom. The King was to come, Psalms 2:93-97. The King did come. He was heralded, acclaimed, crucified and exalted as King. And as King He is to come, Dan. 7:13-14, and He will come back to a world distracted, disorganized, a world of contention and strife, and war, to execute judgment and justice and to reign over an endless Kingdom. Leading thinkers tell us of the moral chaos of the day. The strongest Governments are shaken by anarchistic socialism. The modern world seems a morass of misery. One of England's greatest statesmen said not long ago that supernatural intervention is earth's only hope. The cry of a myriad hearts centres in the hope of the coming King. He is coming to restore all things. It is difficult exactly to tell what the restoration of Acts 3:21 means, but there is a vision of glory that passes all human imagination in that New Era that is finally delineated in the last two chapters of Revelation, Rev. 21 and 22. And so Christ is coming again because His return is a moral and spiritual necessity. His honor, His Word is involved. He is the truth. It is the revelation of His Word; it is the truth of God.

One word in conclusion. We Churchmen may rejoice that we belong to the Church whose system has emphasized as the subject of the very first importance the coming of the King and His Kingdom. The beginning of the Church's year is the End of all, the most glorious event in the Christian revelation. The Church begins with the End, for Christ is the Omega and Alpha, the Jehovah Lord who is and was and is to come, Rev. 1:8. We begin with the outlook, the uplook, and the onlook. The mistake of the Jew was that he was looking for the second coming, the coming of Christ in Glory, and he overlooked the first coming, the coming of Christ in great humility. The mistake of many Christians is that they so look at the first coming that they overlook the second. We thank God that the Church begins its year with four weeks of expectancy looking forward, hastening unto the Coming of the Day of the Lord. As Churchmen, moreover, we can thank God that the period of many misconceptions with regard to Advent is passing away. A change has come over the spirit of the Church, and whereas Advent was in accordance with the dominating tone of the medieval apostasy, a time of sadness and doleful expectations of judgment, it is now a time when God's people look forward with anticipated joy to the time when He shall come again, whose right it is to reign. The change is significant. In the Canadian Church Hymn Book, probably half the Advent hymns are of this character, and the thoughts of Church people are directed, not to the end of the world and judgment to come, but to the Imminent Personal Return of their loved and long-absent Lord.

Rejoice all ye believers,
And let your lights appear,
The watchers on the mountain
Proclaim the bridegroom near,
Come meet Him as He cometh,
With Alleluias clear.

ROBERT E. LEE

By the Late John W. Daniel, LL. D.

"UNDER WHICH FLAG?"

WHERE, now, is Robert Lee? On the border line, between two hostile empires, girding their loins for as stern a fight as ever tested warriors' steel, he beholds each beckoning to him to lead its people to battle. On the one hand, Virginia, now in the forefront of a scarcely organized revolution, summons him to share her lot in the perilous adventure. The young Confederacy is without an army. There is no navy. There is no currency. There are few teeming work-shops and arsenals. There is little but a meagre and widely scattered population, for the most part men of the field, the prairie, the forest and the mountain, ready to stand the hazard of an audacious endeavor, to meet aggression with whatever weapons freeman can lay their hands on, and to carry high the banners of the free, whatever may betide.

Did he fail? Ah, did he fail? His beloved State would be trampled in the mire of the ways; the Confederacy would be blotted from the family of nations—home and country would survive only in memory and in name; his people would be captives, their very slaves their masters; and he—if of himself he thought at all—he, mayhap, might have seen in the dim perspective, the shadow of the dungeon or the scaffold.

On the other hand stands the foremost and most powerful Republic of the earth, rich in all that handiwork can fashion or that gold can buy. It is thickly populated. Its regular army, and its myriad volunteers, rush to do its bidding. Its treasury teems with the sinews of war, and its arsenals with weapons. And the world is open to lend its cheer and aid and comfort. Its capital lies in sight of his chamber window, and its guns bear on the portals of his home. A messenger comes from its President and from General Scott, Commander-in-Chief of its army, to tender him supreme command of its forces. Did he accept it, and did he succeed, the conqueror's crown awaits him, and win or lose, he will remain the foremost man of a great established nation, with all honor and glory that riches and office and power and public applause can supply.

Since the Son of Man stood upon the Mount, and saw "all the kingdoms of the earth and the glory thereof" stretched before Him, and turned away from them to the agony and bloody sweat of Gethsemane, and to the Cross of Calvary beyond, no follower of the meek and lowly Saviour can have undergone more trying ordeal or met it with higher spirit of heroic sacrifice.

There was naught on earth that could swerve Robert E. Lee from the path where, to his clear comprehension, honor and duty lay. To the statesman, Mr. Francis Preston Blair, who brought him the tender of supreme command, he answered:

"Mr. Blair, I look upon secession as anarchy. If I owned the four millions of slaves in the South, I would sacrifice them all to the Union. But how can I draw my sword against Virginia?"

Draw his sword against Virginia? Perish the thought! Over all the voices that called him he heard the still small voice that ever whispers to the soul of the spot that gave it birth, and of her who gave it suck; and over every ambitious dream, there rose the face of the angel that guards the door of home.

On the twentieth of April, as soon as the news of Virginia's secession reached him, he resigned his commission in the army of the United States, and thus wrote to his sister who remained with her husband on the Union side:

"With all my devotion to the Union, and the feeling of loyalty and duty of an American citizen, I have not been able to make up my mind to raise my hands against my relatives, my children, my home. I have, therefore, resigned my commission in the army, and save in the defense of my native State (with the sincere hope that my poor services may never be needed) I hope I may never be called upon to draw my sword."

(To be continued.)

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

SUNDAY EVENING.

ALMIGHTY GOD, our Heavenly Father, we humbly and heartily thank Thee for the peaceful rest and quiet, the holy joys, and honorable privileges of this Thy blessed and hallowed day, now coming to its close. We thank Thee for the freedom from worldly thoughts and labors and cares; for the holy influences of Thy sanctuary, and the refreshment of Thy presence; for the special opportunities of private and public worship, and of our pouring out our hearts to Thee. We thank Thee for the faithful ministry of Thy Word; for Thy holy sacraments, and for all the means that Thou hast ordained for the diffusion of Thy truth, for the instruction and comfort of Thy servants, and for the establishment of Thy kingdom in the earth. Accept the worship of Thy people everywhere this day; bless the preaching and teachings of Thy Word, and in Thy mercy and wisdom grant the humble petitions that have been offered Thee.

By all the services of the day may Thy name be glorified, Thy Church enlarged and the coming of Thy kingdom hastened for Jesus Christ's sake.

Almighty and everliving God, who, by Thy holy Apostle, hast taught us to make prayers and supplications, and to give thanks, for all men; we humbly beseech Thee most mercifully to receive these our prayers, which we offer unto Thy divine Majesty; beseeching Thee to inspire continually the Universal Church with the spirit of truth, unity and concord; and grant that all those who do confess Thy holy name, may agree in the truth of Thy holy world, and live in unity and godly love. We beseech Thee, also, so to direct and dispose the hearts of all Christian rulers, that they may truly and impartially administer justice, to the punishment of wickedness and vice, and to the maintenance of Thy true religion and virtue. Give grace, O Heavenly Father, to all Bishops, and other ministers; that they may, both by their life and doctrine, set forth Thy true and lively word, and rightly and duly administer Thy Holy Sacraments. And to all Thy people give Thy heavenly grace; and especially to us here present; that with meek heart and due reverence, we may hear and receive Thy Holy Word; truly serving Thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life. And we most humbly beseech Thee of Thy goodness, O Lord, to comfort and succor all those who, in this transitory life, are in trouble, sorrow, need, sickness, or any other adversity. And we also bless Thy Holy Name, for all Thy servants departed this life in Thy faith and fear; beseeching Thee to give us grace so to follow their good examples, that with them we may be partakers of Thy heavenly kingdom; Grant this, O Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

Our Father, etc.

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

VIII.

ERE we bring these preliminary considerations to a close, attention is due to the logical sequences issuing from the three significant names of our Lord; for they have a direct bearing upon the truth of His coming again. As is related to the Christian beliver. The confession of this fact is the fundamental of the Christian Church (Matt. 13:16-18). It is the commendation of the Father at His baptism (Matt. 3:17); the confirmation of the Father's love at the transfiguration (Matt. 17:5). It seals the sacrifice on Calvary's cross; for it was because of His acknowledgement of His Deity Sonship, that the Sanhedrin condemned Him to death (Matt. 26:63, 64; John 19:7). But resultant of this inexplicable tragedy, the resurrection, makes possible on that first Easter the fulfillment of the eternal decree, "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee" (Ps. 2:7). We give testimony to this distinctly Christian truth by the use of the second Psalm at the service of Easter morning, which is quoted by St. Paul in Acts 13:33, "As it is written in the second Psalm, 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee'." And the same apostle records the triumph in Romans 1:4, "Declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead". We note, too, that his first pronouncement after his conversion was, in the very city of Damascus, "That he (the Lord Jesus) is the Son of God" (Acts 9:20). The spine of his Christian confession was the incontrovertible truth, that humanity and Deity had met in one sublime person; and thereby, through the cross and the resurrection had effected the miracle of the ages, by which God is reconciled to man and man is exalted to the family of heaven. "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts crying, 'Abba, Father'" (Gal. 4: 4-6).

The Son of God

And all this, we must protest, has no relation whatever to the prevailing notion that all men are the children of God because they happen to be born in the flesh. Nothing than this could be farther from the truth of the New Testament. There were men in the flesh whom our Lord called the children of Satan (John 8:44; Matt. 23:15, 33). Conceded that we are "the offspring of God" (Acts 17:28) in the sense that we are creatures of His natural forming, there is that other superlative sonship which issues solely of faith in the Son of God (John 1:12, 13). And we have further to aver that no body of men, rejecting this postulate of Him, has an atom of authority to call itself a Christian Church. An ethical society it may be, or a psychological system of healing. There can be no vital union with Him which lacks this essential quality of abounding, unquestioning, exultant confidence in the established truth of His perfected Sonship through the cross and resurrection.

He does not stress this to the world during His earth-life. It seemed to be reserved for His own after His ascension to glory; and they, as we well know, at first faintly comprehended its exalted potentialities. He was minded on one occasion, however, to draw aside to His maddened critics the veil of this mystery in John 5:17-30. But it seemed a too holy matter to be openly heralded. Consequently, His most frequent allusion to Himself is as

The Son of Man.

And in this we behold a distinct purpose. His great heart beholding a wide, wide world in need of what He alone can bestow, urges His attachment to humanity by this term of relationship. As the Son of Man, He transcends the narrowness of His Jewish environment; and He vindicates His freedom by visiting the Samaritans (John 4) and in two instances commending a Samaritan. There was this outbreaking of world-wide vision which prompted the declaration to Nicodemus in the memorable John 3:16. And we may dwell upon this emphasis in view of the fact that His listener was a Jew to whom such a statement would be most repugnant.

As the Son of Man, therefore, we apprehend in Him a purpose as vast as the universe, as deep as the need of every creature requiring His tender love and ministry. This must have swept through His heart as answering the angry high-priest, who condemned Him to death upon His acknowledgment of His unique Sonship in Deity, He refers to Himself as the Son of Man who shall come with universal power (Matt. 26:64). So, too, He discloses this august event to His disciples as the occasion of the Son of Man sitting upon the throne of His glory (Matt. 25:31). Our souls warm with admiration for Him as we comprehend this catholicity, this recognition of merited right to fix the destiny of all men. As He is the light that lightens every man (John 1:9); "as in Adam all die, but in Christ shall be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22), so He lawfully applies this term and office which no other man could possibly think of attributing to himself.

When, however, we have traversed this realm of thought and purpose, we are challenged to consider another name by which He is conspicuously known in the Holy Scriptures. It is as that He is indissolubly bound to His own people. There is a suggestion of this in His seeming heartless reply to the pleading Syro-Phoenician who cries, "Have mercy upon me, O Lord, thou son of David" (Matt. 15:22); for He instantly silences her by the words, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel". She had no ground for seeking His compassion on the basis of His being a Jew. Others might, and did (Matt. 9:27; 20:30, 31). He associates His coming reign upon the earth with the nation of Israel by according to His tried disciples places of honor regarding this special relationship (Matt. 19:27, 28). He permitted His welcome into the Holy City by the jubilant cry, "Hosanna to the Son of David" (Matt. 21:19). He afterward silenced His detractors by the question unanswerable from their plane of thought, "If David call him Lord, how is he his son" (Matt. 22:42-46)? And these references carry us back to those antedating His earthly ministry.

The Son of David

It was "a righteous Branch" which should be raised to the house of David, to become King by God's own appointment (Jer. 23:5, 6). Far off in the dim past He was foreseen as the fulfilment of all David's longings. The son of David in the perspective of 2 Sam. 7:12-17, is forward-visioned far beyond Solomon. To the shepherds on the night of the nativity, it was to the city of David they were to wend their way in reverent amazement, to find Him who should be to all people, a Saviour which is Christ the Lord (Luke 2:14). To Mary, the angel Gabriel announced that the Lord would give to her Son, the throne of His father, David (Luke 1:69). And it is to be upon the house of David that the spirit of grace and supplication shall be poured in that day which has never yet, but is to come (Zech. 12:10). It is the tabernacle of David which is to be raised up in the last time( Amos 9:11; Acts 15:16). There is no law of consistency by which He can be disassociated from the ancient race; for it is as the Son of David that He weeps over Jerusalem, piteously bemoaning His defeated desire to mother and cherish His own people, as a hen her chickens; and who left that proud community with the prediction that the race should be preserved unto that day when, the cry of that first Palm Sunday will be uttered by the descendants of that imperious company, who cried in apparent contempt, "Who is this" (Matt. 23:37-39:10)?

No greater violence can be done to the unity of the plan of redemption than to disrupt this relation of our Lord to the ancient people. God has forever rebuked our modern assumptions, which relegate all such prophecies as we have noted to the scrap heap of an effete past. His pledge in Jer. 33:25 is a monumental sign of the divine intention, "If my covenant be not with day and night, if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of David my servant". The preservation of the Jewish race is not only the miracle of history, but the ever-present reminder that our Lord Jesus is irrevocably united to the destiny of this wonderful nation. For the title on the Cross, "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews", was a forthtelling of what God will make true in the outworking of the eternal purpose.

So we behold the interweaving of these three titles in the person and offices of our Lord Jesus, no one excluding the others, but all entering the warp and woof of the divine intention for the ages. Cherishing our own union with Him in His exalted Sonship, we look with eager hope for the reception of Him by the great, needy world, as the Son of Man; and then, warmed by the sight of the ever-present Jew, we hold in joyous expectation that glad day when he shall lift his longing eyes heavenward and declare with ecstasy, "Lo, this is our Lord; and he will save us; this is Jehovah; we shall be glad and rejoice in his salvation" (Isa. 25:9).

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate Dean of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania, 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

Purpose.

The book of Ruth was written to reveal to us typically God's dealings in grace with Israel, typified by Naomi, and with the Church, typified by Ruth. The "nearer" kinsman is a type of the law which could not redeem Israel or the Church, and Boaz is a type of Christ, the "near" kinsman having both right and power to redeem Israel and the Church.

I. Ch. 1. God's grace is sufficient to restore Israel, or any believer, who, through unbelief and disobedience, has departed from the land of blessings (2 Sam. 12:13; Ps. 32:3, 4; 1 John 1:9; Hosea 14).

1. Ch. 1:1-5. The sin of unbelief and disobedience must be judged in Israel and in the individual before God's grace can restore to the place of blessing, to an attitude of trust and obedience (Jer. 30:7; Hosea 13:9; Heb. 12:1-11).

2. Ch. 1:6-14. The assurance of nourishment in the place of blessing is God's way, in grace, of drawing Israel and the wandering believer back (Joel 2:12-32; Luke 15: 11-32).

3. Ch. 1:15-18. When the believing remnant of Israel is restored, a remnant of the Gentiles will be blessed with them (Acts 15:16, 17; Rom. 11:12-15; Isa. 60:1-5).

4. Ch. 1:19-22. The restoration of Israel, with a Gentile remnant, will mean the beginning of a harvest of untold blessing (Isa. 61:3-11; 62; Gen. 22:17, 18).

The restoration of believers in whom unbelief has been judged means not only the bringing of others into the place of blessing, but the beginning of a harvest of overflowing blessing (Luke 22:32 R. V.; Ps. 126:6; 23:3-6; 1 John 1:9; 3:21, 22; John 7:37-39).

II. Ch. 2. The individual who has determined to serve the Lord, like Ruth, easily finds the field of the Kinsman Redeemer, in which to glean (1 Peter 5:7; Phil. 4:19).

1. Ch. 2:1-3. Yieldedness to the Lord to do His will at any cost makes it possible for Him to lead us into the place and attitude toward Him where we may enjoy His care for us (Rom. 8:14; Col. 1:9; Phil. 4:6, 7).

2. Ch. 2:4-17. Even when we begin to become acquainted with Christ we learn to know His grace which gives up all for us (2 Cor. 8:9; Rom. 8:32; Eph. 5:26).

3. Ch. 2:18-23. While showing kindness to His Church our Lord has not forgotten Israel, but is saving a remnant of Israel, largely through the testimony of Gentile believers, and He will yet return and build the house of David (Rom. 11:5, 11-14; Acts 15:16, 17).

III. Ch. 3. At the feet of the Kinsman Redeemer is the only place of rest, for either sinners or saints (Luke 7: 37-44; 10:38-42; Phil. 4:6, 7).

1. Ch. 3:1-7. Every one determined to cease from his own works for salvation or service that God may work in and through him to will and to do of His good pleasure, has found the place of rest (Heb. 4:9, 10; Matt. 11:28-30; Phil. 2:13; Heb. 13:20, 21).

2. Ch. 3:8-13. The blessing of the presence and work of our Redeemer is only enjoyed as we learn to lie still at His feet (Ps. 46:10; 1 Cor. 5:18; Ps. 40:8).

3. Ch. 3:14-18. Trusting in what Christ has done, is doing, and will do, our hearts are filled with assurance as to the past, present and future (Heb. 9:26, 24, 28; Rom. 5:1-3; 8:29, 30; Phil. 1:6, 3; 20, 21; 1 John 3:2, 3).

IV. Ch. 4. The Church was crucified and buried with Christ, that she might be married to Him who was raised from the dead, that she might bring forth fruit unto God (Rom. 7:4; Eph. 5:25-32).

1. Ch. 4:1-8. What the law could not do because of the weakness of the flesh, God did in sending His Son (Rom. 8:3; 3:20; 4:15).

2. Ch. 4:9-12. While the Lord is planning for Israel's redemption, He is first to have His Helpmeet purchased from among the Gentiles (Acts 15:14; 20:28; Rom. 11: 25, 26).

3. Ch. 4:13-17. The fruitfulness of the life that is ours as one with Christ in glory is to be enjoyed now, as we live by faith, in the fulness of the Spirit, in fellowship with Him (John 15:1-16; 1 John 2:27, 28; Gal. 5:22, 23).

4. Ch. 4:18-22. Our Lord and Israel's Messiah, as a descendant of Ruth, is David's Son and Heir, and therefore the One to bring blessing to Israel in a rule of righteousness with its resultant peace (Matt. 1:1; Isa. 9:6, 7; 32:1, 17; Ps. 72; 85:10).

THIRD SUNDAY IN ADVENT

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O Lord, Jesus Christ, who at Thy first coming didst send Thy messenger to prepare Thy way before Thee; Grant that the ministers and stewards of Thy mysteries may so prepare and make ready Thy way by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at Thy second coming to judge the world we may be found an acceptable people in Thy sight, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

THIS Collect is one of only three addressed to God the Son, the Second Person of the Holy Trinity.

In the Epistle St. Paul claims for himself, and all who are ordained to the Sacred Ministry, the honor of being "Ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God". And so they are called in this collect, and the petition is that they may imitate St. John the Baptist, in his great revival work.

THE Epistle is from 1 Cor. 4:1-5. In this Epistle St. Paul contrasts strongly man's judgment with God's; even his own judgments he distrusts, and he was one of the best educated, broadest-minded, and most highly cultural men of his time, for he says: "I know nothing by myself (meaning against myself) or, more literally translated: "I am conscious to myself of no ministerial unfaithfulness." "Yet" (he goes on to say), "am I not hereby justified; but he that judgeth me is the Lord". He had been very harshly criticised and judged by some of the Corinthian Christians; some of them had said: "His (Paul's) letters are weighty and powerful, but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible" (2 Cor. 10:10); they had attacked the Apostolic authority of Paul (1 Cor. 9:1, 2), because he had not been an eyewitness of Christ's ministry on earth. Yet, Paul regarded such criticism as nothing in comparison of God's judgments; so little did he think of human judgments, however aided, in comparison with the judgments of the "Judge of all the earth'.

Well were it for us could we (as Burns prays): "See ourselves as others see us"; and yet far better, could we see ourselves as God sees us. The nearest approximation to this true self-knowledge is, I suppose, in the conversion of a man, when, like the Prodigal Son, he comes to himself, has some realization of his lost condition, and says: "I will arise and go to my Father, and will say unto Him; Father, I have sinned against heaven and before Thee; and am no more worthy to be called Thy Son." The Prodigal was far from knowing himself and his unworthiness fully; had he done so, could he ever have found courage to seek his injured Father's face? Yet, he knew himself far better than his brother, the elder son, knew himself, who honestly thought, no doubt, that he spoke truth, when he said: "Lo, these many years do I serve Thee, neither transgressed I at any time Thy commandment" (St. Luke 15:29). Strange delusion! Yet such self-righteousness is common. "Know thyself, come down from heaven," said the heathen poet, Juvenal, realizing, even without the light of Christianity to judge him, how fallible is man's judgment, especially of himself. The conclusion of the Epistle is comforting, especially to the humblest Christian, who hardly hopes for praise from the "Judge of all the Earth", who has told us (St. Luke 17:10) that when we have done all those things which are commanded we are unprofitable servants, for we have only done that which was our duty to do.

I must give you an incident illustrative of the grace of humility, which came under my knowledge long ago in my boyhood, at my country home in Virginia.

An invalid lady was driving out in her carriage. She overtook an old Negro servant (not one of her own but a neighbor's), a carpenter with his box of tools on his shoulder, whom she had known long, even from her childhood, and called, "Uncle Ralph". She invited him to put his box in front and take a seat by Henry, her driver. He did so, and rode some distance, near to his destination. He got out then, took his box of tools, and taking off his hat said: "Thank you, Marm; Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, you have done it unto me." Surely the grace of true humility was here.

THE Gospel for Third Sunday in Advent is St. Matthew 2:2-10, and tells of St. John the Baptist's appeal to Jesus from his prison, at Machaerus, one of the residences of Herod Antipas (the tetrarch), east of, and near the Dead Sea.

Dr. Noah Davis in his "Story of the Nazarene", says of this incident in the life of St. John the Baptist: "John the Baptist had been five months in his dungeon at Tiberius, about thirteen miles from Nain (near which Jesus was at the time of this incident). It seems His disciples were permitted to visit him, and through them he had heard of the doings of Jesus, whom he had heralded as Messiah (the Christ). But to the depressed man (Baptist) who had lived so free, his prison had become Doubting Castle. Can this indeed be (he must have thought) the one foretold of Isaiah as sent to proclaim liberty to the captives and opening of the prison to them that are bound (Isa. 61:1)? Then why should He leave me here to languish in chains? To resolve this doubt, he sent two of his disciples, bidding them ask, 'Art thou he that cometh, or look we for another'? These messengers, favored by the occasion, joined the followers of Jesus on the way to Nain, and there in the market place delivered their message. Jesus replied: 'Go your way, and tell John what things ye do hear and see.' To these proofs He added a word of encouragement, but no promise of help; and that was the last word between them. It is strange that Jesus, who in no other case declined to relieve suffering, but was prompt to apply abundantly His beneficent power, in this case alone gave no help or heed to a sufferer whose cry was apparently the most appealing of all, but left him to his tragic fate. And still the mystery deepens; for no sooner had the two messengers departed than Jesus pronounced in the ears of all the people a splendid and glowing eulogy on John, as an ascetic, as a man, as a prophet, as the Messianic herald, hidden from the worldly wise, but revealed unto his disciples as unto babes.

Moreover, as John was the only one whom Jesus ever neglected, so was he the only one whom Jesus ever eulogized."

The spread of the Gospel and the advancement of His kingdom on earth were the great objects of our Lord's life and ministry on earth, and we may feel sure that could we see it as He saw it, the death of John the Baptist contributed to the success of the Gospel cause. God not only doeth all things well; but does all things in the very best possible way. One is taken and the other left; sometimes it seems to us that the more useful, almost the necessary one, is taken and the less useful one left, but it is only so to our limited and imperfect view of the whole situation.

And even earthly ambition might be satisfied with the fame that has attached to the name of the Baptist. That eulogy of his Kinsman, the Christ, has come echoing down the centuries: "Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist" (St. Matt. 11:11). Consider the full force of His words, and the unerring wisdom of the Son of God, who pronounced them; as great as any born of women, as great as any of the great ones of the Old Testament, as great as any of that band of the faithful given in the eleventh of Hebrews, as great as his great prototype Elijah, even a greater than Solomon is here in Herod's prison; and above all as great a one as Abraham is here, of whom the Jews said to Jesus, evidently singling Abraham out as their greatest ancestor, "Art thou greater than our Father Abraham" (St. John 8:53). Honor is given by a grateful country to Washington on the twenty-second of February; but how few honor this day compared with the millions who now and for centuries have kept the twenty-fourth of June, St. John the Baptist Day, celebrating his fame in that beautiful prayer: "Make us so to follow his doctrine and holy life, that we may truly repent, according to his preaching, and after his example constantly seek the truth, boldly rebuke vice, and patiently suffer for the truth's sake."

What monument, however grand, however beautiful, could do him honor such as this?

THE CANON ON MARRIAGE.

Mr. Editor:

Absence from home must be my excuse for failure to reply earlier to the letter of Bishop Parsons (in The Living Church), of October 13, who in his defense of the canon of 1868 on Marriage, had evidently in mind the different aim of the Sanctity of Marriage Association. The letter nominally covers only "four points", but in reality there are more than that, which compels me to ask larger space than I would otherwise have a right to expect.

In the Bishop's opening sentence he writes: "In the considerable number of pamphlets, etc., dealing with marriage and the coming General Convention, I have seen none which has defended in any way the present canon." I can assure the Bishop that in this his memory is entirely accurate. During the last nine years especially, I have been looking daily for this defense, but to little or no purpose.

During these years the Association, consisting of seven well-known and well-learned Bishops, several priests and lawyers, and a considerable number of intelligent laymen and women, has been piling up argument on argument, and dragging forth the shameful story of the canon's conception and birth. In our petition to the General Convention of 1925 we gave seven reasons showing that neither in the New Testament, nor in the whole Church in Apostolic or sub-Apostolic times, nor in the continued witness of the Western Church, and especially in every branch of the English-speaking Church, is there anything to justify the hasty and illegal act of the Convention of 1868, which threw to the winds, so far as a canon could accomplish it, the doctrine and discipline which had come down to us by inheritance from the mouth of our Lord Himself. That action, moreover, was a stupid thing, for while it put the false exception into the canon, it forgot to put it into the Prayer Book.

During these years also we have made seven "indictments" of the form and requirements of the canon itself; namely, that it is evasive, logically and actually teaching "trial" or "companionate" marriage, degrading the office of the Bishop, unjust, inconsistent, cowardly, and impossible of administration. Nevertheless, so far I have failed to observe a single challenge of one of these reasons or indictments.

The Bishop's "four points" are as follows:

1. "It is pure nonsense," he says, "that the believers in the doctrine of the 'indissolubility' of marriage are the only supporters of its sanctity." In proof of this he adds what to most people must seem a very contradiction of language. While "believing in Christian marriage as a permanent life-long relation of husband and wife . . . not as long as they love, but as long as they live", he asks, "What happens when the vows are broken?"

The supporters of the canon, he says, "find it impossible to suppose that our Lord, a great 'Realist', could lend Himself to the idea that a few words spoken over a thoughtless couple could count more than their actions," etc. "They think that kind of sacramentalism is magic". One wonders where the Bishop ever found any one so ignorant as to suppose that "a few words" of either priest or justice of the peace was the efficient cause of making a man and woman husband and wife. Surely the Bishop knows that two people are never "married" by any one. They marry themselves always, not by promises alone, but by actions which both Church and State call "consummation", or co-habitation, by living together as one body,

"one flesh". The utmost Church or priest can do is to attest and "solemnize" marriage, as the Prayer Book declares. For the prime purpose of marriage "from the beginning of the creation" has been the procreation of children, and there is no holy marriage unless there is the intention of making it Holy Matrimony, that is, Holy Motherhood. Without that intention it is not marriage at all, but only concubinage.

As to "sacramental magic", I know of no one who claims that marriage is "a sacrament generally necessary to salvation". Nevertheless, our Lord compares it to that "mystical (that is, sacramental) union which is bewixt" Himself and His Bride, the Church, and which St. Paul tells us is first effected by Holy Baptism, whereby we are made "members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones". Here, thank God, no unfaithfulness to our vows, no sin however great, can break, or cause our ever-merciful God to break this bond, to our life's end. Can it be that He is less merciful to man and wife than He is to those whom He has made His children, His own flesh and blood?

It is a clear-headed Jew, Professor Felix Adler of Columbia University, who says truly, on only ethical, social and logical grounds: "Marriage is not a contract. . . . The tie between husband and wife is one that differs from the parental and filial only in the fact that, while into the one we are born, into the other we freely entered. But we are as truly bound (as if born) when we have entered. The decision is irrevocable. . . . One can no more disown a spouse that he can disown a child" (Marriage and Divorce, Pp. 50, 58).

Half heathen Samaritans and degenerate Jews held with the Bishop and Dr. Charles that a single act of adultery ipso facto has the satanic power of annihilating the bond of "one flesh". On the contrary, our Lord told the Samaritan woman who had already been divorced by five husbands, that she was then living in adultery with one who was "not her husband".

These same degenerate Jews carried their false logic still farther than the Seventh Commandment by inventing an "exception" or amendment to the Fifth. If a son, they said, only paid a goodly sum as "corban", that is, a gift to God, into the alms chest of the Temple, he could plead that the bond of the "one flesh" which bound him to his old and needy parents was ipso facto snapped, and he had not further responsibility for them though they might starve. Christ's comment on that logic is the swift and indignant answer, "Full well do ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition". That stern rebuke applies equally to America's amendment to the Seventh Commandment—in the State for three hundred years—in this Church for the past sixty years.

It was this same rejection of the law of God, under the heel of the half-pagan, half-Christian court of Constantinople that induced the Eastern Church in the sixth century to allow one amendment to that law, which brought upon it the fierce atack of a polygamous and brutal enemy. Five hundred years later, still looser ideas were adopted by the Eastern Church, so that Osiar Watkins, in his definitive treatise on Holy Matrimony, is compelled to write, "It is not too much to say that at the present day (1895) it allows divorce for well-nigh 'every cause'" (p. 317). Only thirty-three years have passed since then, and "the mills of God" have ground out the inevitable result through the Atheistic Soviet, and the ever-cruel Turk. May we not hear the Lord Jesus saying to this American nation and American Church, as He said to degenerate Israel, "Full well ye reject the commandments of God, that ye may keep your own commandment". "God is not mocked."

2. The "second point" which the Bishop makes for the canon takes the form of an implied defense of Dr. Charles in his book, Divorce and Nullity. In his evidently ironical sympathy for that "great scholar" whom "Dr. Gwynne finished with", or "finished", I can assure the Bishop that it was quite unnecessary for me to perform this murderous act. When "a great scholar" finds that the best text extant of the New Testament, either in Greek, or "English undefiled", is dead against his theory of the destructive power of adultery, and he proceeds to "prove" his theory by showing that the clear testimony of one of the strongest of these witnesses (St. Mark) is "unhistorical, untrustworthy, mutilated. a human fiction, false, a gross misstatement of facts"; and then proceeds to discard the evidence of the other three witnesses, it is evident that Dr. Gwynne had little to do with the slaying of this Goliath of learning. To all simple-hearted readers of their New Testament the giant has signed his own death warrant.

As a priest of fifty-seven years in very active service, I have a right to ask Bishop Parsons this plain question. In case Dr. Charles should find that "science" was against such a miracle as a Virgin Birth, or that he was unable to reconcile such a saying of Jesus as "The Father is greater than I" with His many other assertions of His perfect Godhead, would the Bishop be equally sympathetic with Dr. Charles, if this "great scholar" proceeded also to reject the joint testimony of St. Matthew and St. Luke to the former truth, and other testimony for the latter, as "mutilated, distorted, unhistorical, and false", a mere "medieval" legend, "obviously rewritten to prove a dogma?"

Yet this is in reality what Dr. Charles has done with remarriage of the divorced, and by means of much more meagre "evidence", in face of our Lord's reiterated declaration, reported by St. Paul and all three Evangelists, that "Everyone, whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another committeth adultery".

3. I have already touched on one statement of the Bishop's in his third point: namely, the causes and the effects of the departure of the Eastern Church from the morals, while it clung steadfastly to the faith of Christ. But the brief remark with which he closes this point demands some scrutiny. The Bishop does not see why "the modern American may not know as much about the mind of Christ as the Medieval Latin". Surely the Bishop's knowledge of history should tell him that what he calls "English" and "Medieval Latin", is also the doctrine and discipline of the undivided Church of the first three centuries, when "the mind of Christ" was fresh in men's memories. Yes, I quite agree that the "modern American" may know a great deal about the Mind of Christ, but in order to do so it must first of all be sought with the assiduity and childlike spirit of the scientific scholar, in studying one of the simplest books in all the world, the New Testament in our English Bibles, or in the mos tapproved text of Greek or Latin that they can find, but not in their own "ideals", or "thinkings", or "wishes", as to what it "ought to be".

There are many such good Americans. But does Bishop Parsons really imagine that the twenty-seven clerical and lay deputies who formed the General Convention of an almost dying Church, in 1808, only half-educated, and self-opinionated, as Bishop White found them to his sorrow, were such a body? Or, after reading the verbatim report of the doings of the Convention of 1868, with their haste, and ignoring of our pledge of 1789 (which stands on p. vi. of our Prayer Book today), and the clear requirement of Article 10 of the Constitution, and their deliberate turning of the word "fornication" in St. Matthew into a distinctly different word, "adultery", in the canon, were such good "modern" and intelligent Americans?

4. I have little space left for the dire prophecies of Bishop Parsons in his fourth point. I need only call attention to the fundamental mistake into which the Bishop in common with many others has fallen about the restoration of the ancient law of God in the canon. "It won't educate," he says. "It won't stop the tide of divorce any more than Canute stopped the ocean." That could be said with equal wisdom about our civil laws, and even about the Ten Commandments. But it is a very different thing with a bad and false law such as this. That has ten or fifty fold the power of a good law because it appeals, as St. Augustine pointed out fifteen hundred years ago, to the sensual or selfish desires of weak humanity. That our Lord, the great "Realist," or rather, the great Pragmatist and Psychologist, who "knew what was in man", his infirmities and greatest needs, could ever have sanctioned such a law. is simply inconceivable. Nor did the Convention of 1868 in its haste realize that the "exception" of adultery, the easiest of all "causes" to commit or pretend, is one of the most potent teachers today in leading both our young and their elders to enter upon "companionate" or "trial" marriage.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest wil be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart", Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. M. S. Erwin of Morganton, N. C.:

> "And Jabez called on the God of Israel, saying, Oh, that thou wouldest bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that Thine hand might be with me, and that Thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me!"—1 Chron. 4:10.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

And the Child Grew---Church Army One Year Old

Rev. Frank Cox.

One year ago the Church Army in the U. S. A. had its inception. Its growth has been uniform and encouraging. Forty men have been at work in three hundred parishes throughout twenty-seven dioceses this summer. The South has had an important share of their activities. Six men itinerated between Jacksonville, Florida, and Springfield, Illinois. Four men have recently missioned around Warsaw, Virginia. Of them the Rev. F. D. Goodwin reports: "The men have been splendid. In every situation from a prison camp to services in the parish church, they have measured up to the mark . . . and what counts most is that they have succeeded in deepening the spiritual life of those who came regularly to hear them."

Two men are now at work under Archdeacon Mason in the Blue Ridge section of Virginia. Of the work of the first C. A. Caravan in East Carolina, Bishop Darst reports that "The evangelists have made a profound impression on the people of the parishes and missions visited by them."

I have come close to the lives and work of the men, being near their headquarters in New York, and I can witness to their sincerity and loyalty to the Gospel truths and to their sacrificial lives and work. I have had the privilege of celebrating the Holy Communion in their headquarters for them, and have seen the simplicity of their lives, far removed from luxurious living. Their leader, Captain Mountford, sets the example by retaining himself just a tiny room that serves as bedroom, sitting-room and office. By this means they keep the overhead as light as possible. It is a work that merits our prayers and financial assistance. I commend it to your attention as a live agency for Evangelism in the church. Checks may be sent to the Editor of this paper, or to Captain Mountford, Director of the Church Army in the U. S. A., 416 Lafayette Street, New York, N. Y.

The Church's Ambassadors of Good Wishes to England.

The General Convention at Washington appointed Bishop Brent and Doctor Ogilby, the President of Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, to represent our Church at the translation of the Archbishop of York to Canterbury. They were also empowered to carry the good wishes of the Convention to the retiring Archbishop, and American friends sent a purse of $10,000 to him by their hands. An interesting account of the visit is given in the following letter from Doctor Ogilby to the Tripod, the Trinity College paper:

London, November 13, 1928.

To the Editor of "The Tripod":

Bishop Brent and I have been receiving a warm welcome from the English people. They seem to appreciate keenly our errand in bringing greetings from the Episcopal Church in America to the retiring Archbishop of Canterbury, who is greatly loved, and to his successor, Dr. Lang, now Archbishop of York. It began on the boat. Our fellow-passengers, Lord and Lady Kylsant (he is the managing director and practically the owner of the White Star Line), Lady Spencer-Churchill, General Sir John Hanbury-Williams, who was Chief of the British Military Mission to the Russian Armies during the War, and Admiral H. H. Carpenter, retired, all outdid themselves in courtesies to us. We had a very smooth crossing for this time of year and arrived in London just in time for Armistice Day.

I am glad we got here for Armistice Day. I have never seen an entire people so united in their devotion to the memory of their hero-dead. We have somehow forgotten the terrific price England paid for her share in the victory: the English people will never forget. As this was the tenth anniversary of the end of the War, the day was observed with especial devotion, made more easy perhaps because it fell on Sunday. The focus of attention was the Cenotaph, the great memorial in the center of Parliament Street, and there services were held Sunday morning. The streets for blocks around, from the National Gallery to Westminster Abbey, were packed with people, quiet, obviously thinking with loving memory of some one or more of the million British dead honored that day. In addition thousands more crowded the churches in London and all through the Empire, most of which were connected by radio with the services at the Cenotaph. I was in the crowd, about three blocks away. As Big Ben struck eleven, a discharge of cannon from Whitehall marked the beginning of the Great Silence. For two minutes, the longest two minutes I have ever known, that vast crowd stood silent, bare-headed. One could hear the tense breathing, one could feel the tremendous outpouring of prayer. It was a real spiritual experience.

Bishop Brent and I paid our homage to the grave of the Unknown Soldier in Westminster Abbey and in the afternoon, through the courtesy of the Home Office, we were given an opportunity to lay a wreath at the Cenotaph, as a tribute of sympathy from America to England. It was a rare responsibility.

That evening a Remembrance Festival was held in Albert Hall. Thousands of ex-service men were there, many of them maimed for life. The King and Queen with many other dignitaries were present with their tribute. The program was a combination of a religious service with a military pageant, massed bands, choirs, banners, soldiers, and such singing as I never heard before. I got an extra ticket and took Professor Shepard with me. We both were greatly moved.

The next day, Monday, November 12, was the Golden Wedding Day of the Archbishop and Mrs. Davidson. He had chosen that day for the occasion of his formal resignation, and all day long the tributes to him poured in. There were presents from all over the world, chief among them a great gold rose bowl from the King and Queen; and the Prime Minister, representing the nation, made a formal address with a donation of $75,000 subscribed by over 15,000 persons. The dear old Archbishop was greatly affected, and could not seem to understand why people said such nice things about him! He is a sweet, simple soul, one of God's own gentlemen. He had told Bishop Brent and me on our arrival in London that he was reluctant to assign us just a few minutes in a crowded day, and out of the deep love he had for Bishop Brent he was going to have us all by ourselves.

Accordingly Bishop Brent and I dined in Lambeth Palace that evening, in the old Guard Room, surrounded by the most perfect sequence of portraits of a line of dignitaries in the world. They were all there, all the Archbishops of Canterbury for four hundred and forty years, from Cardinal Pole down. Wonderful pictures, too; Archbishop Laud by Van Dyke, Wareham by Holbein (the greatest Holbein in existence), Secker by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and all the rest. Bishop Brent and I agreed that Sargent's portrait of Archbishop Davidson is far from being worthy of a place in the sequence, and indeed is in no way worthy of the subject.

After dinner we all assembled for our presentation, the Archbishop and Mrs. Davidson, with their guests and a few friends. We had a formal Address, engrossed on parchment, which had been adopted by the General Convention of the Episcopal Church at the recent session in Washington, of which we were the official bearers. This the Bishop read. It recited all the achievements of the Archbishop's long service of twenty-five years and endeavored to express the respect and affection in which he is held in the United States. He is the only Archbishop of Canterbury who has ever visited America and on many occasions he has been the host of Americans at Lambeth. Due mention was also made of Mrs. Davidson, a lady of such radiant charm that to see her is to love. It was a happy day for her, and also a sad one. She was the daughter of Archbishop Tate and was brought up in Lambeth Palace. The resignation of Dr. Davidson means that she is leaving now what has been almost her only home.

With the Address, Bishop Brent and I gave to Archbishop and Mrs. Davidson a present from some of their American friends. This was a gold casket, beautifully tooled, of the period of Charles II., and in it a draft for $10,000.

The Archbishop made a brief response in which he stated how puzzled he was to hear such a tribute. He could not see what he had done to deserve it. He spoke with real feeling of his friendship with the leaders of the Church in America, and stated his satisfaction in having the last act of his official life the receiving of this deputation from the United States. The Bishop and I felt highly honored.

This morning Bishop Brent and I were formally presented to the Church Assembly at Westminster. Tomorrow we leave for two days at Oxford, to see college chapels, and then go to Canterbury for a longer visit. The Enthronement of Dr. Lang as Archbishop of Canterbury does not come until December 4, so we have a little free time. It is a great joy for me to be traveling again with Bishop Brent as we used to do years ago in the Philippines. He is a rare comrade.

Greetings to Trinity College!

Yours faithfully,
R. B. Ogilby.

Birthday Thank Offering.

The Diocesan Department of Religious Education has announced that in the Birthday Thank Offering presented at the General Convention, the check from the Diocese of Georgia amounted to $565.75. This is said to be the third largest offering presented from the dioceses in the Province of Sewanee.

Y. P. S. L.

An enthusiastic district conference of the Young People's Service League from the first district of the Diocese of Georgia, was held recently in Augusta, Miss Anne Jones, of that city, presiding. The conference opened with a banquet in the parish house of the Church of the Good Shepherd, when talks were made by Deaconess Byllesby, of Christ Church and Bernard Williams, of Savannah. Following the banquet a business session was held, when plans were discussed for raising funds for the $1,000 pledge for Camp Tomochichi. After the business session a Preparation Service, led by the Rev. J. A. Schaad, was held for the Corporate Communion the next morning in St. Paul's Church. A second conference of this district will be held in January, and the leagues in the district of Waycross and Savannah will hold theirs within the next two months. Miss Gene Burroughs, the diocesan president, has announced that leaflets containing suggestive programs for the Y. P. S. L. of the diocese, are being printed and will be disributed shortly.

The League at the Good Shepherd visited the Y. P. S. L. at Christ Church Mission, soon after the district meeting and presented a model program, the subject being "Fellowship". The League at Christ Church entertained the visitors at supper before the program.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

A New St. Luke's in Richmond.

The Meade Memorial Church vestry voted recently to change the church's name and to give the name of St. Luke to the new church, which is now practically completed at Cowardin Avenue and Bainbridge Streets.

In considering a new name, both St. Matthew's and St. Luke's were considered, as there is at present no Episcopal church in Richmond under these names. In the past there was a small mission church called St. Luke's, but this has for some time been in disuse. Since three of the present vestry of Meade Memorial are doctors, it seems very fitting that the name of the "patron saint" of physicians has finally been selected.

Meade Memorial Church is rich in history and lists many venerable names among its former members. The church was founded in 1869 and held its first services in the old Masonic Hall, which formerly stood at Fifth and Bainbridge Streets. The congregation immediately sought to secure a permanent home and in less than a year erected the first unit of the present church building. The Rev. James E. Hammond became the pastor and, with the Manchester Lodge of Masons, No. 14, laid the cornerstone of the building on July 29, 1869. The cornerstone has recently been opened and its contents placed in that of the new structure.

The church was given the name of William Meade, Bishop of Virginia.

The church has shown a steady growth through the years and now lists two hundred and twenty-five members on its rolls with an even larger Sunday School. The Rev. Thomas Semmes accepted the pastorate of the church in 1913 and has remained in that capacity ever since. The vestrymen of the church include Dr. L. H. Apperson, Dr. S. J. Baker, W. A. Magee, A. A. Stadelmyer, Charles Stadelmyer, W. R. Prentice, C. L. Paul, W. C. Pulliam, C. L. Jordan, W. F. Rex, L. H. Woods and J. C. Robertson.

Over six years ago plans were made for a new church to accommodate the growing needs of the congregation. In 1922 the site for the new structure was secured and the first contributions made. The total cost has been more than $60,000.

A large part of the fund has been secured through small contributions of money and equipment. Every pew which is to be placed in the auditorium has been given as a memorial. In addition, a memorial window to be placed in the rear of the chancel has been given to the church by the Rev. Thomas Semmes, the rector.

The new church will afford one of the most up-to-date plants in the city. The auditorium is designed in pure Roman style and has a seating capacity of four hundred, while the Sunday-school assembly room on the lower floor will comfortably seat five hundred persons. The latter is flanked by thirteen anterooms to be used for class work.

The exterior architecture of the church is Colonial and was designed by Eubank & Caldwell, architects, as a composite of a number of New England churches. The eighteenth century spire, surmounted by a bronze cross is unique among Richmond churches.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

St. John's Parish, Beltsville, Zion Parish, Maryland.

As the Church year drew to its close, on October 25, there was held in St. John's Church, Beltsville, a service that was both interesting and unique: for the occasion was the dedication of a beautiful window in loving appreciation of an old rector, who was present and took some part in the service, the Rev. C. I. LaRoche.

Mr. LaRoche was twice rector of this parish, and though it is some years since he left, he still holds a warm place in the hearts of all who knew him.

The service chosen for the dedication was the Communion Service and Mr. Hall had invited the Rev. Mr. Fletcher, of Southern Maryland, and an old friend of Mr. LaRoche, to take part in the service and make the dedication. He also gave a very fine address which was followed by a short one from Mr. LaRoche.

The church, which was nicely decorated, was filled to its utmost capacity by some of Mr. LaRoche's relatives and many old friends of long standing, and all felt the simple beauty of the service to be very inspiring and uplifting.

The window, put in by the New York firm of Geisler, is very rich in coloring and well designed; the subject is: "The Sower"—a truly appropriate subject for one who so long and so faithfully sowed the good seed over such a wide field.

Again on November 28, another beautiful window by the same firm, was dedicated in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Ulle, who brought up a large family in the neighborhood, most of whom were regular and faithful members of the congregation. The late Mr. Harry Ulle, son of the above, left a sum of money to the vestry of the church for the purpose of placing a memorial of his father and mother in the church to which they were so devoted.

With these two additions, there are now nine beautiful windows, besides other memorial furnishings; all which make this church one of the finest of the rural churches in the Diocese of Washington, and one of which the Bishop and the rector, the Rev. R. Hall, are justly proud.

The Advent Meeting of the Church School Service League of the Diocese of Washington, was held in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd on Saturday afternoon, December 8. A service for the children was held in the chapel, when an address was made by the Rev. J. A. Welbourne, of Kyoto, Japan. His description of life in Japan made a strong appeal to the children. A business meeting followed in the parish hall, when officers for the year were elected and finally a social hour followed, when refreshments were served by the Sunday-school children of the Chapel of the Good Shepherd. Officers were elected as follows:

Supervisor, Miss Emma W. Abbot, Chapel of the Good Shepherd; vice supervisor, Mrs. Clarence P. Parker, Norwood Parish; secretary, Miss Mary Elizabeth Evans, Rock Creek Parish; treasurer, Miss Louise L. Woodruff, St. Margaret's Parish; treasurer, Little Helpers, Mrs. L. L. Gourley, St. Margaret's Parish; box secretary, Miss Lydia Gerow, St. Stephen's Parish; secretary, birthday thank offering, Mrs. Howard Craver, St. John's Church, Olney.

Miss Sarah Von Gundy, head of the English Department of the National Cathedral School for Girls, died in Garfield Hospital, December 6, after an operation which resulted in pneumonia complications. Funeral services, which were held December 9 in Bethlehem Chapel, Washington Cathedral, were conducted by the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, Dean of Washington. Interment was in Lewisburg, Pa. The student body, faculty and a number of the alumnae, attended the srevice. Miss Van Gundy's services as head of the English Department of the school have extended over a period of twenty-one years, and she was, therefore, well known by girls throughout the country who have attended the school.

The New Parish Hall of the Church of St. Stephens and the Incarnation, located at Sixteenth and Newton Streets, is completed and services were held there on Sunday, December 2. Since the sale of the old church property, the services have been held in the Savoy Theatre and Calvary Methodist Church, but all services in the future will be held in the new parish hall, until the church building is completed. It is expected to hold the first service in the new church on Christmas Day, when Bishop Freeman will be the preacher.

Two new Chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew have been established in Washington. One is at the Church of the Transfiguration, of which the Rev. J. J. Queally is rector, and the other is at the Church of the Advent, whose rector is the Rev. Joseph E. Williams.

COLLECT FOR THIRD SUNDAY IN ADVENT.

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who at Thy first coming didst send Thy messenger to prepare Thy way before Thee: Grant that the ministers and stewards of Thy mysteries may likewise so prepare and make ready Thy way, by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at Thy second coming to judge the world we may be found an acceptable people in Thy sight, who liveth and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. THOMAS' DAY.

Almighty and ever-living God, Who, for the great confirmation of the faith, didst suffer Thy holy Apostle Thomas to be doubtful in Thy son's resurrection, Grant us so perfectly, and without all doubt, to believe in Thy son Jesus Christ, that our faith in Thy sight may never be reproved. Hear us, O Lord, through the same Jesus Christ, to Whom, with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be all honor and glory, now and forevermore. Amen.

PARQUETRY.

Annie Patton Cornell.

My little son is on his playroom floor,
Absorbed in matching bits of parquetry,
To form a bright design to show to me,
When I shall smile upon him from the door,
As I pass by bent on some household chore;
He loves my praise, but often we agree
Upon some change of plan or hue, and he Works smiling and more surely than before.

Dear Lord, down here upon the earth I make
The parquetry of life, I cannot see
Thy face—Thy smile—but with faith see Thy signs,
In wonders which surround me and I take Encouragement from these and pray to Thee,
"Give me more faith to work out my designs".

Keeping Christmas.

It is a good thing to observe Christmas Day. The mere marking of times and seasons, when men agree to stop work and make merry together, is a wise and wholesome custom. It helps one to feel the supremacy of the common life over the individual life. It reminds a man to set his own little watch, now and then, by the great clock of humanity which runs on sun time.

But there is a better thing than the observance of Christmas Day, and that is, keeping Christmas.

Are you willing to forget what you have done for other people, and to remember what other people have done for you; to ignore what the world owes you, and to think what you owe the world; to put your rights in the background, and your duties in the middle distance, and your chances to do a little more than your duty in the foreground; to see that your fellowmen are just as real as you are, and try to look behind their faces to their hearts, hungry for joy; to own that probably the only good reason for your existence is not what you are going to get out of life, but what you are going to give to life; to close your book of complaints against the management of the universe, and look around you for a place where you can sow a few seeds of happiness—are you willing to do these things even for a day? Then you can keep Christmas.

Are you willing to stoop down and consider the needs and the desires of little children; to remember the weakness and loneliness of people who are growing old; to stop asking how much your friends love you, and ask yourself whether you love them enough; to try to understand what those who live in the same house with you really want, without waiting for them to tell you; to trim your lamp so that it will give more light and less smoke, and to carry it in front so that your shadow will fall behind you; to make a grave for your ugly thoughts, and a garden for your kindly feelings, with the gate open—are you willing to do these things even for a day? Then you can keep Christmas.

And if you keep it for a day, why not always?—Henry Van Dyke.

The Great Adventure.

Louis Deschamps.

The story is told of a group of children who were taken to a fair in a distant city. A few were in the spirit for adventure, enthusiastic, eager and happy. The answers to their interesting questions increased the pleasure of the occasion. They enjoyed everything to the utmost—the trip, the exhiliaration of unknown discoveries, the buoyancy of youth. But there were some in the group who had become sophisticated and vain from assuming the indifferent attitude of certain skeptical elders. They began by making fun of their eager companions upon whom they would have impressed their own supercilious boredom. To them the whole trip was merely a pastime. Fairs were always the same. They found fault with the things that inspired enthusiasm in their companions. From a previously assumed air of scornful criticism they actually spent a miserable day. Only once they displayed interest, and that was upon mention of a larger fair in another city to which it was impossible for them to go.

The comparison of the two groups of children in the above illustration offers an interesting similarity with actual life. Many people find life monotonous and puzzling. They suffer from the blight of a wrong approach to the adventure of life. Their's is a tragic habit of sacrificing their spiritual powers to the idol of intellectual superiority, a vanity that poisons their enjoyment of life. By a strange alchemy of human nature, life is brightly colored in idealism or ghastly bleached in nothingness by the simple fact of mental approach or attitude. There is but one opportunity to experience the great adventure of life. It is always different in each individual life. There are none so wise and experienced that they can present the individual a stereotype life, pre-conceived and outlined. It is an adventure for each one, however loudly the cynic may wail. Because some unfortunate victims of their own fears and doubts would discourage others by unfair generalizations of their own surrender to disillusionment is not reasonable grounds for concluding that life is as they see it.

Faith, vision, hope and enthusiasm are far too valuable to be carelessly thrown aside at the bidding of the supposedly worldly wise. The modern tendency seems to be to accept the viewpoint of a cruel sophistication at whatever cost of happiness and moral responsibility. The prophets of nothingness prove nothing. Their appeal is merely to human vanity of barren self-sufficiency. Victims of excessive realism proclaim the fallacy of their arguments. On the other hand, the idealists are spiritually minded and offer the example of their religious devotion in proof of the satisfaction of their great adventure. It is true they are often in misfortune and adversity, but their spirit is intact. They do not cultivate the deadly habit of sneering, nor of criticising life in assumed attitude of disdain. They cherish a spiritual vision that makes life an adventure. When the fog of monotony or sordidness threatens their ships, they refuse to extinguish their little pinnacles of faith and steer right onward. The rift in the clouds is quickly appreciated. Night is offset with dawn, storms with fair weather. Adversity is a part of the adventure, calling forth the ancient virtues of courage and honorable pride in combat. Their's is a glorious heritage of a Sacred Cause. If all seems lost, there still remains the honor of traditional responsibility to "acquit themselves like men".

The voices of the weak and fearful, or of the cynical and critical are not imperative. They are merely the warning from stranded ships. Sensational pessimism is not final. Each individual must reach his own conclusion about life. It can not be brought within the scope of mortal mind. As a great adventure, it is heroic, sublime and infinite. Amid its beauty and ugliness, its light and darkness, its joys and sorrows is the spiritual presence of God.

Christmas as a Prophecy.

We are so accustomed to it that we do not realize what a passing strange celestial phenomenon is annually visible in Christian lands at this time of the year. Not the glad hurrying crowds in the streets, nor the bright shops crowded with gifts for them to buy; not the inspiring services in the churches, nor the beautiful carols carried far on the frosty air; not the happy parties for the children, nor the return of sons and daughters to the old hearth that the family circle of other days may be restored again—none of these is so strange to contemplate as the sudden expansion of spirit in unlikely men that impels them to do such things.

Why do not only good Christian people celebrate Christmas in all these delightful ways, but unbelievers and infidels. the wicked as well as the virtuous? Why do enemies cease from fighting at Christmas and forgive old injuries? Why does this day make the surly smile graciously, and the crabbed grow mellow for a while, and the misers loosen their purse strings, and the contentious cease from troubling?

The usual answer is that they are caught by the contagion and do as Christian people do. That is no doubt true; virtue is fortunately contagious as well as vice and goodness begets competition in goodness. But there must be more than the contagion of example. The giving of gifts and forgiving of enemies by men who all the rest of the year are ruled by the code of the jungle, ruthless and relentless, are likely evidences that something that has been till then suppressed in their hearts has at last found an avenue of escape. Maybe there has been kept prisoner in the heart of these men for months a love for God and men which Christmas releases, and which rejoices to get free to stretch the wings of its supressed and cramped spirit.

This annual display of good will on the part of men and women who are neither Christian in name nor in fact during the rest of the year ought to convince the most cynical that the human heart has possibilities that are magnificent and prophetic. For, as Joseph Fort Newton says, Christmas celebrations are prophetic. Not only was the first Christmas foretold in prophecy, but every Christmas season when men forget self and show forth their good will is a prophecy of the universal peace and good will which shall one day reign on earth. If men can be Christlike on one day in the year, if peace and goodwill can reign for a season at Christmas, the angel's words will come true. "How far off it seems today," writes Dr. Newton. "Yet it will come true. The Christian era lies ahead of us."—Church News.

A PRAYER FOR ALL CONDITIONS OF MEN.

Charles Nevers Holmes.

O God, Creator of us all,
The work our hands have wrought,
We humbly pray that mercies fall
On men of every sort.

O God, whom we devoutly praise,
Preserver of our race,
To men and nations show Thy ways,
Thy saving health and grace.

And for Thy Holy Church we pray,
Thy Church at home, abroad,
That it be guided every day
By Thy good Spirit, Lord.

That in truth's pathway we shall be,
Christ's way, which we profess,
And hold his faith in unity,
In peace and righteousness.

And to Thy goodness we commend
All those distressed by grief,
That Thou wilt their afflictions end
And bring them quick relief.

And give them patience in their pain,
From them their sorrows take,
Let health and happiness remain,
For Christ our Saviour's sake.
Amen.

Pure Thinking.

Dr. F. W. Robertson once said concerning the best methods of avoiding evil thinking: "How shall we avoid evil thoughts? First, by the fear of God—an awful thought! A living God, infinitely pure, is conscious of your contaminated thoughts. Love and hope will keep us strong against passions, as they kept our Saviour strong in suffering, "who for the joy set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame."

Secondly, by the promises of God. Think of what you are—a child of God, an heir of Heaven. Realize the grandeur of saintliness, and you will shrink from degrading your soul and debasing your spirit. It is in reading, or seeing saintly lives that we are ashamed of groveling desires. Seek exercise and occupation. Commit to memory passages of Scripture. Store your mind with these as safeguards. Let these be to you the sword, turning everywhere to keep the garden of life from the intrusion of profaner footsteps.

For The Southern Churchman.

KINDNESS.

Rev. Dr. Percy T. Fenn.

The cynic prates about the lack of kindness upon earth;
The thought of its existence seems provocative of mirth.
But if he'd stop to think awhile, he'd find out his mistake,
And bowed with shame, and penitence, apologies would make.

From early birth our fellow-men have shared our human grief;
Without a thought of recompense they've given us swift relief;
In pain, in sorrow, and in want, their tongues were never tied,
And to uplift from penury their hands were outstretched wide.

'Tis not the saints of earth alone whose hearts feel for our need;
Some benefactors we have known were folks without a creed;
The slave of creed and formula is often, we deplore,
Inclined to worship God alone, and Brotherhood ignore.

The poor and rich are equally endowed with kindly heart,
And men of alien race and tongue have seldom shirked their part;
When need arises, mindful not of self, they show no dearth
Of the human kindness which excels the coronets of earth.

If we fail to find the kindness which can cheer us on our way,
It is because our eyes are blind, our feet have gone astray.
The love of man for brotherman in travail, and in pain,
Is boundless in its mightiness, and Godlike in its aim.

St. Stephen's College,
Annandale, New York.

The Religion of Joy.

Christianity is peculiarly a religion of joy. But Christian joy is a lost chord in the otherwise fine music of many a believer's and congregation's life. Religious discouragement and spiritual despondency are like mill-stones about the neck of faith. They are the dangerous rocks upon which both individual Christian workers and congregational efforts have wrecked the efficiency of their Christian service. The exhortation of the Psalmist to "Serve the Lord with gladness", is therefore one of profound wisdom and practical application. Here is the secret of church strength and success. Among the last written words of the great, optimistic hero of the Christian faith, written in captivity, are the words of the Golden Text, "Rejoice in the Lord always; again I will say, Rejoice".—Lutheran.

BUNYAN IN BEDFORD JAIL.

Dream on, thou man of God, dream on!
For in thy living tomb
Visions more bright than earth had known
Are flashing through its gloom.

Lo! through thy dungeon dark and deep,
On wings seraphic borne,
The angel hosts in glory sweep
Like sun-bright clouds at morn.

The heavens are opened to thy gaze
E'en as to Israel's view;
And there, with joy and hymns of praise,
The saints are flocking through.

Thou seest in thy dreams by night
The way the pilgrims trod,
To where the first born sons of light
Forever live with God.

Thou seest the Church triumphant now,
In all her queenly pride;
And wearing on her radiant brow
The garlands of a bride.

Thou seest where, in heaven above,
'Neath the eternal domes,
They celebrate the feast of love,
And shout, "Th Bridegroom comes!"

Thou dost behold the crystal sea
Before the throne which spreads,
Where stand the sons of victory,
With crowns upon their heads.

Where, in each passing zephyr's breath,
The palms all glorious wave,
For conquest over beautiful death,
And victory o'er the grave.

Thou seest the heavenly city there,
Where blest immortals dwell,
More glorious, more divinely fair,
Than mortal tongues may tell.

Thou seest the living sapphire throne,
And Him who thereon reigns;
The Great Eternal Three in One,
Whose breath all life sustains.

Oh! then, dream on. Lo! to thine eyes
Truth in each vision beams;
Thy dreams are all realities—
Our waking thoughts are dreams!

Forgiveness.

"I'll forgive him," said one, "but I can never forget the injury he has done me." This kind or forgiveness is, as one has expressed it, like burying the hatchet and leaving the handle sticking out. In a certain sense memory carries the record of whatever has happened. No efforts of ours can blot out the past. So in this sense we cannot forget. But in another sense we can and must forget when we forgive. Along with a genuine Scripture forgiveness goes such a willingness to bury the past that nothing is held in the heart against the one who has offended.—Exchange.

"Faith links a man to Christ, so that he is no more a mere common man, with only his own poor feeble strength, but is more than a man—a man whom Christ is using, behind whom Christ's omnipotent energy is working. We must yield ourselves altogether to God and let Him use us. Then His power, His wisdom, His skill, His thoughts, His love shall flow through our souls, our brains, our hearts, and our fingers. That is working by faith. It is simply putting our life into God's hand to be used, as one uses a pen or a brush to paint, or a chisel to carve a statue."

MARY'S LULLABY.

Little Babe! my little Babe!
Lying at my breast,
God's most precious gift Thou art,
Sweetest, loveliest.

Little Babe! my little Babe!
Heaven was Thy throne;
Here were none to welcome Thee,
I kept watch alone.

Little Babe! my little Babe!
Hark! the angels sing!
Tidings of such wondrous joy
To mankind they bring.

Little Babe! my little Babe!
Only Thou and I
Know the rapture of this hour,
Feel its ecstasy!

Little Babe! my little Babe!
When a world defiled
Wakes to greet the new-born day
Wakes to find a Child!

Little Babe! my little Babe!
Will it worship Thee?
God made manifest to show
Love's Immensity!

Little Babe! my little Babe!
As I kiss Thy brow;
Babe of mine! yet King Divine
I adore Thee now!

"Yo-Ho-Ho."

Elizabeth Cole.

"Fifteen men on the dead man's chest—Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle of rum!"

Over and over again. "Fifteen men on the ——— Jerusalem!" cried Jimmy, shaking himself. "If I could only get that line. Fifteen men on the dead man's chest—Yo-ho-ho, will the next line come? Yo-ho-ho, it won't, by gum! Well, I'm getting groggy, I guess."

"You always will be groggy, you poor lubber, if you hit the deck with us," broke out a gruff, tottering voice.

"Who's hitting any decks?" demanded Jimmy.

The owner of the voice stuck his head out from behind a great barrel. His appearance lived up to his voice. A faded, blue shirt, open at the neck, with ragged sleeves rolled to the elbows revealed a hairy chest and tattooed arms, none too clean.

"Captain Bones!" shouted Jimmy, "Billy Bones, shiver-my-timbers!" and he ran toward the old man. "Yes, there's the saber cut on his left cheek!" he whispered to himself. "Where am I?" he asked aloud.

"Why, matey, you be on the cleverest craft that ever skimmed the seas. And mind yer manners or ye'll be walking the plank with the rest of the buccaneers," he added, for Jimmy began to jump up and down, shouting, "Whoopee! I bet the treasure's here, too. Where's the chest, captain?" he began, but the captain made a lunge toward him, pulling out a ferocious-looking cutlass.

Then suddenly out from the hold poured forth a motley looking crew of sailors. There was Black Dog, wanting two fingers of his left hand, tallowy face, sneer and all; Arrow, with earrings and a squint; Israel Hands, the coxswain, chewing his quid with his grizzled hair falling over his withered face; O'Brien, a red cap on his matted hair, and a leering grin. And there where the great barrel had been, loomed a large chest of treasure. Sitting on top of it, swinging his one leg and blandly smiling, was Old John Silver himself. On his shoulder perched Captain Flint, the screaming parrot.

"Dash my buttons, there's my treasure!" cried Jimmy, running toward the old sea cook and his parrot. But the parrot, with a loud burst of gabbling sea talk, began to shout, "Pieces of eight! Pieces of eight!" over and over again.

"Yes, old Long John, that's my treasure and you know it," shouted Jimmy at the top of his lungs.

With that, all the swashbuckling pirates leaped forward and closed around Jimmy. Straightway, such a fight took place as was never seen on land nor sea.

Jimmy seized Long John Silver by the shoulder, crying, "What an old sea-calf you are, to be sure!"

Nimbly the one-legged man threw him off and jumped up onto the chest shouting, "Pipe up—all hands at him! Shiver my timbers, but the lad's spry!"

The mob of buccaneers pressed in on all sides. They clawed at the boy, clawed at others, flourished their pistols and cutlasses, screached blood-curdling yells, fired deafening shots, quivered and grunted. So much noise, so many arms flourishing, and there was Jimmy in the midst, fighting barehanded, laughing and shouting with glee.

"I've got you, George Merry! Down you go, you old mahogany-faced Morgan! You'll never call for rum again, bad Billy Bones. Now, for you, my hearty, you and your sweet-mouthed parrot!" And, sure enough, down they did go. One by one like tenpins the brawny sea-farers were knocked to the deck where they lay groaning.

"Bravo, Jimmy!" came a voice through the din.

"Dr. Lively, as I live!" cried Jimmy. "Yo! Ho! Ho! We've got 'em all. The treasure's safe at last. Now, let's look to the sails and the rudder. Yo-ho-ho, here's the ship of health. Safe again with its priceless wealth! We got it, doctor. We got the treasure back," and Jimmy began to pound the neat little doctor on the back, shouting, "Yo-ho-ho", at the top of his lungs.

"What's the idea, Jimmy?" said his big brother's voice. "Hey, wake up and snap out of it!" He thumped Jimmy on the shoulder and tried to disentangle him from the rumpled bed clothes.

"Hello, what's this here?" he asked as he pulled out a book from under the pillow. "No wonder you're fighting pirates—here's your Treasure Island. And what have you got here? Ha! Ha! A bunch of Christmas seals! Well, you old scooker, with your pirates and your ship of health! What a rip-roaring old nightmare you had!"

"Uh," murmured Jimmy sleepily, "you know I got to fight with those seals. The pirates can't have that treasure of health. I got to sell a lot of seals tomorrow and keep the ship O'health sailing."

And so, my friends, you probably have suspected by now why this story was written. In December, everybody who buys and sells Christmas seals is helping in the fight against tuberculosis. That is probably what Jimmy's teacher had told him and maybe she also had told him that Robert Louis Stevenson, who wrote Treasure Island, had been robbed of his health—that he had been a victim of tuberculosis. And so Jimmy in his dream was trying to restore the treasure of health. Anyway, it was all a conglomeration of people and thoughts and maybe will serve as an inspiration to lots of other boys and girls to help "Fight Tuberculosis", through buying and selling the little ships of health.

Capsule's Surprises.

Lela's enormous darning needle deftly caught up the snow-white grains of popcorn from the bowl in her lap and her quick fingers slipped them to the end of the long thread. Strings of ruby red cranberries were coiled in a basket beside her, and one lovely length of popcorn.

"Look, Aunt Dee! Could anything be prettier," she asked, holding up the finished strings. "And won't Billy be tickled pink when he sees his Christmas tree? Mother said I could trim it all by myself. I surely am glad that I've got a baby brother. This is really his first Christmas, cause he was too little to know anything about it last year."

Aunt Dee smiled as she ironed the embroidered bed spread which she had made for her sister's Christmas present. She was in a big hurry. Lela's mother had gone downtown to do some last minute shopping and was liable to return at any moment. So Aunt Dee was anxious to have the gift all pressed beautifully and wrapped up before she came home.

"That's what makes Christmas such a joyous occasion, Lela. It is oodles of fun just making other people happy!" exclaimed the auntie as her iron sped over the gay flowers trailing from the big basket in the design.

The little girl nodded her towsled red head and her brown eyes twinkled with excitement. Christmas Eve was the most thrilling day of all. Better even than birthdays, or the last day of school!

But almost immediately her face clouded. "Yes, indeed, I do love to make other folks happy, but—I know somebody who is stingy, and just plain mean, I guess! She is about the bummiest old capsule friend you ever heard of. All the girls think it is an awful way to treat any one. Just think! She hasn't even written me a letter—much less surprise me. And it has been four weeks since she drew my name. Stingy old thing!"

Lela had been pouring out her troubles so fast that Aunt Dee couldn't get a word in edgewise. And she was nearly consumed with curiosity when she finally managed to interrupt. "Capsule friend? Is it medicine or what? Aren't you all mixed up, Lela."

Her niece chuckled, started to explain, and got all her words and chuckles tangled up, until Aunt Dee began to laugh with her and at her, although she couldn't even imagine what had turned Lela's tickle box over.

Finally Lela quieted down. "Don't tell me you have never had capsule friends in Arcadia, Aunt Dee! Well, when you go home after Christmas you must let the little girls in your Sunday-school class have capsule friends, too. All you have to do is write the names of the girls on tiny slips of paper, put them in real capsules—we got ours at the drug store—then have each child draw one. But she mustn't tell a soul in the class whose name she has!"

"How exciting and mysterious! They'll love that game!"

"Then you give nice surprises to your capsule friend. I drew Pauline Farr's name. At recess one day I left the darlingest celluloid doll on her desk at school. About a week later I sent her a match box chock full of clothes for the doll. The grocery man took it for me and told Pauline it was from her capsule friend."

"That's lots of fun! And, of course, you have the loveliest surprise of all planned for Pauline's Christmas gift! '

Lela frowned stubbornly. "I am not going to give her one single, solitary thing else! I don't know whose capsule I am, but I guess I know when I am not being treated right. I've got SOME feelings, I have. Pauline won't get another surprise from me. I'm surely glad we draw capsules again the Sunday after Christmas. Maybe next time I'll get a decent one!"

"My gracious, Lela! Why, it isn't Pauline's fault! And perhaps your capsule has a very good reason for neglecting you. Please don't spoil the holiday spirit with such ugly thoughts. Do you know the golden rule?"

"Course I do. Treat others like you want to be treated!" Did Aunt Dee think she was a perfect dumb-bell? But what did this have to do with capsule friends, anyway. Lela was puzzled.

"Well," laughed her aunt, carefully folding up the lovely bed spread, "That's the spirit of it, any way. Have you forgotten that Jesus went about teaching the gospel of love? And tomorrow is His birthday."

Suddenly Lela got the idea. She let her string of pop corn fall into the bowl, which she quickly set on the table.

"Aw, Aunt Dee! Now I know what you mean! And I feel like a crook, or something else crooked. I guess I am not half as fierce as I pretend to be. What does it matter if my capsule doesn't surprise me? I am your little old Golden Rule Lela from now on!" She danced on her tiptoes and clapped glad hands. "I am going to make some of the spiffiest fudge you ever put in your mouth—for Pauline! I'll stuff some dates for her and—and—"

"Let me help, Lela. Would you like some wee pop corn balls?"

No answer was needed! The bear hug that Lela gave her auntie made her gasp.

"And I have some of the cutest samples of soap, small bikes of talcum powder, tiny tubes of tooth paste, and a wee bottle of perfume. I'll find a pretty box to put them in and line it with pink cotton. Then we'll put the dates, candy and pop corn balls in another box. Oh—after it gets good and dark, let's slip the boxes in Pauline's front screen, give her doorbell a long ring, and then run back home!"

It was dark when the two boxes were filled, wrapped with crisp tissue paper, and tied with holly ribbon. A dangling Christmas card announced: From Your Capsule Friend.

Giggling with anticipation they started out, but stopped short as they opened the front door. They had almost stumbled over three packages that lay just inside the screen.

"Oh—Christmas presents!" they both exclaimed together.

Lela was the first to read the inscripture on a letter tucked beneath the green string. "Wishing Lela the very merriest Christmas ever! Capsule Friend."

"Now what do you think of that! My capsule friend—Three big packages, Aunt Dee!"

Her aunt pretended not to notice the flush of shame that swept over Lela's face as she read the letter.

"I know it is from little Mary Dawson who lives on a farm not far from town. I never thought of her being my capsule friend! But it couldn't be any one else because she says she has been terribly busy helping pick cotton, gathering pecans, and having review and exams, too, these last few weeks. So that's why she didn't surprise me. On top of it all came a norther and they killed four big hogs. Mary says she had to help get the sausage, meat and lard put away for the winter."

"Well, the dear child! No wonder she never found a minute to surprise her capsule friend. Who ever heard of a young girl having so many jobs to do!" cried Aunt Dee in wonder and admiration.

Lela went on with the letter. "Oh, goody, goody! She has brought me a bundle of fluffy cotton that she carded herself. Now we can take all those queer, lumpy rags out of Billy's rag doll and fill it with soft cotton this very night. And maybe after Christmas mama will make me a yellow organdie pillow to decorate my bed in the daytime. We'll stuff it with Mary's cotton."

To Lela's added joy her aunt promised, "I'll make it for you, Lela, before I go home."

"What a gorgeous present, a half gallon of picked out pecans! Such gobs of candy as we'll make now, all bumpy with nuts. And do listen to this, Aunt Dee: 'A box of sausage patties for your Christmas breakfast'. Did you ever hear of such a surprise? Pinch me, Aunt Dee!"

But Lela wasn't dreaming—they soon found out when they had opened the packages.

Suddenly she remembered the two lovely presents that were yet to be delivered to Pauline Farr.

"Talk about capsule surprises!" she laughed. "We are about to forget there is another to come off before long. But, Aunt Dee, I just know that Mary is the dearest, and the thoughtfulest capsule friend of all!"—Baptist Standard.

MOTHER NATURE'S CHRISTMAS TREES

The day was cold and crisp and raw,
The sleet fell swiftly down,
And covered every object white
That stood without the town.

Then silently but steadily,
The gentle night came on,
And still the pelting sleet kept up—
Until the break of dawn.

The sun arose in glory throned,
Then what our eyes did see!
For every tree was silver clad
As bright as bright could be!

It seemed as if those bare old limbs
Had turned to sparkling gems,
As if small bits of tinsel had
Been hung on all the stems!

Little Will Try.

Little Jane was sitting on the floor, playing with her blocks.

"Jane," said Mother, "it is time for supper. Pick up your blocks, and put them in your play-box."

"I tan't," said little Jane.

"Oh, yes, you can," said Mother. "You are getting to be a big girl now. You can pick up your blocks just as easily as anything."

But Jane shook her curly head and said, "No, Muvver, I tan't."

"Then, come help Mother pick up the blocks," said Mother. "See if you can pick up more than Mother does." Jane picked up the blocks as fast as ever she could.

"There, you see you can pick up your blocks," said Mother.

"No, I tan't all by myself," said Jane.

After supper, Daddy said, "I wonder if there's any little girl around here who can get Daddy's slippers for him."

Jane looked up from her picture-book and said, "I tan't, Daddy."

"Oh, yes, you can," said Daddy. "Suppose you try."

"No, Daddy, I tan't," said Jane.

Big Sister Helen said, "I'll get your slippers, Daddy."

"All right," said Daddy, "for little Jane can't."

"That is a good name for her," said Mother, "little Jane Can't."

"No, no," said Daddy. "That's not a good name; that's a bad name. I shouldn't want my name to be little Jane Can't."

"Yes, that is my name," said little Jane, "'cause I tan't do fings."

"All right," said Mother. "We will call you little Jane Can't."

The next day, little Jane and Mother went to see dear Grandmother. After Grandmother had kissed little Jane and Mother, she said, "Jane, please close the door for Grandmother."

"I tan't," said Jane.

"You can't?" asked Grandmother.

"No, I tan't," said little Jane.

Mother said, "You see, Grandmother, this is little Jane Can't who has come to see you today."

"Oh, said Grandmother. "I thought it was my dear little Jane."

"I am your dear little Jane," said Jane, and she ran to Grandmother.

"If you are my dear little Jane," said Grandmother, "you are not going to be little Jane Can't. Now, run and close the door for Grandmother, and be her dear little Jane again."

"But I tan't, Grandmuvver. Don't you see I tan't?" said Jane.

"Could you close the door if some one would help you, Jane?" asked Grandmother.

"Of course I tould," said Jane. "You help me, Grandmuvver."

"No," said Grandmuvver, "I know a better way," and she took little Jane up on her lap.

"There is a little fairy who stays around all the time, waiting to help little girls do things their mothers and daddies and grandmothers ask them to do."

"Where is the fairy?" asked Jane, as she looked all around. "I don't see him."

"You can't see this little fairy," said Grandmother, "but he will come to help you if you call him."

"What's his name?" asked Jane.

"His name's Will Try," said Grandmother, "and here is the way you have to call him every time. You must shut your eyes, and say:

" 'Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I can do it if I try.' "

Jane shut her eyes tight, and said:

"Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I tan do it if I twy."

"That is right," said Grandmother. "Now, I wonder if you can close that door."

Jane jumped down off Grandmother's lap, and ran to the door, and shut her eyes, and said.

"Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I tan do it f I twy."

And she gave the door a big push, and, bang, it went shut.

"I did it! I did it!" cried Jane, as she ran back to Grandmother. "Will Twy and I did it, Grandmuvver, didn't we?"

"Of course you did," said Grandmother, "and Will Try and you can do it every time, if you don't forget to ask him."

"I won't fodet," cried Jane.

When Mother and Jane went home from Grandmother's, Jane took her blocks out of her play-box, and played with them until Mother said, "Jane, there comes Daddy. Pick up your blocks, and get ready for supper."

"I tan't," said Jane. "Oh, I forgot," and she shut her eyes and said:

Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I tan do it if I twy."

And she picked up her blocks as fast as ever she could.

After supper, Daddy said, "I wonder if little Jane Can't is going to get Daddy's slippers for him tonight."

"My name's not little Jane Tan't," said Jane.

"It isn't?" said Daddy. "What is it, then?"

"I'll show you what my name is," said Jane, and she shut her eyes and said:

Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I tan do it if I twy."

And away she ran, and came back in a minute with one of Daddy's slippers in each hand.

"Well, well, well!" said Daddy. "I should say your name isn't little Jane Can't. Why, your name's little Jane Try, isn't it?"

"Uh-huh," said Jane, "My name's little Jane Twy, and my little faiwy's name is little Will Twy."

"You must be little brother and sister Try," said Daddy. "That's a fine family."—Stories New and Stories True, Courtesy Revell.

A BOY'S QUESTIONS.

What keeps the stars from falling?
What makes the world go round?
How can flies walk on the ceiling
Just like they do on the ground?

Why don't it snow in summer?
Don't the fishes ever get drowned?
Did you ever see any fairies?
Who lost the knife that I found?

Where do the bees get honey?
Who finds balloons that are lost?
What makes people bald-headed?
How much do elephants cost?

What makes you tired this evening?
There's a gray hair in your head.
Wonder what makes me sleepy?
Good night; I'm going to bed.

—Exchange.

When James Ran Away.

He was a little blue-eyed, flaxen-haired lad, scarcely more than a baby. A tiny brother had just come into his home to share his mother's love and attention, and so he sometimes felt a bit lonesome and forgot. Especially did he feel so when mother was busy with baby. Then he would often quietly slip outdoors and wander about by himself.

One day, when this little fellow had slipped outside in the same quiet way he had many times before, a queer little thought popped into his head. Quick as a flash he turned and in less time than it takes to tell he had started down the long street, which leads to town, his daddy's office and the big store more than a mile from his home. His little feet seemed to fairly fly over the walk. If any one passed him, no one picked him up or turned him back. A neighbor going home in his automobile saw the tiny lad and thought he recognized the yellow curls and blue coveralls, but in his haste he did not stop. Instead, as soon as he reached home, he rushed across the yard to tell the mother and to see if her child were really gone.

A hasty search proved that James was nowhere about. Without a doubt, it was he whom the neighbor saw. Of course the mother was frightened, but thankful, too, that some one had seen her boy and she would know where to look for him. She knew that he must be near town by that time; so she quickly telephoned her husband. In a minute he was on the street, and there, not more than a block from his office, he saw his curly-headed son in the arms of a big policeman.

Now, would you believe it? Bigger folks than James sometimes run away. They frighten their mothers just as badly, too, and make a lot of people uncomfortable. Indeed, they cause much trouble and sorrow for others. And, what is worse, not often is there a big policeman near to rescue them. So they rush on into all sorts of bad company and suffering. Sometimes these boys and girls run away because they think mother and daddy are hard on them. But, let me whisper it, they are usually sorry enough afterwards.—Our Boys and Girls.

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a dilghtful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part: "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes: "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes. "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work."

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past."

A profesor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiona touches me deeply."

JAMESTOWN, YORKTOWN, WILLIAMSBURG, COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY

1881.—College closed for lack of funds.

1888.—A bill was approved by the governor granting an annual appropriation by the state. Dr. Lyon G. Tyler was chosen president.

1893.—The U. S. Congress passed a bill indemnifying the college partially for its losses in the War Between the States.

1906.—The college was transferred to the state by act approved March 5.

1919.—After thirty-one years' service, Dr. Lyon G. Tyler became president emeritus. Dr. J. A. C. Chandler elected president.

1920.—The construction of Jefferson Hall begun.

1924.—A total enrollment of 2,500 students for the year 1924-25 in all courses, including summer school and extension courses.

WILLIAMSBURG.

In 1623 Governor Wyatt considered running a pale between the James and York rivers from Martin's Hundred to Chiskiak. This plan was delayed. In 1632 Dr. John Pott obtained a patent for 1,200 acres of land at the head of Archer's Hope Creek, probably adjoining what is now the college tract of land. In 1633 a palisade, six miles in length, was built connecting the head of Archer's Hope creek, a tributary of the James River, and the head of Queen's creek, a tributary of the York River. On the ridge between the two rivers, and close to the palisade, a settlement, called Middle Plantation, was made. In 1639 Lieutenant Richard Popely was commander of Middle Plantation. Among the early settlers of Middle Plantation were two nephews of Sir Francis Wyatt, Henry Tyler, ancestor of President John Tyler, and Colonel John Page, the founder of the Page family in Virginia.

1676.—On August 3 of this year, Nathaniel Bacon, Jr., held a convention at Middle Plantation to arouse resistence against Governor Berkeley.

1693.—The General Assemly enacted "That Middle Plantation be the place for erecteing the said college of William and Mary in Virginia and that said college be at that place erected and built as neare the church now standing in Middle Plantation old fields as convenience will permit".

1698.—After the burning of the state house at Jamestown in October, 1698, Governor Francis Nicholson established Middle Plantation as the seat of government.

1699.—The action of Governor Nicholson was approved by the General Assembly, and an act was passed directing the building of the capitol at Middle Plantation. Two hundred and eighty-three acres were to be set out for the city. The main street was named Duke of Gloucester Street in 1705, in honor of Queen Anne's eldest son 1705.—The General Assembly met for the first time in the new capitol building. Appropriation made to begin the Governor's palace.

1706.—Mattey's free school founded.

1715.—The powder magazine was erected under the direction of Governor Spotswood. Present Bruton Church was finished on the site of the former church, which had been built in 1683.

1716.—William Levingston built the first theater in America.

1722.—The last year of Spotswood's administration. The town of Williamsburg became a city incorporate. John Holloway was the first mayor.

Deaths

MRS. WILLIAMETTE SCHOOLER PAGE.

Resolutions of the Vestry of Zion Episcopal Church, Fairfax, Va.

It is with genuine sorrow that we record upon our minutes the death of MRS. WILLIAMETTE FLEMING SCHOOLER PAGE, widow of the late Rev. Frank Page, who for many years was the beloved rector of our Church. Mrs. Page came to Fairfax in 1912, after her marriage to Dr. Page, and continued to make her home here until her passing on November 8th at the Johnston-Willis Hospital, in Richmond. Her loss is irreparable in our community. She took a leading part in all church activities and in all good works in our midst. Drawing to herself a wide circle of friends, she so lived among us that she incurred no enmities. To the friendless and the needy she was unfailing in her sympathy and help. Her grace, charm and humor, beautifully mingled in an industrious capable nature, always made her home a haven of blessing and joy. To Dr. Page she was ever an inspiring helpmeet. And as a memorial to her husband's memory she has made in her will a generous gift to our Church, one that will go far toward the erection of a new church building in the not remote future.

The influence of Mrs. Page's blameless life and Christian character will ever be cherished by us as a priceless heritage, and we give thanks to our Heavenly Father for this example of Christian living, a "choice vessel of His Grace", a light and a blessing in our generation.

THOMAS R. KEITH, Sen. Warden,
N. PEYTON YOUNG, Registrar.
WM. C. MARSHALL, Rector.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman conducted the Service of Institution at St. Mark's Church on the first Sunday in Advent, when the Rev. Hulbert A. Woolfall was instituted as rector of the parish. Bishop Freeman also preached the sermon and celebrated the Holy Communion. Mr. Woolfall held his first service in the parish at an early celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M. The rectors who have served at St. Mark's Church since the organization of the diocese have been Canon De Vries, now at the Washington Cathedral; Dr. Stetson, rector of Trinity Parish, New York, and the Rev. W. H. Pettus of Everett, Mass. The parish was founded in 1869, developing as a mission from old Christ Church, Navy Yard, and its first rector, the Rev. A. Floridus Steel, served until his death, in 1892.

Christened.

At the Church of the Epiphany, on Thanksgiving Day, 1928, by the Rev. Ze Barney Phillips, Robert Emmett, Jr., infant son of Robert Emmett and Ethel Hester Bailey; grandson of Mrs. Margaret Williams Hester; great-grandson of the Rev. W. B. Williams, of Richmond; and great-great-grandson of John Williams, one of the founders of St. James' Church, Richmond, Virginia. Dr. Phillips included in his prayers the well-being and happiness of Miss Margaret Williams Hester, the child's aunt, who recently has taken up her duties as a missionary in Japan.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Seventieth Anniversary.

A special service in which the four congregations of the parish participated was held Sunday evening, November 25, commemorating the seventieth anniversary of the beginning of preaching services in Holy Trinity Church, Rittenhouse Square, Philadelphia.

The three congregations in addition to that of Holy Trinity Church participating were: Holy Trinity Memorial Chapel, Twenty-second and Spruce Streets; Chapel of the Prince of Peace, Twenty-second and Morris Streets, and Phillips Brooks' Memorial Chapel, Nineteenth and Lombard Streets. The Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity, had charge of the service.

Fifty-seven Years in One Rectory.

Funeral services were held Saturday, November 24, for Mrs. Emma J. H. Goodfellow, wife of the Rev. John A. Goodfellow, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Kensington, Philadelphia. Mrs. Goodfellow died Tuesday in the rectory on Cumberland Street, after an illness of several months.

She was born in Philadelphia and married Mr. Goodfellow fifty-seven years ago. During the whole fifty-seven years they lived in Good Shepherd rectory. For thirty-seven years she was superintendent of the primary department Sunday School, and was branch secretary of the Girls' Friendly Society for many years.

At a meeting of the Standing Committee held November 13, the Bishop presented a letter from a layman urging that some method should be adopted by the Standing Committee for informing the clergy and laity as to the qualifications of persons likely to be placed in nomination for Bishop Coadjutor at the Special Convention of December 18.

In response to this suggestion, the Standing Committee appointed the undersigned a Committee to consider the suggestion and take such action as might be deemed advisable. In order to accomplish the purpose the Committee called a conference of the clergy to be held at Holy Trinity Parish House, Wednesday, November 28, and a conference of the lay deputies to the Convention to be held the same day at the Church House.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, Bishop.

First Confirmation Service.

The Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, who was consecrated as Bishop of South Carolina Friday, November 30, at St. Michael's Church, Charleston, conducted his first confirmation services at Christ Church the following Sunday morning and, on Sunday evening, conducted the services at St. Luke's Church, of which his brother, the Rev. Harold Thomas, is rector.

NORTHERN INDIANA.

Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop.

A forward step in organization was taken by the Council of Women of the Diocese of Northern Indiana at their regular semi-annual meeting held at the Bishop's House, Mishawaka, on Thursday, November 22. This movement found expression in the resolution that the Diocesan President of the Auxiliary take over the work of the Diocesan Guild Chairman.

A revised Constitution and By-Laws of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese will be presented at the next annual meeting of the Auxiliary, and, if passed by that body, will create within the diocese one large organization of women known as the Woman's Auxiliary, the Executive Board of which will be composed of the diocesan officers of the Auxiliary and one representative of any national organization of Churchwomen, which is organized within the diocese. Such a reorganization will place Northern Indiana more directly in line with the policy of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

New St. George's.

On Saturday afternoon Bishop Murray laid the cornerstone to the new St. George's Church, Dundalk, Md. This church was formerly known as the Chapel of the Incarnation, St. Helena, but the location of the church was moved up in the small village of Dundalk and newly named. The Rev. J. McNeal Wheatley is in charge of the work.

In loving memory of the Rev. Alexander K. Barton, his friends propose to present to Christ Church, Baltimore, a litany desk of carved oak. The desk is a simple prayer desk flanked by kneeling figures, on one side of a mail-clad crusader leaning on his long sword, on the other of a priest in full eucharistic vestments holding in his hand the chalice. The front is pierced by an illuminated inscription in Gothilc lettering, which reads, "In Memoriam Alexander Kirland Barton, Crusader, Priest, Inspirer of Youth".

During the year 1921, the Rev. Mr. Barton served as assistant at Christ Church. During this period the church was without a rector, and, although the pulpit was filled most of the time by Canon McComb and other distinguished preachers, the pastoral care of the congregation and the executive management of the organization of the church devolved upon Mr. Barton. He became Episcopal Student Chaplain at the University of California in September, 1922. He died at Berkeley, Cal., on June 7, 1924, at the age of thirty-one and after three full an dsuccessful years in the ministry.

Miss Margaret Ridgeley, Missionary to Liberia, addressed the executive meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary on Wednesday, November 28. Miss Ridgeley is one of Maryland's own and the Auxiliary gladly welcomed her on her visit home.

Personal Notes

Announcement was made December 7 of the retirement from active ministry of the Rev. Charles L. Fulforth, for thirty-eight years rector of the Church of the Messiah, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Rev. Frank Goostray, rector of the Free Church of St. John, Philadelphia, has resigned to accept the rectorship of Trinity Church, Coatesville, and the Chapel of the Ascension, Parkesburg, Pa. The change will be effective February 1.

The Rev. Herbert Jukes has resigned the rectorship of the Church of the Incarnation, Pittsburgh, Pa., and has accepted a call to the two parishes of Stepney and Spring Hill, Wicomoco County, Md.

The Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, of the Diocese of Virginia, has become a member of the staff of All Saints' Church, Worcester, Mass.

The Rev. Herbert D. Cone has resigned as rector of St. Paul's Church, Clinton, N. C. His new address is 610 North Broadway, Baltimore, Md.

ORDINATIONS.

On November 24 Bishop Murray ordained to the priesthood the Rev. David Henry Croll in St. James' First African Church, Baltimore. The Rev. Dr. H. L. Phillips, Archdeacon of Pennsylvania, preached the sermon, and the Rev. Dr. George F. Bragg, Jr., presented the candidate. The Rev. Mr. Croll will continue teaching in the Junior High School and will also have charge of St. Philip's Church, Annapolis.

The Rev. Charles Pittman and the Rev. Richard S. Martin, deacons, were advanced to the priesthood in the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, New York, on Saturday, November 24, by Bishop Stires. Each will continue in charge of his present work, the former at St. Elizabeth's, Floral Park, and the latter at Trinity Mission, Astoria, New York. The day of the ordination was also the third anniversary of Bishop Stires' consecration to the episcopate.

Monteagle, Tennessee

OFFICE OF REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, D. D., Archdeacon of Sewanee

MONTEAGLE, TENNESSEE, November 8th, 1928.

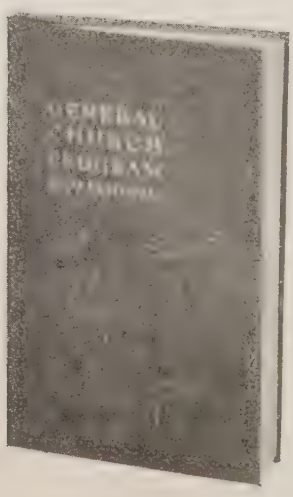
My Dear Friends:

I know you are interested in America, and wish to see our common country take a leading place among the nations of the world. You wish to abolish war and crime, which law has never been able to do. "Law can only stay the assassin's hand until civilization has done its work." Above all, you wish to see our Lord's prayer come true—"Thy Kingdom come on earth as it is in Heaven." How can this be done? is the question uppermost in your mind. Only by producing religious leadership, especially for our rural population. The history of the world unquestionably shows the necessity of producing religious leaders.

The DuBose School is the only school of the kind in America, and is intended to train men especially for rural work—men who have had experience in business, and who need a special training. There is no place in our colleges and seminaries for such men, and our bishops all over America have recommended the work of the School, as shown by their sending men to us to be trained. We have always had more applicants than we could provide for, on account of our limited means. We have no indebtedness, but each year we have to limit our student-body too much, and we are cramped on every hand. Our friends have been good to us, but it does not seem quite fair for a few to carry such a burden, and we have been unable to see the justice in employing a professional agency; it is too expensive, and we do not feel justified in putting a heavier burden on people, so we are taking this means of securing the necessary amount to give the School the chance to serve the country and Church. This amount will not make the School luxurious—that would destroy the idea of the School, but it will simply give us the bare necessities. All of our men are required to do manual labor on our farm, and all the caring-for of the buildings, so our expense is not as great as other schools and seminaries. All the men have to do mission work under the direction of the chaplain. We also have a good hospital.

How are we to do this work without your help, and how can we get you the information by letter? Traveling is very expensive and requires a great deal of time, which might be otherwise used in training the men. Any amount you may feel disposed to give will be greatfully received, from one dollar up. To do this work, the School must have $500,000.00.

Thanking you for any kindness you may show us, I remain,



Yours faithfully,

W. S. CLAIBORNE, Archdeacon,
Monteagle, Tenn.

The GENERAL CHURCH PROGRAM

This is the title of a book published by the National Council of the Episcopal Church. It is not a catchy title. It is not calculated to aid book store sales. It is simply a label for a book that is packed with information that every Churchman needs.

In terse phrase, condensed style, compact form, it brings a vivid picture of what this Church is doing, and where, and how and what it all costs.

It will be read first, because it is intrinsically interesting and readable; then it will be studied because of its down-to-date facts about fields far and near; finally it will become a valued reference book, to be used for the answering of questions and disposing of difficulties as they arise from time to time.

At Washington a clergyman said: "It's the World Almanac of the Church." It is that, and more.

First issued at General Convention. Revised following the Convention. Figures throughout the book are those adopted officially by the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies.

A Christmas Message

By THE REV. DYSON HAGUE, Toronto, Ontario.

There is a fine story told of Lord Tennyson. One day he met an old woman as he was out walking and greeted her with the question, "And what's the news to-day?" And out of the lips of the poor old creature came back the arresting words, that the only news she had worth telling was that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. "Ah," said the great man, with a profound reverence, "that is good news, and it is true news; it is old news, and it is new news." The Christmas news can never grow old. Just think of it. The roar of modern life is stilled; a million hearts are radiant with joy; a million songs of gladness resound; a flood of sympathy and charity sweeps over this cold, hard world of ours; a spirit of forgiveness and unselfishness mellows a million hearts; and all because one day long, long ago a little Baby Boy was born. His coming was heralded by patriarch, psalmist, and prophet. God hung a star in the heavens to tell a waiting world of His Epiphany. The wisdom of the Orient gathered at His cradle. The weary nations hailed the dayspring from on high, and kings the brightness of His rising. But the most wonderful thing by far was that when the angelic armies announced His birth with rapturous song the sons of men were startled by the voice of the angel. "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy." A Baby Boy; yes, only a Babe! A manger in Bethlehem; yes, only a manger cave! But that birth, that day bisected history. The old world died, B. C. A new world began, and throughout the ages till He shall come its time will be A. D. And from that day springs of joy and hope and peace have flowed on with ever-increasing volume, and rays of light have flooded this dark world, because Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. Christmas, Christmas! Hail it with a gladness, you sons of men. Let the children shout with joy, and the mother and father eyes be wet with grateful tears. Let friendship clasp its hands with renewing vows, and charity go forth to feed and clothe our brothers, the poorer members of God's great family. Cease, family quarrels. Stop, open hostilities and veiled neutralities. Knock once more at the old home, you prodigals. Clasp hands once more, ye alienated friends. The brightest day in the year is here, and in the power of the love of the ever-living Christ let sorrow and sighing flee away. O come, all ye faithful, and as you stand with bare heads before the infinite, greet in your hearts the Incarnate God. Vindicate, O Christians, your Christian citizenship by the celebration of a Christian Christmas. Let it not be a Christmas without Christ. Make room for the Christ in your festivals and feasts. Let your gladness be the great joy of Christ-adoring hearts. Carry on, O carry on, ye Christian men, the glory of the day when angel hosts sang, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

This is the sum which must be collected in December by the Dioceses for the work of the General Church in order to balance the budget.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For the maintenance of the work of the General Church in 1928, General Convention approved a Budget of | | $4,212,370 |
| General Convention told the National Council to adjust appropriations yearly to meet expected income. In February, 1928, the National Council reduced appropriations under this "Pay-as-You-Go" Plan by the sum of | | 237,924 |
| This left net appropriations at | | 3,974,446 |
| The National Council estimated that it would be able to save during the year on these appropriations because of vacancies in the staff and other savings, the sum of | | 250,000 |
| This leaves the estimated expenses of the National Council for the year 1928 at | | 3,724,446 |
| Toward these expenses the Council will have from interest on its endowment funds and from the United Thank Offering of the women of the Church an amount estimated at | $702,370 | |
| The Council appropriated to meet the 1928 expenses the surplus of income from 1926 | 62,990 | |
| The Council appropriated to meet the 1928 expenses from unused Contingent Fund of 1926 and 1927 | 80,000 | |
| The Council expects from gifts not applicable to quota and from other sources the sum of | 75,000 | |
| This gives a total of income other than gifts on the quotas of | | 920,360 |
| The Council therefore needs from the Dioceses to meet its estimated expenditures | | 2,804,086 |
| When making reductions in appropriations in February, 1928, the Council provided for an estimated surplus for the year of | | 5,275 |
| There is thus needed from the Dioceses to balance the Budget for 1928 | | $2,809,361 |

Note: This is the exact amount which the Dioceses told the Council it might expect to receive during the year.

|---|---|
| The Dioceses have paid to December 1st | 2,003,578 |

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"O night of nights in Bethlehem; still turn our hearts to you,
Where in the manger-cradle smiled
God's love, forever true!"

Nothing can ruin an enterprise like indifference.

The angel's song takes its rise in the angel's message. A Saviour, Christ the Lord, is the only spring of joy.

"It is said there is light even in darkness. Whether this be true or not, there is some good in the worst of men."

Said Pascal, "The heart hath its reasons," and the chief reason in the Christian's heart for his faith and his hope is not a theory, but a Presence.

The spirit of Christmas must be the spirit of all the year, and this is alone possible when and if the worshippers of Christ make it so in their own lives and extend it by living it.—Episcopal Recorder.

Man needs some higher aid than he can get from his intentions, his aspirations, or from the universal human conscience. He who would "abide" in truth, strength, and purity, must find the secret springs of these in the Most High.—George A. Gordon.

The idea that God could and would tabernacle with men had haunted seer and prophet for centuries before Christ came. "I will be with thee"; "Certainly I will be with thee"; "Fear not, for I am with thee," were promises that haunted men's hearts like a song of home in the wilderness journey of life. Then He came and the promise was fulfilled—He was called "Emmanuel, which, being interpreted, is God with us."

The first step that separated brethren should take towards reformation and revival is to get together. Members of the same family or church or nation that are divided through alienation and strife need expect no blessing; the same state of heart that separates them from one another will also separate them from God. Let them come together in unity and peace, and the same spirit that draws them together will draw them to their common Father.

Except the Christ be born again tonight
In dreams of all men, saints and sons of shame
The world will never see His Kingdom bright.

—Vachel Lindsay.

Advent is here, and Christmas will soon be ushered in. May we urge all of our good Church people, not only to join the Sensible Christmas League, but also to make this pledge: "I promise to draw near and worship the Christ Child on His Day in His Church, and to try and become more child-like myself, to gain more peace and good will, and thus learn how to recapture the holy joy which the angels of God and the shepherds and the wise men had on that first Christmas morning."—Oregon Trail Churchman.

Light of Light
Son of the Highest

Let any of us who think we have imaginative faculty and skill in writing try, with all our capacity for thought and concentration, to invent and put in words something like the narrative of the Annunciation of the Redeemer in the second chapter of Luke. Then search all literature, ancient and modern, poetry and prose, history, mythology, fiction, treatise, for an approach to it. The search will be vain. No one of the brilliant, soaring, searching imaginations of the great writers, thinkers or dreamers, has conceived a picture so beautiful, so wonderful, so magnificent, as that told in less than two hundred simple, terse words by a faithful disciple describing what he knew.

Here were shepherds abiding in their fields, watching their sheep—plain, humble, poor men, guarding by courage and vigilance harmless, defenseless, useful creatures from fierce strength and ravening ferocity. To these lowly people, keeping their vigil in silence and darkness —not to the mighty and lordly of the earth in palace or stately temple—the glory of the Lord shone and the angel of the Lord spoke. In that lonely, remote, place he proclaimed to patient humility the glad tidings of great joy for mankind through all the coming ages and generations. Then came suddenly the multitude of the heavenly hosts, chanting amid the dimmed stars the message of peace and good will and redemption for all humanity, brought by the newborn baby in a manger in the city of David.

No merely human craft or artistry ever has given to minds so exquisitely, so vividly, the long shaft of the light of the supreme valor and heroism of humble submission to God and self-sacrifice for man, extending backward through two thousand of years of vicissitudes and sin and penitence and restoration, the rising and falling of nations and powers, as the line "because He was of the house and lineage of David."

That guides thought and memory along a shining and glorious path far beyond David! Abraham, going into the wilderness, ready to slay the loved son of his age, in obedience to the command of the Almighty; Joseph, taken from the pit where envy and malice had cast him, to be benefactor for the nation that enslaved him and to the brothers who had wronged him so cruelly; Moses, born to persecution and danger, forsaken, rescued to face the greatest of then living kings and demand freedom for Israel and to bring from the heights of Sinai the Commandments; David, shepherd boy, unarmored, with five smooth stones from the brook, dauntlessly confronting the boastful giant who defied the living God. Straight through the long centuries the radiant gleam of continuity of courage, of submission to the Creator and service and self-sacrifice for Him and His creatures, from patriarch and prince, statesman and great leader, dominant warrior and monarch and immortal poet, attained its supreme glory in the stable of the Inn at Bethlehem, was manifest to the obscure and unconsidered watchers of the night; from manger and plain to live in eternity. It is brought before us by the few words. It has come to us through nearly twenty centuries. At the Christmas season is the special time of the year for us to absorb that light into our hearts and souls, to let it shine forth from us in word and deed and purpose and hope.

In that light every mean and covetous, envious and repining impulse should perish. In its purity and beauty bitterness and harshness and evil intent should be forever banished. With it we may gather, by the high valor of honest confession and earnest penitence, from the black darkness of remorse for wrongs done the warm rapture of assured pardon. By its old sorrows may be made inspirations to sweeter living and thinking and nobler endeavor.

Looking back on the Christmas times through which we have lived, be they many or few, most of us find in some of them sadness and occasion for self reproach and keen regret. Neglects; sins; follies; misjudgments; ill temper, disappointments; ingratitudes of others to us, of ourselves to others. Few of us—perhaps none of us—can see a straight shaft of the Christmas light of courage, of allegiance to God, of faithful good will and love and service to mankind, from the Christmas times gone by to this on which we enter now. Too many of us have shut our hearts against the light that concentrated at the manger and shone above the plain and that all of us may share if we will but seek and invite and welcome it. The past Christmas times are gone. Let their mistakes and faults go with them. We may not know how many we are to see. The present Christmas is ours to use as we will, to help toward light and gladness for others and ourselves, to make for the future light and beauty and happy and pleasant memories, or to give gloom and discord and bitterness to live and sting in the after years.

To be generous we do not need to be rich. To be loving and thoughtful and kindly and abundant with the light and love and hope of Christmas we do not need to be in exalted or influential stations. Let us give as we can, with thought and love, shunning ostentation and extravagance and the ignoble spirit of saving or grudging, remembering always those most in need; and receive gratefully and happily. Let us strive faithfully against all temptations and inclinations to greed and selfishness. Putting aside those things that are behind, let us try with all our souls to feel and give the light that has been given; to join with full and fervent hearts the great proclamation that resounded from the skies—"Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace and good will among men."

Alfred B. Williams.

The Greatest of All Miracles

By Bishop Warren A. Candler

ON Christmas Day the Christian world celebrates the greatest of all miracles.

Whether the date is, or is not, the correct anniversary of the birth of our Lord is a matter of minor importance. The supreme matter is that "the Word was made flesh and dwelt" among men, and that fact is celebrated annually throughout all Christendom.

The Incarnation of the Son of God outranks all other miracles and makes more than credible—makes probable—every other wonderful work wrought by Him in the days of His flesh. If the fact of the Incarnation be admitted, all else recorded concerning him by the inspired evangelists becomes most natural and is no more than what might be expected to accompany and follow so transcendent an event. If it be denied all else that they affirm about Him becomes incomprehensible and incredible; there is no longer any Gospel at all, and all controversy about the possibility and credibility of miracles ceases to be anything more than a mere war of words.

Over a birth by which such an event as the Incarnation came to pass angelic hosts might well unite in ecstatic praises and obeisant stars bend in sublime homage over the spot on earth where it began to be.

It is not surprising that the saints of all ages have dwelt joyously upon the birth of Jesus—their, and our, "Emmanuel", which "being interpreted is God with us" (Matthew 1:23).

The Incarnation implies the pre-existence of our Lord, who as the Eternal Son from the beginning had shared the divine glory, and who voluntarily became also the Son of Man; and this amazing act of love is the model and inspiration of the Christian mind. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus; who being in the form of God, grasped not at equality with God as for a prize, but made himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men, and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father" (Philippians 2:5-11).

The height of his exaltation is commensurate with the depth of his humiliation; and by His Incarnation is accomplished "glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14). Jesus, the Christ, is the only being who ever voluntarily chose to be born into our world; and His Incarnation was God becoming man "for us men and for our salvation". His life on the earth was the human life of God among men.

The Incarnation differs from all forms of apotheosis, which godless nations have devised; for it is not the deification of a man, but the humanification of the only God. Dr. Fairbairn has put this truth clearly and forcibly: "The Incarnation may be said to be the counterpart in the field of history of the God-head in the field of thought. Through the God-head we conceive the deity as so existing and conditioned that the Incarnation is possible; through the Incarnation we conceive an historical Person as so placed that he realizes the affinities of God and man, and so constituted that he brings them into organic relations. God conceived as God-head is a Being with life in Himself, communicable and law in process of communication; Christ conceived as the Incarnate Son is a Person so possessed of the communicable life of God as to be the inexhaustible medium of communication to man."

Jesus Christ became the Son of Man that every man might have the privilege of becoming a son of God.

Thus to men He brings and offers the highest type of blessedness, even the blessed divine life. The Incarnate Saviour is, therefore, not only the revelation of God, but the communication of the divine quality of life to human souls, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises that by these we may be partakers of the divine nature" (2 Peter 1:4).

To as many as receive Him to them gives He power to become the sons of God, even to them which believe on His name; for "in Him is life, and the life is the light of men" (John 1:1-14).

In the light of these celestial consequences of the Incarnation the Gospel is most truly, "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people" (Luke 2:10).

The new birth in human souls, made possible through our Incarnate Redeemer, is as wonderful as the Virgin Birth of Jesus. It is the ever-recurring miracle of the life-giving power of God—the miracle which is called by St. John passing from "death unto life" (2 John 3:14), and by St. Paul God's deliverance of men "from the power of darkness" and His translation of them into "the Kingdom of His dear Son" (Colossians 1:13).

In view of the amazing fact of the Incarnation and the blessed consequences of life which issue from it, all the objections to the Virgin Birth of Jesus as an incredible "biological miracle" seem to be pitiful pettifogging. The Incarnation by any process whatsoever would be a stupendous miracle. The essential difficulty is not to believe in the Virgin Birth as the supernatural assumption of human nature by Jesus Christ or His resurrection by which that human nature is eternalized, but it is to believe in any Incarnation at all. By the help of divine grace alone are men enabled through faith to believe that the august Creator of heaven and earth has humbled Himself to become a man in the Person of the Babe of Bethlehem, to live among men in a poverty deeper than that of the foxes of the forest and the birds of the air, and to die upon the Cross to make "propitiation for the sins of the whole world" (1 John 2:2).

When this belief is accepted all other miracles including the Virgin Birth, seem almost, if not quite, natural and inevitable events.

Faith in the Incarnation must be accepted finally and fully, with all the miraculous events that arise from it, or it must be denied flatly, and the historic Christianity of which it is the greatest miracle rejected altogether.

From such ghastly infidelity and hopeless doubt let us turn away, and with the worshipful shepherds "go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us" (Luke 2:15).

From this brightest and best beam that ever fell from Heaven upon our sin-stricken race, we can not turn away to the darkness and despair of benighted scepticism or agnostic scholasticism. To the feet of Him rather will we be led by the guiding Star in the Heavens, and worship with the Wise Men from the East and there bestow our richest gifts upon Him.

"Brightest and best of the sons of the morning,
Dawn on our darkness, and lend us thine aid;
Star of the East, the horizon adorning,
Guide where our infant Redeemer is laid.

"Cold on His cradle the dew-drops are shining,
Low lies His head with the beasts of the stall;
Angels adore Him in slumber reclining,
Maker and Monarch and Saviour of all.

"Shall we not yield Him, in costly devotion,
Odors of Edom, and offerings divine,
Gems of the mountain, and pearls of the ocean,
Myrrh from the forest, and gold from the mine?

"Vainly we offer each ample oblation,
Vainly with gifts would His favor secure;
Richer by far is the heart's adoration,
Dearer to God are the prayers of the poor.

"Brightest and best of the sons of the morning,
Dawn on our darkness, and lend us thine aid;
Star of the East, the horizon adorning,
Guide where our infant Redeemer is laid."

"All hail the power of Jesus Name,
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the Royal diadem
And crown Him Lord of All."

What Happens at Calvary Church in the City of New York

By P. E. E.

A Member of the Staff.

CALVARY CHURCH is on Gramercy Park, which retains an air of rest in spite of the trucks passing along its north side. Two blocks away, past a wet wash laundry and under the thundering "L", stands Calvary Mission. In the street and on the one step which raises it above the side-walk you will find men standing and sitting, beaten, like you and me, unless we have the power of God in our lives, but more cognizant of the fact than most of us, because they have lost the temporal supports of self-respect, home, health and money.

Two and a half years ago, Harry Hadley, on a vacation from his evangelical work in the Episcopal Church, walked down Twenty-third Street, and saw the present mission building, which had been an east side chapel, standing empty. He turned to his wife, who was walking with him, and said, "That would be a fine place for a rescue mission".

A fellow worker introduced him to Mr. Shoemaker, who had just come to Calvary as rector, and found that he had been praying ever since taking up his new duties, that Calvary might have a rescue mission. They were convinced that it was God's leading that had brought them together and equally convinced, through experience and faith in the future, that where God guides, He provides.

On February 1, 1926, the doors were thrown open for the first meeting, with Harry Hadley on the platform, his good wife beside him at the piano, and Sam Alcorn, a hearty septugenarian who had been converted through Harry's father, Sam Hadley, at the door. They knew what a batttle it would be, the first rescue mission ever set up in the Bellevue gas house district, six speak-easies in the block, and the sneers of the beaten and the sophisticated alike, but they had faith. The doors have been open and a meeting has been held every night, winter and summer, since the opening. Harry says, "Come as you are and let Christ clean you up and save you from the awful death of sin".

There is an electric lighted cross over the street door and a simple wooden cross against the back wall. There are promises made by Jesus printed on the walls. There are hymn books and there are wooden benches where men tired in body, mind and heart can sink to listen to new hope. They come in, some of them drunk and cursing, others subdued unto death by the eternal racket of meaningless life. It was difficult at first subduing the drunkards, it is always difficult enlivening the ghastly subdued. They are dirty, most of them, filthy under their shirts, minds frazzled, hearts pained by sudden memories or steeled almost beyond pain. They are the litter of life, apparently, and yet out of them has come one of the most wonderful brotherhoods in Christian history. Out of them has come a small group who are functioning because they learned the truth of what Harry said over and over again, "Not Hadley, boys, but Christ".

There is Fred, small, wiry ex-thief, ex-convict, ex-renegade, who came from his twenty-first term in prison to Calvary Mission. There is Larry, whose old friend Fred saw coming down Twenty-third Street soon after Fred's conversion, almost dead, dragging himself to the Bellevue Hospital alcoholic ward for another hopeless try to shake off the evil habit. There is Bill, the cook, who has managed hotels, who has tended bar all over the country and who foundered on his own concoctions. There is young Frank W. and Jim and the others who every night, thank God, in the Mission for what He has done for them.

Now, it is one thing to be converted, but Harry Hadley saw that it must not be a static thing, a mere flop over from the death of sin to the near-death of ineffective goodness. A friend of Harry's, who works with kings and queens and valets and hoboes, too, has said that a faith which is not a propagating faith is not really of Christ. Harry believes that and he knew that these men, once won, had the possibilities of the twelve in the Gospels. So, soon after the mission had got under way, he began to pray and work for a home for them where they could live in brotherhood together and grow in the boundless new life opened up to them and work to win others.

He soon found that he could have the old bare room above the Mission. He asked for twenty beds, fully equipped, with a steel locker beside each. A woman of wealth who had been tremendously moved by attending some of the meetings, subscribed the funds for ten of them. Others soon subscribed for the other ten. A stove came from somewhere, on which Bill cooks breakfast and dinner for the brotherhood, breakfast before they go out to their new jobs which in the old life they had not the health nor heart to hold, dinner before they go down to the evening meetings to testify to the new power of Christ in their lives. The expenses of the Brotherhood are small, and they are met by the men out of their earnings.

While they sing the hymns and pray and testify, their eyes are on the men in the meeting who have not found what they have. They are learning together and with Harry, through the Bible and prayer and actual experience, how to win other men to Christ.

The Brotherhood is growing. New men are coming, first to thank God for saving them from sin and drink for twenty-four hours, then for seven days, then a month, and so on, with new victories beyond the more obvious sins. Seven men in the Brotherhood have celebrated their first anniversary of the joyous Christian life, two have passed their second birthday.

They come en masse to Calvary Church on Sunday morning and sit there drinking in the depths of the service, with "Dad" and "Ma" Hadley sitting in their midst. They have sent volunteers to testify at the missions held twice a year in the church. They have talked at our outdoor services in Madison Square alongside college graduates and Park Avenueites and other "ups and outs", and have sent them searching their experience for reality and humble gratitude with their ringing testimonies. Mr. Shoemaker took one of them with a Calvary group last spring to another city, where he had tended bar for several years, to stand in a fashionable church and set the congregation by its ears with a simple message of the power that had come into his life. He had prayed on the train going down, "O God, fill my mouth and I'll open it", which is enough for any of us.

The Brotherhood and the Mission are the best things imaginable for the others of us at Calvary. When one of the staff begins to get a little tired or a little vague from talking to too many university graduates or others of our delightful so-called upper classes, the general prescription, sometimes now administered by himself, is "Go to the Mission". He steps from his dreams or his fears or his pride into the white light of reality at the Mission where Christ works to win men who know their need. The Brotherhood, founded to save down-and-outs and give them a Friend and friends, has added us, who know it, to its fellowship.

Favorite Scripture Verse

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Miss Mary E. Birckhead, of Proffit, Virginia:

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (St. John 8:32).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

A Great Event

The Reverend W. Lamb

St. Thomas Street, Waverly, Sydney, Australia.

JUST a word concerning the greatest crisis the world has ever known. This impending crash of things was long ago foretold. Already, the shadows of definitely predicted events pervade the whole of human experience. For mighty movements now shake terribly the entire fabric of life. Everywhere the old order of things is rapidly falling to pieces. Thrones and governments have been passionately swept aside. Ancient aristocracies have crashed to the dust. Socialistic aspiration has found unique opportunity of expression, but the only result is heart-breaking failure.

As Jesus Christ said would be, there is everywhere, "distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth".

Social Conditions Appall.

The unfolding pages of daily experience increasingly is stained with shocking crime. In every land murder, suicide, divorce, insanity and other dreadful things rapidly increase. To stem the inflowing tide of evil, organized religion is helpless. For only one in ten of the people ever go to any church. Preachers and theologians are found actually discrediting the Bible, so that the anti-Christian cult is now the vogue, while the real message of God's Son has but scant attention from men. The drift from the old standards of faith is well-nigh universal.

The Question.

How will it all end? You may consider my picture of contemporary events darker than is necessary. But I am only asking you to think right through to the end of the problem. Optimistic people say the terrible things now happening are the birth pangs of a new age, and that soon brighter conditions will come for everybody. But how? Until recently it was claimed that education and political achievement would bring the world into happiness. However, it is now frankly recognized that not our laws, institutions, or national and international machinery are at fault. It is human nature itself that is defective. How then is the change to come?

The Answer

is found in the Bible. There the end of everything is seen from the beginning. You may not before have known that thousands of years ago the Old Book affirmed that world conditions would now be as we know them. In simple words Jesus Christ plainly said, "When ye shall see all these things, know that He is near, even at the door".

The Great Event.

The Son of God, who nineteen hundred years ago died on Calvary for our sins, is to come again. Nothing else has clearer expression in the Bible. He said Himself He would return: "I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

The world that rejects Him "shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory".

"As the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." That is, suddenly.

When Christ had vanished into the heavens from His disciples, two heavenly messengers said: "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into Heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11).

Later on we are told how "The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God" (1 Thess. 4:16). So then Christ is coming again to this world.

But When?

Probably very soon now. Regarding its uncertainty, as to the actual day, the Lord said: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." But that they should know about the time He has plainly answered: "When ye shall see all these things, know that He is near, even at the doors." While later Paul wrote: "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." So then, by certain things happening, we should at least know when the personal return of Christ is at hand.

The Signs.

The things that would happen are plainly stated in order to impel watchfulness. The mention of just ten of these God-given signs will show they are all now in fullest operation: (1) "In the time of the end many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased." (2) The restoration of Jewish nationality: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled." (3) Increasing wickedness: "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." (4) Universal upheaval: "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places." (5) A definite awakening regarding the Second Advent: "At midnight there was a cry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him." (6) A false confidence: "When they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." (7) Times of spiritual peril: "In the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves . . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having the form of godliness but denying the power thereof." (8) Rationalism concerning the Bible: "They shall turn away their ears from the Truth, and shall be turned unto fables." (9) Spiritualism: "The Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits." (10) Red revolution: "Ye rich men, howl and weep for the miseries that are coming upon you. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." If you read up James 5 you will find this world upheaval happens, just as the coming of the Lord is drawing nigh.

By these things happening, Christ said we should know Him to be at the doors. They all everywhere operate now. Then, surely, He is near.

Why Given?

That we may know about the time when. That we may be ready. For what? "Therefore, be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." Why? What does it mean? Simply that we are either ready or we are not ready. The Bible everywhere shows that if we are ready the moment of Christ's return we shall enter into His eternal glory. But on those who are not ready will come fearful Divine judgment. It is simply stated how it will be for the unprepared: "As a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Those who have not obeyed "the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the power of His glory."

From all these Scriptures you must surely recognize that there can be nothing of greater importance than for you to be ready the moment Christ returns. But we can only be sure of that by being ready now. "For in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." The signs are ominous. The great event seems right at hand. Oh, my friend, do not resent my question: Are you ready? You may be as good as any one else you know, but not ready. God's Word says: "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified." There is no difference, for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God. You may be a member of some church—Protestant or Catholic. That is not enough. "For all have sinned." It is quite possible your sin is greater than you care now to think about. There is no difference. "God hath set forth Jesus Christ to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past." That is the Gospel for you, "faith in His blood". Christ died for you. We are justified by faith. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Now, my friend. As a definite act of faith, kneel humbly before your Maker. Tell Him of your sin. Accept His forgiveness. The old hymn can be your prayer to God—

"Just as I am, without one plea
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come."

In that way you are accepted by God. You are forgiven. Believe it true. From now on, you have eternal life. "He that heareth My Word and believeth Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and cometh not into judgment. "The gift of God is eternal life." A gift only has to be accepted. Receive Christ and you receive eternal life. For in Him is life.

Then you and I shall meet with Christ the moment He comes for His own. Behold, He comes!

Robert E. Lee

By the Late John W. Daniel, LL. D.

LEE DEVOTES HIS SWORD TO HIS NATIVE STATE.

BIDDING an affectionate adieu to his old friends and commander, General Scott, who mourned his loss, but nobly expressed his confidence in his motives, he repaired to Richmond. General John Letcher immediately appointed him to the commander-in-chief of the Virginia forces, and the Convention unanimously confirmed the nomination. Memorable and impressive was the scene when he came into the presence of that body on April 23. Its venerable President, John Janney, with brief sententious eloquence, addressed him, and concluded, saying:

"Sir, we have by this unanimous vote expressed our conviction that you are at this day, among the living citizens of Virginia, 'first in war'. We pray to God most fervently that you may so conduct the operations committed to your charge, that it may be said of you that you are 'first in peace', and when that time comes, you will have earned the still prouder distinction of being 'first in the hearts of your countrymen'.

"Yesterday your mother, Virginia, placed her sword in your hand upon the implied condition that we know you will keep in letter and in spirit: that you will draw it only in defence, and that you will fall with it in your hand rather than the object for which it was placed there should fail."

General Lee thus answered:

"Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention:

"Profoundly impressed with the solemnity of the occasion, for which I must say I was not prepared, I accept the position assigned me by your partiality. I would have preferred had your choice fallen upon an abler man. Trusting in Almighty God, an approving conscience, and the aid of my fellow-citizens, I devote myself to the service of my native State, in whose behalf alone will I ever again draw my sword."

Thus came Robert E. Lee to the State of his birth and to the people of his blood in their hour of need! Thus, with as chaste a heart as ever plighted its faith until death, for better or for worse, he came to do, to suffer, and to die for us, who today are gathered in awful reverence, and in sorrow unspeakable, to weep our blessings upon his tomb.

Lee's Vindication—A People Is Its Own Judge.

I pause not here to defend the course of General Lee, as that defence may be drawn from the Constitution of a Republic which was born in the sublime protest of its people against bayonet rule, and founded on the bed-rock principle of free government, that all free governments "must derive their just powers from the consent of the governed". I pause not to trace the history or define the grounds of that theory of constitutional construction which maintained the right of secession from the Union as an element of sovereign statehood—a theory which has found ablest and noblest advocacy in every section of the country. The tribunal is not yet formed that would hearken to such defence, nor is this the time or place to utter it. And to my mind there is for Lee and his compatriots a loftier and truer vindication than any that may be deduced from codes, constitutions, and conventional articles of government. A great revolution need never apologize for nor explain itself. There it is!—the august and thrilling rise of a whole population! And the fact that it is there is the best evidence of its right to be there. None but great inspirations underlie great actions. None but great causes can ever produce great events. A transient gust of passion may turn a crowd into a mob—a temporary impulse may swell a mob into a local insurrection; but when a whole people stand to their guns before their hearthstones, and as one man resist what they deem aggression; when for long years they endure poverty and starvation, and dare danger and death to maintain principles which they deem sacred—when they shake a continent with their heroic endeavors and fill the world with the glory of their achievements, history can make for them no higher vindication than to point to their deeds and say—"Behold!"

A people is its own judge. Under God there can be no higher judge for them to seek or court or fear. In the supreme moments of national life, as in the lives of individuals, the actor must resolve and act within himself alone. The Southern States acted for themselves—the Northern States for themselves—Virginia for herself. And when the lines of battle formed, Robert Lee took his place in the line beside his people, his kindred, his children, his home. Let his defence rest on this fact alone. Nature speaks it. Nothing can strengthen it. Nothing can weaken it. The historian may compile; the casuist may dissect; the statesman may expatiate; the advocate may plead; the jurist may expound; but, after all, there can be no stronger or tenderer tie than that which binds the faithful heart to kindred and to home. And on that tie—stretching from the cradle to the grave, spanning the heavens, and riveted through eternity to the throne of God on high, and underneath in the souls of good men and true—on that tie rests, stainless and immortal, the fame of Robert Lee.

Lee's Early Service in the Confederate War.

And now that war was flagrant, history delights to testify how grandly General Lee bore his part. Transferred from the State service to that of the Confederacy, with the rank of General, we behold him at first in the field in the rugged mountains of Northwest Virginia, restoring the morale lost by the early reverses to our arms in that Department—holding invading columns in check with great disparity of force to meet them—bearing the censures of the impatient without a murmur, and careless of fame with duty alone. Later, in the fall of 1861, we find him exercising his skill as an engineer in planning defences along the threatened coast of South Carolina; and in March, 1862, he is again in Virginia, charged by President Davis "with the conduct of military operations in the armies of the Confederacy"—in brief, and in some sort, under the President, Commander-in-Chief.

But now a year of war had rolled by; no brilliant accomplishment had yet satisfied the public expectation with which he had been welcomed as a Southern leader; and as the fame of revolutionary Captains can only be fed with victories, it is unquestionable that, at this stage of his career, the reputation of Lee, as a General, had sensibly declined.

The Fall of General Joseph E. Johnston and the Opportunity of Lee.

Meanwhile the Army of Northern Virginia had made a name in history under its famous commander, Joseph E. Johnston; and I cannot speak that name without bowing the homage of my heart to the illustrious soldier and noble gentleman who bears it. Under his sagacious and brilliant leadership, his forces had been suddenly withdrawn from Patterson's front near Winchester, and united with those of General Beauregard, at Manassas; and there, led by these two Generals, the joint command had, on July 21, 1861, routed the Army of the Potomac in the first pitched battle of the war; had given earnest of what the volunteers of the South could do in action, and had crowned the new-born Confederacy with the glory of splendid military achievement. Still later in the progress of events, Johnston had exhibited again his strategic skill in holding McClellan at bay on the lines of Yorktown, with a force so small that it seemed hardihood to oppose him with it—had eluded his toils by a retreat up the Peninsula, so cleanly conducted, that little was lost beyond the space vacated*—had turned and fiercely smitten his advancing columns near the old Colonial Capital of Williamsburg on May 5, 1862, and had planted his army firmly around Richmond. Pending the siege of Yorktown, a thing had happened that probably had no parallel in history. The great body of General Johnston's army had reorganized itself under the laws of the Confederacy, while lying under the fire of the enemy's guns, the privates of each company electing by ballot the officers that were to command them. A singular exercise of suffrage was this, but there was "a free ballot and a fair count", and an exhibition worthy of "That fierce Democracy that thundered over Greece

To Macedon and Artaxerxes' throne", an exhibition which would have delighted the heart of Thomas Jefferson, and which certainly put to blush the autocratic theory that armies should be mere compact masses of brute force. Still later, on May 31, Johnston had sallied forth and stormed and taken the outer entrenchments and campus of McClellan's army at Seven Pines, capturing ten pieces of artillery, six thousand muskets, and other spoils of war, and destroying the prestige of the second "On to Richmond" movement.

But ere the day was done victory had been checked, and glory had exacted costly tribute, for Johnston himself had fallen, terribly wounded. The hero, covered with ten wounds received in Florida and Mexico, had been prostrated by another; and when June 1 dawned on the confronting armies, the Army of Northern Virginia was without the leader who held its thorough confidence, but now lay stricken well-nigh unto death. The casualty which thus deprived the army of its honored commander, and closed to him the opportunity, which, in large measure, his own great skill had created, opened the opportunity of Lee. Fortunate the State, and great the people from whom spring two such sons—fortunate the army that always had a leader worthy of it—happy he who can transmit his place to one so well qualified to fill it—and happy likewise he who had such predecessor to prepare the way for victory.

*Note.—The Philadelphia Times of September 4, 1883, contained an article from the pen of Allan B. Magruder, Esq., brother of the late distinguished Confederate Officer, Major-General John Bankhead Magruder, in which the writer takes exception to this statement of my address. He says that to General Magruder belongs the credit of the "strategic skill" which held McClellan at bay on the lines of Yorktown; that General Johnston never commanded on those lines; and that the Army of Northern Virginia never fired a shot in their defence.

The high character and standing of the writer, and my great respect for the memory of General Magruder, to whom I would do all honor, induce me to notice this article here. I do not deny that General Magruder did, before the arrival of General Johnston, defend the lines of Yorktown with wonderful address and boldness, and is entitled to high praise for the ability and courage displayed in so doing. Yet there can be no doubt that General Johnston did command the army defending the Yorktown lines; and that his army fired many a shot in their defence. This is attested by all the official records. That there can be no mistake about it, I am myself a witness, for I marched from Centreville to Richmond, and there took steamer for the "lines of Yorktown" with General Johnston's forces; lay with them there in the trenches for weeks, and saw and heard the firing of many a shot from cannon, rifle, and musket in their defence. And under command of General Johnston, whom I personally saw on the field, I marched with his troops on the retreat from Yorktown, and participated in the battle of Williamsburg, May 5, 1862, with the advancing forces of McClellan.

The fact is Mr. Magruder has fallen into what is to me, a strange and unaccountable error, as he will discover on reading any history of the events referred to. I have before me McCabe's Life of Lee, and General Joseph E. Johnston's work, entitled "Johnston's Narrative", and they confirm the accuracy of the statements upon which my remarks are based. The credit given General Johnston is due him; but it in no wise detracts from that likewise due General Magruder, for his anterior exploits of a like nature.—J. W. D.

General Lee in Command of the Army of Northern Virginia—Richmond, Manassas, Harper's Ferry, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg.

On the third of June, 1862, General Lee was assigned to command in person the Army of Northern Virginia; and from that day to April 9, 1865, nearly three years, he was at its head. And on the page of history now laid open are crowded schemes of war and feats of arms as brilliant as ever thrilled the souls of heroism and genius with admiration—a page of history that feasted glory till pity cried, "no more". Swift was Lee to plan, and swift to execute. Making a feint of reinforcing Jackson in the Valley, startling the Federal authorities with apprehension of attack on the Potomac lines, and practically eliminating McDowell, who, with his corps, remains near Fredericksburg, he suddenly descends with Jackson on the right and rear of McClellan, and ere thirty days have passed since he assumed command, Richmond has been saved, and the fields around her made immortal; and the broken ranks of McClellan are crouching for protection under the heavy guns of the iron-clads at Harrison's Landing. Sixty days more, and the siege of Richmond has been raised—the Confederate columns are marching Northward; Jackson in the advance, has on August 9 caught up again with his old friend, Banks, at Slaughter's Mountain, and punished him terribly, and as the day closes August 30, Manassas has the second time been the scene of a general engagement with like results as the first. John Pope, who thitherto, according to his pompous boast, had "seen only the backs of his enemies", has had his curiosity entirely satisfied with a brief glimpse of their faces; and the proud army of the Potomac is flying in hot haste to find shelter in the entrenchments of Washington. In early September the Confederates are in Maryland. In extreme exigency, McClellan is recalled to command the Army of the Potomac, but while Lee holds him in check at Boonsboro and South Mountain, a series of complicated maneuvers have invested General Miles, the officer in command at Harper's Ferry, and on September 15, Stonewall Jackson has there received surrender of his entire army of eleven thousand men, seventy-three cannon, thirteen thousand small arms, two hundred wagons, and many stores. But there is no time to rest, for McClellan presses Lee at Sharpsburg, and there, September 17, battle is delivered. Upon its eve Jackson has arrived fresh from Harper's Ferry. McClellan's repeated assaults on Lee were everywhere repulsed. He remained on the field September 18, and then recrossed the Potomac into Virginia.

The winter of 1862 comes, and Burnside, succeeding McClellan, assails Lee at Fredericksburg on December 13, and is repulsed with terrible slaughter.

Christmas and St. Luke's

"Christmas is almost here!"

How frequently this exclamation is on the lips of everybody at this season, sometimes in a tone of anticipation, sometimes in a tone of slight dismay at the thought of Christmas shopping yet undone!

This festival, when gifts are bestowed upon friends and loved ones in commemoration of that holy day when the Wise Men brought gifts to the Manger, is the most beautiful of the whole year, as it is the most significant. Amid the bustle which accompanies the modern preparation for this holiday it is natural, perhaps, that few pause to give thought to the deeper significance of Christmas and to the obligations implied by the approach of this season.

Certainly there is no time of the year when it would be more fitting to give thought to some of the great enterprises of Christianity. In this season more than at any other, perhaps, a consideration of the magnificent service St. Luke's International Hospital is rendering in behalf of Christianity would be most timely. This service is twofold. In alleviating bodily ills the Hospital achieves one purpose, and by this act leads those who come under its influence to follow the precepts of Christianity.

The Christian spirit of self-sacrifice which animates the members of the staff of St. Luke's has often been referred to. Recently there has come to the attention of the American Executive Committee a copy of an article by George Marvin in The Outlook for June 18, 1924, which illustrates the spirit of the individuals on the Hospital's staff so strikingly that it seems worth while to quote the story just as Mr. Marvin relates it:

"During the week when the exclusion act was passed a Japanese trained nurse from St. Luke's Hospital in Tokyo was called on an emergency case to help drag to life the wreck of an American. She was a highly educated woman who had been round the world, lived in Cambridge, England, two years, and had served in the Red Cross unit at Vladivostok during the war. When the earthquake hit St. Luke's, she carried patients on her back out of the toppling building to a place of safety. Some of them were men patients heavier than she. Not one of her own belongings was saved; she lost them all because she never thought to go for them. The patients had to be cared for and shifted from place to place as the fire made each refuge untenable. Many fell by the wayside. She carried on through to the finish. Every day she read her papers in English and Japanese. And here was an object that only by a stretch of the imagination could be called a man—unshaven, tousled, dirty and reeking of manifold iniquity—who taxed even her patience and her great strength. Through the long night she nursed him sleeplessly. And when at dawn he roused at last from his delirium of pain, his first conscious vision beheld her kneeling at his bedside praying for him."

Such devotion is the rule at St. Luke's. Surely it should prove an inspiration to those who, though not privileged to have a part in carrying on this great work as doctors or nurses, can help in other ways to insure its continuance and expansion.—International Hospital News.

I SAMUEL.

THE men of Israel, in all the strength of their own will and wisdom, had utterly failed to enter into the possession of their God-given inheritance, therefore God manifested His abounding grace by bringing the little child Samuel into His Sanctuary where He could speak to and through him as a prophet, and thus reveal God's will and wisdom concerning Israel's enjoyment of His blessings.

The name of the child and of this book means "asked of God", telling us how God waits upon the prayers of His people for the fulfillment of His gracious purposes (Isa. 64:4 R. V.; Ezek. 36:37; Rev. 8:1-3).

Subject.

The Subject of the book of 1 Samuel is God's dealings with Israel, through the priest Eli, the prophet Samuel, and the king Saul, to cause His people to possess the promised land, and be made a blessing to the nations.

1. Chs. 1-2. The grace of God manifest toward Israel in the birth of the child Samuel, seeing that the priesthood had become corrupt.

2. Chs. 3-4. God's love for Israel revealed in speaking to and through the child-prophet, and His righteous government manifest in judging the house of Eli.

3. Chs. 5-6. God's glory departed from Israel and the holiness of His throne vindicated by wrath upon his enemies.

4. Chs. 7-8. God's blessing upon Israel through the faithful ministry of the Prophet Samuel, and their sin of asking for a king.

5. Chs. 9-15. The selection, failure, and rejection of Saul, Israel's choice of a king.

6. Chs. 16-30. David, "the man after God's own heart", anointed as king, victorious over Goliath, and exiled from home and throne.

7. Ch. 31. The wretched death of Saul and his sons, even of Jonathan, whose heart was true to David, but outwardly he was with Saul.

SUNDAY EVENING.

O ALMIGHTY GOD, who hast built Thy Church upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone; grant that by the operation of the Holy Ghost, all Christians may be so joined together in unity of spirit, and in the bond of peace, that they may be an holy temple acceptable unto Thee. And especially to us here present, give the abundance of Thy grace; that with one heart we may desire the prosperity of Thy Holy Church, and with one mouth may profess the faith once delivered to the saints. Defend us from the sins of heresy and schism; let not the foot of pride come nigh to hurt us nor the hand of the ungodly to cast us down. And grant that the course of this world may be so peaceably ordered by Thy governance, that Thy Church may joyfully serve Thee in all godly quietness, that so we may walk in the ways of truth and peace, and at last be numbered with Thy saints in glory everlasting, through Thy merits, O Blessed Jesus, Thou gracious Bishop and Shepherd of our souls, who art with the Father and the Holy Ghost one God world without end. Amen.

Lord, we beseech Thee to keep Thy household, the Church, in continual godliness; that through Thy protection it may be free from all adversities, and devoutly given to serve Thee in good works, to the glory of Thy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Almighty and everliving God, who makest us both to will and do those things which are good and acceptable unto Thy divine Majesty, we humbly beseech Thee in behalf of our friends and relatives and all who are near and dear to us. Let Thy fatherly hand be always over them, and Thy Holy Spirit always with them: and so lead them in the knowledge and obedience of Thee that in the end they may obtain everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

And now, O Lord, we pray Thee to continue Thy gracious protection to us this night. Defend us from all dangers and mischiefs, and from the fear of them, that we may enjoy such refreshing sleep as may fit us for the duties of the following day. Make us ever mindful of the time when we shall lie down in the dust; and grant us grace always to live in such a state, that we may never be afraid to die: so that, living and dying, we may be Thine, through the merits and satisfaction of Thy Son Jesus Christ, in whose name we offer up these our imperfect prayers, Amen.

Our Father, etc.

Children's Home Society of Virginia

The group of children on another page in this issue came out of one home in Virginia. This home was destroyed because of the death of the mother, and the father was out of employment. Their dwelling was a miserable shack in the suburbs for which the father had agreed to pay $2 per month. The children's ages are from three years to eighteen years. They are all girls. They were in grave danger, especially the larger ones.

Among the hundreds of appeals coming, five hundred and twenty-two have actually been investigated and where necessary have been received into the Home for proper adjustment with relatives.

Four thousand, three hundred and fifty-eight have become the wards of this Society, of whom there are still over thirteen hundred in its care and under its custody.

The value of this work cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. The Society can receive only the dependent children who may be placed in homes. In many instances, the children through neglect have to be kept for weeks and sometimes for months to be treated, nursed and doctored to prepare them for entrance into specially selected homes. The work of this Society is sustained entirely by voluntary gifts. Because of many unforeseen conditions arising, this present year has been one of the most trying the Society has ever experienced. Financial depression and scaricity of money places greater burdens upon the Society by increased demands to save neglected children.

Contributions may be sent directly to W. A. Roper, Treasurer, Bank of Commerce & Trusts, or C. E. Pleasants, General Secretary of Finance, 301 East Grace Street, Richmond, Virginia.

The Christmas Quest

When the Wise Men from the East set out to search for their King, the quest led to a tiny Babe, the symbol of helplessness. Whoever today seeks will find Him among the forgotten and neglected, the weak and the helpless. Thus the Christmas Quest leads inevitably to the most peculiarly helpless of people—the lepers. And there are two million of them in the world. No other class of people is so inhumanly and pitiably neglected.

A movement is now on foot, led by the American Mission to Lepers, to bring about international cooperation of governments, of scientists, and of all intelligent and considerate people to end leprosy. Christ set the example of pity for the lepers. It is significant that an organization representing the whole Church should be dedicated to this task not only of cleansing the lepers, but of cleansing the world of leprosy.

Hospitals established by the Mission to Lepers in one hundred and three centers throughout the world are demonstrating kindly, scientific care of lepers. As a result Oriental nations are awakening to their responsibility in checking this menace. Leprosy is at last yielding before scientific knowledge. Like a romance reads the story of chaulmoogra oil, mentioned in records as ancient as Egyptian papyrus, but never until the twentieth century developed into a form where its effect on leprosy could be considered in the nature of a cure. It costs only $10 to furnish the chaulmoogra oil for two years' treatment of a leper patient. Incipient cases can frequently be cured in this length of time. Thousands of former lepers are being released, but there is urgent need to extend this healing ministry.

The Wise Men carried their gifts to Bethlehem. We of the North, the South and the West send our gifts to the East that the lepers may be helped in the name of the Christ Child.

The American Mission to Lepers, interdenominational and international, will gratefully acknowledge and transmit your contribution. The address of the New York office is 156 Fifth Avenue.

Book Reviews

VOLUNTARY CLERGY OVERSEAS, an answer to the Fifth World Call: By Roland Allen. Copies may be obtained from the author, Amenbury, Beaconsfield, Bucks, England. Price, two shillings.

Here is a book that with its companion volume, "Missionary Methods, St. Paul's or Ours?" ought to be studied conscientiously by all in our Church who are interested in its advance. The book is a clear challenge to our antiquated missionary methods, and a presentation of a Scriptural way out of our present difficulties.

The high-priced, and cumbersome machinery that we have set up in order to do missionary work is in amazing contrast to the simple methods and machinery used by St. Paul; yet, he succeeded while we fail. He did without secretaries with their expense accounts, never made plaintive pleas for funds, yet his followers turned the world upside down, and raised up wherever they went an indigenous Church, capable of self-support.

This book contrasts the two methods. He charterizes the Fifth World Call, as an admission of failure, that still calls for more effort in the same wrong direction. The author shows that in our attempt to raise up churches in the mission fields that resemble in every detail the churches of our large centers at home we have undertaken an impossible task.

St. Paul's method was to obtain men of standing and reputation and expect them to carry on the church in addition to their own business. If the church grew, others were ordained to assist in the work. This allowed the full-time missionary to go on to open up another work. As it is many places in the country and small towns are languishing because they are unable to support a full-time man.

The author cites cases where men as lay readers have done practically the work of an ordained man in raising up and keeping alive work in small places. He asks why these men could not have been fully equipped by ordination for their work, as in Apostolic times.

The consequence of change of methods is that we are trying to build up a church in missionary districts relying upon full-time men. We secure these from young and untrained men, that is, untrained except in a purely technical kind of training. On the other hand St. Paul relied upon men who had been tested and tried as leaders of their communities, who gave their time freely.

This book should be read by every one from the Presiding Bishop down. His challenge must be met and his method tested if we are to make any notable advance in our missionary work, at home or afield. To the writer's mind the author has more than proved his case. He is a clergyman of our own communion. His methods have already been tried with success, and one missionary leader, Dr. Cochrane of the World Dominion Press, is urging in his paper advance along these lines. It is the only way by which we may evangelize the world in this generation. It is the true method by which we may obtain that which is supposed to be our aim, a truly indigenous church.

We have concentrated upon schools and institutions, but have we effected many real conversions? This book is the only one, so far as the present writer knows, that gives us a truly Scriptural method for our mission work.

SEND HIS MESSAGE.

Mr. Editor:

The day called Christmas is the birthday of the Saviour.
He does not get many presents on His birthday.
We get them all.
Should He not get one also—the biggest of them all?
Give it to your church to send His message to those who do not know.
He wants this message sent.
Send it quick before they die.
One hundred thousand die each day.
Four thousand die each hour.
Two or three hundred have died, without hearing about Him, while I have been writing this. Hurry!
Give them the chance to hear about Him and gain heaven.

MANY HAVE NEVER HEARD OF SANTA CLAUS.

Mr. Editor:

You will no doubt recall that I wrote you in the summer concerning the conditions and needs of the fourteen hundred children in our care and requested that you say a word if you felt that you could do so concerning the conditions involving these homeless and motherless children, who have been given to our Society.

We have received from your section and others some very greatly needed and beautiful responses together with kind words of appreciation, which greatly aided us at the time and I feel that you and all those friends should know that the children were blessed and the work promoted.

It might be interesting to know that it takes five gallons of stewed apples for one meal in the Richmond Home, two bushels of potatoes and about two bushels of bread is required to serve them three times each day and other things in proportion. Now, that Christmas time is approaching and many of these children have never heard of Santa Claus nor have they ever had the actual necessities of life provided for them, we thought there might be some other friends who would be glad to share with these motherless and homeless little ones and if they did send even a modest contribution, it would be received and applied to make these little lives more happy and joyous. In round numbers, we have a total of fourteen hundred children, who are our wards.

Our address is 301 East Grace Street, Room 910, Richmond, Virginia.

This is preeminently the children's time and we feel there are those who would be glad to respond. We wish to thank you again and all who have assisted us in any way in the past, as well as thanking those who will remember these children at this season.

C. E. Pleasants,
General Secretary of Finance.

CARDINAL WOLSEY WINDOW.

Mr. Editor:

Forty-one years ago a benefactor of Trinity College, Hartford, sent it several large crates filled with stone, with the suggestion that the contents might be used in some future college building, preferably a chapel. Now the chapel materializes in the munificent gift of William G. Mather, of Cleveland, Ohio, and is being designed by Philip H. Frohman, the architect in chief of the Cathedral at Washington. On the occasion of Mr. Mather, Mr. Frohman and Doctor Ogilby, the President, meeting on the college campus to fix the site of the chapel, the gift of forty-one years before was recalled. Inspection disclosed the frame and mullions of a window of Whitehall Palace given by Cardinal Wolsey. Mr. Frohman at once determined to embody this gift of such rich historic interest in his chapel plan. With those lines which Shakespeare places in Wolsey's mouth, what a lesson to collegiate youth! "Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition; by that sin fell the angels. . . . . Let all the ends thou aimst at be thy country's, thy God's and truth's." And what a strange coincidence that this gift of Cardinal Wolsey should, three centuries later, be carried overseas and find its final place in a chapel given by one of the descendants of that sturdy Puritan family which in Cotton and Increase Mather and its other members, moulded New England's spiritual and intellectual life.

All the stones were carefully marked and numbered, and came into the possession of the donor through the Rev. A. Dalgarno Robinson, the then Vicar of St. Helen's Church, London.

Meetings of the National Council and Its Departments.

The first meeting of the National Council since General Convention was held in New York at the Church Missions House, December 12 and 13, 1928, the meeting of all the Departments being held the day before, with meeting of the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary on December 7 to 10. Nineteen members of the National Council were present, the attendance being somewhat affected this time owing to the prolonged absence of all the members at the General Convention, as all but two members were official representatives of their dioceses at General Convention.

$805,782 to be Collected in December.

To balance with what the dioceses told the Council to expect for the year, $805,782 must be collected before the final closing of our books. A large sum, but less than the amount due on this date last year.

The National Council is counting on every cent of the money to insure a balanced budget.

Thirteen dioceses and districts have sent in less than one half of what they told us to expect. Six of these have remitted less than 40 per cent. Does this mean using for the diocese money given for the General Church?

May you all have a Merry Christmas and a 100 per cent (all payments made) New Year.

Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

In happy contrast to the above statement are a few outlying missionary districts and one diocese which have oversubscribed the amounts expected of them. Porto Rico, Alaska, Honolulu, Philippines, Liberia and Kentucky have gone "over the top".

Windham House Dedicated.

Windham House, 326 West One Hundred and Eighth Street, the New York residence for graduate students in training for Church work, which was provided by a part of the Woman's Auxiliary special gift of 1923-25, as a memorial to Bishop Tuttle, was formally dedicated on Sunday afternoon, December 9. Bishop Murray had the service, for which a special form had been drawn up, with responsive readings and prayers appropriate to the different parts of the house. The chapel in the house is a memorial to Miss Emily Tillotson.

The committee which has had general charge of the memorial consists of Dr. John Wood, the Rev. Dr. Lathrop, the Rev. Messrs. Parson and Suter, Miss Lindley, Miss Nannie H. Winston, Mrs. A. S. Phelps, Mrs. C. H. Boynton, Miss Adelaide T. Case and Miss Eva D. Corey, most of whom were present at the dedication. The house has been open since September, though it is not full. There have been six or eight persons in residence from widely separated parts of the country.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Legacies.

The late Judge Erskine M. Ross, a native of Virginia, who died at Los Angeles, California, on Monday, the tenth of December, has generously remembered in his last will and testament St. Paul's Church and the Memorial Home for Girls, Richmond. The $50,000 bequest to the Memorial Home for Girls is to be placed in trust for the institution in memory of the testator's mother, Elizabeth Mayo Ross, and his sister, Mary Cameron Ross Buford. St. Paul's Church is left a legacy of $25,000.

Balance Due.

This diocese told the National Council to expect of it for the year, 1928, $45,000. Receipts to December 1, 1928, are recorded as $33,129.01, which leaves a balance due of $11,870.99.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

The Rev. J. M. Dick In His New Charge at Pulaski.

On the morning of Sunday, DeDcember 9, the Rev. James McDowell Dick conducted his first service as rector of Christ Church, Pulaski, Virginia; a large congregation being present.

Mr. Dick comes from Kingstree, in the Diocese of South Carolina, to receive a warm welcome into the diocesan family of Southwestern Virginia.

Unfortunately, Mr. Dick fell on the street in Pulaski on Monday night. He seriously injured his knee and at this writing (December 14) is a patient in the hospital there. It is earnestly hoped that his trouble will soon be over and he will have a complete recovery.

Salem Rector in New Home.

The Rev. Roland J. Moncure, rector of St. Paul's Church at Salem, and Mrs. Moncure, held an informal reception on Thursday evening, December 13, to celebrate the opening of the handsome new rectory in which they are now comfortably installed. In addition to members of the St. Paul's congregation and others of the town, there were also present several friends of the Moncures from Roanoke.

A feature of the happy occasion was a brief address by Bishop Jett, who, speaking at the request of the Executive Board, which had met in Roanoke during the day, brought to Mr. and Mrs. Moncure an expression of the esteem of the members of the Board, and to them and the congregation the sincere congratulations of the Board on having completed this important addition to the equipment of the parish.

The rectory is of English type, eight rooms and cost between twelve and thirteen thousand dollars. It is built of colonial brick, with casement windows, and is located in Langhorne Place, an unusually attractive new development in Salem. Messrs. Frank C. Wiley, G. A. Scruggs and J. Gordon Wells were the members of the building committee and the architects were Messrs. Slew and White.

Balance Due.

This diocese told the National Council to expect of it for the year 1928, $15,300. Receipts to December 1, 1928, are recorded as $12,893.16, which leaves a balance due of $2,406.84.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Carol Service.

The Christmas carol service at the Cathedral, which has become an annual service of widespread interest, will be held this year on December 30, at four o'clock in Bethlehem Chapel. In addition to the daily celebrations of Holy Communion in Bethlehem Chapel, an additional service has been added for Thursdays at 9:30 A. M., in the Chapel of the Resurrection, for the help of those who are unable to attend the earlier service.

Campaign.

The final meeting for reports of the campaign to raise funds to pay off all indebtedness on St. Thomas' Church, was held on Sunday evening, December 16, following a prayer service, conducted by the rector, Dr. C. Earnest Smith. Considerably more than $20,000 was subscribed, with others still to be heard from. The chairman of the campaign was Mr. Ewalls Waggaman, who was assisted by laymen and laywomen of the parish who served as division leaders and team captains.

Tableaux.

Six tableaux of "The Holy Nativity" were presented at the Diocesan Sunday School Institute at Christ Church, Washington Parish, on Tuesday evening, December 18, by the members of St. John's Church, Bethesda, under the direction of Miss Sally Finney. Preceding the pageant, Commander C. T. Jewell, member of the Diocesan Pageant and Drama Council, gave a short statement as to the religious and educational aspects of amateur drama in the city of Washington.

Conference for Laymen.

A conference for laymen under the auspices of the Cathedral College of Preachers was held on Mt. St. Alban December 14-16. The sessions were held in the Cathedral Library.

Fifteen laymen from Washington, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, were in attendance. It is the second of a series of week end gatherings that will be held during the coming months under the auspices of the College of Preachers. The general theme of the series is, "A Living Religion", while the information discussion of the bases of the Christian faith and their bearing upon practical Christian living occupied the great part of the conference sessions.

Accommodations for the conference members are provided at an apartment building near the Cathedral which is being occupied by the College of Preachers until that institution's building, now in course of construction just northeast of the Cathedral apse, is completed.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Mystery Plays.

The custom of representing the Nativity of our Lord in a mystery play as part of the observance of Christmas has come to be recognized in this diocese, and the number of parishes using this method of expression and teaching is increasing. At the coming Christmas season there will be such presentations in the Cathedral at Garden City; in the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill; in St. Bartholomew's, Holy Trinity, St. Mary's, St. Luke's, Holy Apostles, Holy Cross, and St. Barnabas, in Brooklyn; Trinity Mission, Astoria; St. John's, Springfield Gardens; Grace Church, Riverhead; the Church of the Redeemer, Merrick, and probably in others. In most of these the "mystery" is presented in the chancel; some use the parish house. All use Church School children as the dramatic personae, some use adults for the chief parts. Some use pantomime while the Scriptural story is read; some have the characters speak their own parts. All agree as to the devotional and educational value of this method of presenting truth.

St. Luke's Parish, Brooklyn, at a recent meeting, voted affirmatively on the recommendation of the vestry to extend the vote to the women of the parish.

Balance Due.

This diocese told the National Council to expect of it for the year, 1928, $100,000. Receipts to December 1, 1928, are recorded as $71,515.17, wihch leaves a balance due of $28,484.83.

TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. C. S. Quinn, D. D., Bishop.

Brief Outline of the History of the Young People's Service League.

In Bishop Quin's journeyings over the diocese ten years ago this fall, he came upon a Mission in which for over twenty-one years there had not been a baptism or confirmation of a young person. He realized that something was wrong; that for some reason the Church and the young people were not working together; that it was evidently because there was no opportunity for the young people to serve the Church in the way they knew how.

He realized how much the Church needed the young people and equally how much the young people needed Mother Church and, with this in mind, he conceived the idea of bringing Rev. Gordon Reese to the Diocese of Texas to organize the Young People's work. Mr. Reese came in October, 1920, and it didn't take him long to get acquainted and to win his way into the hearts of the young people.

In St. Paul's Church, Waco (the Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector), having caught a vision of the need, provided in its budget a definite sum for Young People's work. In May, 1920, they added a paid worker to their staff to organize all the Young People's activities in that parish. The first Young People's group as such was, therefore, organized at St. Paul's Church, Waco.

It was in Trinity Church, Houston, that Bishop Quin, the Rev. Gordon Reese and others met to talk over possible plans of a young people's organization for the diocese. Out of this conference, the ideal of the Young People's Service League was born. Many Leagues were organized during the following months.

In January, 1921, Mr. Reese sent out the first call to the young people to come together in Houston for fun, fellowship and worship. At that time the Diocesan Young People's organization was effected.

Although the dioceses of Michigan and California and perhaps one or two others had already organized their Young People's work, the Diocese of Texas was the first to give birth to the idea of a Service Organization for young people in the Church and is, therefore, the mother of the modern Young Peoples' Service League. It was from Bulletins Nos. 1 and 2, gotten out by Mr. Reese, and an article sent to all Church papers written by Mrs. C. S. Quin, which incorporated this ideal of service as we know it in the Diocese of Texas that caused many Young People's Organizations to model after the Texas League.

The summer of 1921 found Mr. Reese again coralling the young people of the diocese, but this time for the Summer Camps to be held at Camp Allen, La-Porte, Texas. Some twenty-five boys gathered at the Boys' Camp and about forty girls attended the first Girls' Camp. Each year they have grown until now we have as many registrations both at the Boys' and the Girls' Camps as we can take care of.

In May, 1921, Edith T. Parker, of Louisville, Ky., came to the Diocese of Texas to succeed the Rev. Gordon Reese. After a little over two years of splendid work, Miss Parker resigned in August, 1923, and, on October 1 of that same year, Dorothy M. Fischer, of Atlanta, Ga., came to Texas to succeed Miss Parker—and here we are.

And during these eight years, what have the young people in the Diocese of Texas done? There are things too innumerable to mention, but suffice it to say that the twenty-five Young People's Service Leagues now organized in the diocese have given new life and strength to the Church and have also given strength to the young people.

The Rev. Dargan Butt, of Wharton, who is our first life recruit in active service in the diocese was a charter member of the Young People's Service League, Trinity Church, Houston. The Rev. Messrs. Tom Sumners, Charles Sumners, Hugh Murray, Lyle Barnett and Michael J. Kippenbrock, all formerly members of the Y. P. S. L., or old Camp Allenites, are other life recruits and are now back in the diocese and at work with the exception of the Rev. Michael J. Kippenbrock, who has gone to Alaska to work under Bishop Rowe. Then there are many boys still in the Seminary and a girl in the Deaconess School, and a great number of others who through the influence of the Young People's Service League and Camp Allen are enthusiastic workers in the various parishes and missions throughout the diocese.

And behind and through all the Young People's work in the Diocese of Texas since its very beginning stands the figure of one whose understanding and love of young people has permeated the whole work and who has given to them the opportunity to serve the Church in the way they knew how—Bishop C. S. Quin, widely known in young people's groups throughout the country and beloved by all.

This diocese told the National Council to expect from it for the year 1928, $15,000. Receipts to December 1, 1928, are recorded as $9,056.73, which leaves a balance due of $5,943.27.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Covington, Ky.—On Sunday, December 2, the bishop of the diocese, Bishop Burton, visited Trinity Church, and confirmed a class of six.

On the evening of Monday, the third, a reception was tendered the Bishop and, as an expression of the regard in which he is held in the parish, a handsome purse was presented him.

Newport, Ky.—The new parish house of St. Paul's Church was, on Sunday, November 25, dedicated by Bishop Burton.

Besides the Bishop and rector of St. Paul's the Rev. Messrs. Clopton, Dern and Gibson took part in the dedicatory service.

The Rev. C. G. Reade, of Cincinnati, delivered the dedicatory address.

The Rev. F. E. Cooly is the rector of St. Paul's.

Latonia, Ky.—This mission, after a most earnest effort for a number of years, has freed itself from debt, and on the afternoon of Sunday, December 9, was consecrated by Bishop Burton.

The Rev. F. E. Cooly, of Newport, is also presbyter-in-charge of this mission.

21. Friday. S. Thomas.
23. Fourth Sunday in Advent.
25. Tuesday. Christmas Day.
28. Friday. Holy Innocents.
30. First Sunday After Christmas.
31. Monday. New Year's Eve.

COLLECT FOR FOURTH SUNDAY IN ADVENT.

O Lord, raise up, we pray Thee, Thy power, and come among us, and with great might, succor us; that whereas through our sins and wickedness, we are sore let and hindered in running the race that is set before us, Thy bountiful grace and mercy may speedily help and deliver us; through the satisfaction of Thy Son our Lord, to Whom with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be honor and glory, world without end. Amen.

COLLECT FOR CHRISTMAS DAY.

Almighty God, Who hast given us Thy only begotten Son, to take our nature upon Him, and as at this time to be born of a pure virgin; Grant that we being regenerate, and made Thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by Thy Holy Spirit; through the same Our Lord Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the same Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

COLLECT FOR FIRST COMMUNION CHRISTMAS.

O God, Who maketh us glad with the yearly remembrance of the birth of Thine only Son, Jesus Christ; Grant that as we joyfully receive Him for our Redeemer, so we may with sure confidence behold Him when He shall come to be our Judge, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. STEPHEN'S DAY.

Grant, O Lord, that, in all our sufferings here upon earth for the testimony of Thy truth, we may steadfastly look up to heaven, and by faith behold the glory that shall be revealed; and, being filled with the Holy Ghost, may learn to love and bless our persecutors by the example of Thy first martyr, St. Stephen, who prayed for his murderers to Thee, O Blessed Jesus, Who standest at the right hand of God, to succor all those who suffer for Thee, our own Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST'S DAY.

Merciful Lord, we beseech Thee to cast Thy bright beams of light upon Thy Church, that it, being instructed by the doctrine of Thy blessed apostle and evangelist, St. John, may so walk in the light of Thy truth that it may at length attain to everlasting life; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR THE INNOCENTS' DAY.

O Almighty God, Who out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast ordained strength and made infants to glorify Thee by their deaths; Mortify and kill all vices in us, and so strengthen us by Thy grace that by the innocency of our lives and constancy of our faith even unto death we may glorify Thy holy name; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

How shall we grace the day?
Ah! let the thought that on this holy morn
The Prince of Peace—the Prince of Peace was born.
Employ us, while we pray!

He, who, till time shall cease.
Will watch that earth, where once, not all in vain,
He bled to give us Peace, may not disdain
A prayer whose theme is Peace.

Peace in the crowded town.
Peace in a thousand fields of waving grain,
Peace in the highway and the flowery lane,
Peace on the wind-swept down!

Peace on the farthest seas,
Peace in our sheltered bays and ample streams,
Peace wheresoe'er our starry garland streams,
And Peace in every breeze!

Peace on the whirring marts,
Peace where the scholar thinks, and the hunter roams,
Peace, God of Peace! Peace, Peace in all our homes,
And Peace in all our hearts!

—Henry Timrod.

"Born of the Virgin Mary."

There is a peculiar charm about the story of Jesus' birth as recorded by Matthew and Luke. It lifts us up into the sphere of the supernatural and makes an appeal as to its reality that can be shaken off only when the grip of a naturalistic conception of Christ's religion has taken hold of the mind. That is why that divinely unique story has ceased to appeal to some moderns who have permitted scientific thought to invade the domain of the supernatural and make havoc of their faith. That story of Matthew and Luke does not stand alone as an isolated narrative in the Scriptures. Isaiah of the Old Testament, and John and Paul and the writer of Hebrews of the New, all unite in underwriting what is so definitely narrated in the two Gospels. John says that the Eternal Word was made flesh, while Matthew and Luke tell how He came to be made flesh. In that fine passage in Phil. 2:6-8, Paul tells us how He who called Himself the Son of God laid aside, of His own volition, His God-like form or vesture and robed Himself, not in the form of an angel, but in "the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men". Here occurred a distinct break in the ordinary life-processes of nature. But why not? Christ's coming into the world as a Babe, growing up as a youth, maturing into manhood, and thus identifying Himself with our humanity and sharing its experiences, what is this but the most significant and stupendous fact in human history? Here is miracle and mystery that defies our poor finite thinking. No wonder Paul should write to Timothy, "Great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in human flesh." Paul accepts it as a blessed fact. So must we.

But this break in the ordinary life-processes of nature is no less marked than was the break in the natural course of human history which the Life of Christ has wrought in the world. The miracle of His birth, and the mystery in which it is enshrouded, are simply in full tune with the miracle and mystery of His Life. The Birth is but the dawn of which Christ's Life is the glorious day. As the day, so was the dawn. If Christ had been born as all of the purely human family are, He would have shared with all humanity its imperfection and sin. If there was no break in nature at Christ's birth, then there must have been such a break after He was born. That leads us into a contradiction of the laws of the natural world just as certainly as does belief in the Virgin Birth. It is like throwing one difficulty over the fence and shouldering a greater difficulty and walking away with it. There is something supremely convincing in the accounts of Matthew and Luke to one who believes in a supernatural Christ. No other Christ is possible if the Scriptures are still to be trusted. To believe in any other Christ is to create a hundred difficulties in place of the one which believers in a naturalistic religion have fastened on their minds.

The aged Simeon saw with his prophetic eye, as he lifted the Babe in his arms, what is hidden from those who stumble at the Virgin Birth. He had no more difficulty in recognizing in that Infant the eternal Son of God than you and I have in seeing in an acorn the life potentiality of the mighty oak weathering the storms of a thousand years. After seeing that, he gave this passing world the finest adieu that ever fell from the lips of a mere man. Ah, for a faith like that! When Christ is once seen and known as the sole transcendent Miracle and Mystery of the ages, all difficulty concerning the story of His birth vanishes like mist. Such a Birth demands an angelic song from the heavenly world, demands the homage of shepherds, and seers from the East, demands a Magnificat such as burst forth from the overjoyed soul of Mary, and Nunc Dimittis like that which stirred the prophetic Simeon, the ending of whose life was like a beautiful golden sunset. But the portraiture of Jesus as the Gospels and Paul's Epistles have cast it upon the screen before your eyes, and any other kind of birth than that which they have recorded is out of harmony with the Christ as we have learned to know Him. Here we see Him as God manifest in human flesh, with a halo of supernal beauty encircling His Life that tells us in language profoundly eloquent: "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us; and we behold His glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth". He who has seen Him and known Him as He is, in His relationship to those whom He has loved and redeemed, will find it necessary to believe that He is not a Product of this earth, but that He came from the bosom of the Father to be born of a Virgin and wear the only garb in which He could draw nigh unto you and me and be recognized as our brother. He came sharing our humble estate; He left to establish forever the truth of His words: "I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."—Lutheran.

A CHRISTMAS THOUGHT.

A manger, a star in the eastern sky,
Three kings of Orient riding by;
'And stop we here, where the light burns dim?
Can it be in a stable we worship Him?"

In hesitant silence, their gaze is bent
On the glittering light in the firmament;
When lo, above where the young Child lay,
The star stands still—and its brilliant ray

Falls soft on the Babe and Mary mild,
The little Lord Jesus, the heaven-sent Child;
And the Magi prostrate themselves before
The One whom heaven and earth adore.

Not alone in a palace today we find
This King, nor yet with the wisest mind,
But oft in the lowly and humble way
We're guided to Him as we hear Him say:

"Inasmuch as ye do a loving deed
To one of the least, ye fill My need;
Give drink to the thirsty, give bread to the poor,
To the sick and the lonely fling open the door.

"Bring joy to the heart of a little one,
And then, at least, when the day is done,
Ye shall find that thus ye are offering Me Far richer gifts than the Magi three."

—Lydia D. Poore.

A Continuing Christmas.

Man is a strange being. He does so many inexplainable things. We have just been thinking of this Christmas business, for instance. It seems to us so peculiar the manner in which so many of us have allowed this great Christian observance to become so commercialized that it is really a burden to us instead of the strength and joy that it was meant to be. Even the beautiful custom of sending Christmas greetings has become a costly and meaningless conventionality. The Christmas card, which was invented partly to relieve us of buying costly presents, has itself become so expensive as to be a burden and so numerous as to be a barren formality. Most of us burden ourselves at Christmas time with trying to keep up the pace through giving costly presents, which we cannot afford to buy, to people who do not need them and who feel embarrassed by receiving them, because it puts them just that much more in debt to us in an exchange of gifts which they feel too poor to keep up. Few of us have the courage to give a few simple gifts to the folks we want to give them to and who will enjoy receiving them.

It is not in the commercialized Christmas—in the luxurious presents and the sinful waste of costly toys that tend to make little prigs and aristocrats out of our innocent children—that we really get our best Christmas joy at all. But rather is it in the spirit of good will towards folks, in the enlarged circle of love which run more freely towards others, in the forgetting of self for a little while in order that out of our own lives there may come blessing and happiness to those about us. Does it not seem strange, then, when men and women find such peculiarly rich compensation in this selfless Christian ministry to the poor and the neglected and the lonely, that such should hold a minor place in our Christmas planning and our Christmas giving? Few of us have had the wisdom to apportion our Christmas gifts and our Christmas ministry to the homes and the places which will give us ourselves the greatest satisfaction and joy.

And is it not strange indeed when we do find so much of the joy of the Christmas time in the spirit of selflessness, of thinking of others and planning for others, and of greeting every one with the cheery smile and the happy word of good wishes—isn't it strange, we say, when we find these things so invigorating and happy on Christmas Day that we are so prone to let it stop there? If these things are good for ourselves and good for the world and we find happiness in them at Christmas time, why not have a continuing Christmas the year round in which there shall be far more of selflessness, and far more of thoughtfulness and planning for others, and far more of the cherry smile and the happy good will regardless of moods or weather the whole long year round? Christmas is such a good and happy day, why not make it a continuing day of peace and good will to all mankind?—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Expectant Hearts.

The Shepherds on the hills of Judea came of a folk-training which took as a most certain fact that angelic presences surround us always. Quite probably they were always on the alert for the glimmer and shimmer of wings in the serene, star-lit sky. At their quiet task of watchfulness they were ever listening for whispers from on High on the breath of the night wind. Expectant hearts and listening souls these shepherds must have had! The glad tidings of great joy came to those who had already ears to hear!

The Wise Men from the East were in all probability searchers of the stars. All Eastern faiths held it as unquestionable that the stars in heaven had to do with the destiny of humans on our little earth. When this new star appeared, these, the Magi, were already gazing skyward. They were star-wise long before The revealing Light came to those who had eyes to see!

Once more it is Christmas time. Revelations of its inmost meaning come to us only if we are really ready to receive it. We gain new blessing only by sensitized, receptive hearts. We find by what we are. "To him that hath shall be given." "Seek and ye shall find." "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Amen, so be it! The Good is preliminary to the Better, the Better to the Best.

May God lead you deeper into the miraculous possibilities of truth you already hold! May He lead you nearer Him by some path on which you already tread! May He reveal Himself in His power and beauty through some love you already happily possess!

We find by what we are. We receive as we are receptive. Then may it be your Christmas blessing to have God pour Himself into the cup of your own prepared, best self, held up to Him ready and waiting for the brimming gift of His true self, in Christmas gift of Christ Incarnate!—Rev. Phillips E. Osgood, D. D.

Soul-Sickness.

Louis Deschamps.

There is a malady of increasing occurrence in these modern times. It is sometimes called worry, melancholia, boredom, or disillusionment. Its symptoms are embittered attitudes, affected indifference to religion, and often a surrender to self-indulgence. People become spiritual profligates in dissipation of their heritage of sacred ideals. Life loses its inspiration, and only the stimulation of work and pleasure keeps many in an artificial state of materialistic contentment. Though spiritual in nature, this malady poisons the mind, weakens the will, and brings unhappiness to the whole viewpoint of life. It is soul-sickness.

Imagine the effect of the following ideas that flourish like virulent germs in the minds of the soul-sick: that duty is servitude, that honor is a mere conventionality, love a selfish conquest, and religion is a mythical story. Innate spiritual impulses are denied as childish superstitions, and the individual must revert to the animals for explanations of himself. History is carelessly ignored, culture criticized, and idealism ridiculed. Yet the victims of this dread disease would spread the contagion to others.

The individual sufferer alone, through God's help, can cure himself. Unless habits of thought have become too strongly established in prejudices, the return to spiritual health may come from determined efforts to meet the fallacies of such thoughts squarely and to reject them. The treatment is by combatting mental laziness, indifference, and the temptation to drift idly on the waves of popular fads. Probably the greatest obstacle is the fact of mortal weakness and imperfection that seem to deny the dictates of religious ideals, yet there can be no progress without vision. In times of spiritual unrest, it is good to remind one's self constantly that certain thoughts and conceptions of religion have stood the test of ages. In learning the art of living, observe the wisdom of those who have lived happily. Heroes are made from courageous, inspired thoughts, not from barren, hopeless theories. The Bible has healed more soul-sickness than any other source of thought, yet those in greatest need of it reject it without reading it.

Modern cynicism is primarily cowardice. It fears the venture of faith into the great unknown, and, therefore, denies the unknown. Because faith holds fast to the ideals of unselfishness, purity and beauty, though the world is grossly selfish, unclean and sordid, soul-sick people would admit failure and give up the struggle. Ideals are things to be striven for, rather than finished achievements to be tested scientifically for defects in the present imperfect state of human nature. Faith is necessary to life, for otherwise it is mere existence. Mysticism and reverence have no intellectual substitutes. The spiritual heritage of the race is the hope of human progress. Let the soul-sick change the nature of their thoughts.

The Woman's Gifts.

The fact that a woman was called upon to explain the Bible in an ancient time shows that woman then had a large place in religious thought and life, even filling the high office of prophetess, speaking in the name of the Lord and declaring His judgments. Woman's place in the church and kingdom should not be narrowed in our day but rather broadened, and she is coming forward to fill it in increasing measure. "The Lord giveth the word: the women that publish it are a great host." In every land and in many an official place of teaching her voice is now heard explaining and applying the law of the Lord, and the church is at last beginning to utilize in fuller degree her peculiar gifts and service.

Death never ends our activities, but simply changes the atmosphere of growth.—Dr. Wm. Porkess.

A CHRISTMAS LULLABY.

Florence H. Morrison.

Holy Baby, meek and mild;
Beauteous Baby! Pure Christ Child,
Lying in the straw and hay,
On this glad, glad Christmas Day.

Little Baby, smiling there,
In a stable, bleak and bare;
Born a King! All hearts to sway
On this glad, glad Christmas Day.

Sunbeams gleam about your head,
Making gold your manger bed,
Sweet birds sing in joyous lay
On this glad, glad Christmas day.

"Peace, Good-will, to all the earth,"
Sang God's Angels at Thy birth,
Love, has come with men to stay,
On this glad, glad Christmas Day.

Mixed Gifts.

The snow thudded against the window pane and heaped itself along the sill in tiny, uneven drifts. Betty Carson smiled as she came away from the window.

"We're going to have a white Christmas after all," she said to her chum, Angela Murray.

"I was so afraid we wouldn't," returned Angela as she opened a popper of flaky popcorn and turned it into a shining pan. "It doesn't seem possible that Christmas is only two days away!"

"And my! What a lot of things I have to do today and tomorrow!" sighed Betty. "Did I show you the blouse I made for Miss Haley?"

Angela shook her head and Betty ran upstairs to get the blouse. Miss Haley was the girls' Sunday-school teacher and she was beloved by all. She was not much more than a girl herself, and entered into all the girls' work and pleasure with the same enthusiasm that they themselves did.

"Oh, what a beauty!" exclaimed Angela as Betty laid the blouse on the table for inspection. It was made of soft, white silk, and Betty had embroidered it.

"I just know she can't help being pleased with it," continued Angela; "I am not giving her anything as nice as that; I am just giving her a pair of house slippers."

"I'm sure she'll like that, too," said Betty.

"Are you giving Louise Meyer anything this year?" asked Angela.

"Why, I hadn't intended to. You see since their father died they've had quite a hard time making both ends meet. Louise told me a week ago that she wasn't giving any one a thing. So I thought perhaps she'd rather we didn't give to her so long as she can't give."

"Well, I felt that way, too, but mother said since no one else was going to remember her, that I ought to."

"Well, perhaps, I had better too then," said Betty. "I have to run downtown to get a holly box for Miss Haley's blouse, so I can get it then. What are you giving her?"

"I got her a pair of gloves. I noticed hers were getting shabby. Betty, don't you think we have enough popcorn for those balls?"

Betty considered. "It takes a lot for forty children."

"Well, if you'll fix up the syrup I'll pop some more."

They were just pouring the syrup over the two heaping pans of corn when there was a knock on the back door.

"I'll bet that's Don," said Angela. "He said that he and Everett might come over and help us if they got the Christmas trees set up in time."

Betty opened the door, and Don Murray, Angela's brother, and his chum, Everett Robbins, came in brushing the snow from their caps and shoulders.

"You look like snow men," said Betty.

"Hurry up and wash your hands and help us with these popcorn balls," Angela told them. "The one who makes the most gets one to eat," she laughed.

"That's fair enough," said Don, but Everett protested.

"I thought Don said to come over to Betty's and see who could eat the most. I didn't expect to have to work!" he said and winked at Don.

"Well, either you work or you don't eat!" Angela stated firmly.

The four of them soon made the popcorn into heaps of glistening balls. When they were through they all sat about the stove and munched on some and Don said:

"I've got to go downtown and get some Christmas boxes for mother. Anything I can get for you girls?"

"No," Betty shook her head. "I've got to have a box, too, but as I have to get something for Louise I'll have to go myself."

"Well, then, let's all go down," suggested Everett.

The girls put on their wraps and they all went out. It was a heavy snowfall and the drifts were getting deep. By the time they got down they were chilled and wet.

"Let's go in and get some hot chocolate," invited Don. "Then we can get our stuff afterwards."

The chocolate was good and they all laughed and talked so much that they forgot it was getting late until Betty glanced suddenly at the clock.

"My, it's nearly six! And I have to get a holly box and something for Louise yet!"

They hurried out to the store and Betty said frowning, "Now, that I'm here I don't know what to get her! What would you suggest, Angela?"

Angela shook her head. "I haven't the slightest idea. Something useful, though, but I'm sure I don't know what. It's a real problem, buying Christmas gifts."

"Finally, in desperation, Betty chose a box of handkerchiefs. "Handkerchiefs are always acceptable," she said apologetically. "They aren't exactly what I should have liked to get, but I just couldn't think of anything else."

The next day Betty tied up her packages and wrote her cards. She had delivered all her gifts the morning before, but Miss Haley's blouse and the handkerchiefs for Louise Meyer. As she wrote the cards and tucked them under the ribbons the phone rang. Betty answered it and Mrs. Robbins, Everett's mother, spoke.

"Is that you, Betty? I'm so glad you're home. I wonder if you could help me out?"

"Why, of course, I can; I'll be glad," replied Betty.

"You see, Miss Alberson, who was to play for the primary children at the Christmas entertainment tomorrow night, sprained her wrist and, of course, she can't do it now."

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" exclaimed Betty.

"Well, the children are here at the church for their last rehearsal and I hate to let it go. I wonder if you would come down and play for them?"

"Why, not right away; I have to deliver a couple of presents first. Then I'll come."

"Unless you wish to deliver them personally, why can't Everett take them for you? I can send him right over."

"Why, surely he can," agreed Betty. "Send him over and I'll be right down."

Betty met Everett on her way to the church and gave him the boxes. "It's surely good of you to take them for me, Everett. I'm glad I don't have to take them myself, as Louise lives so far and the snow is so deep now."

"Well, it's nice of you to help mother out. See you tomorrow night," he called back as he started off.

The primary children did well, and Betty was glad she had come, they were such darlings. But she hurried home afterwards and tied up the gifts for her own family and helped to decorate the tree.

Christmas morning dawned clear and sunny, and the day went along smoothly and pleasantly for Betty. But she was anticipating the entertainment at the church in the evening. All the girls and girls would be there, and Miss Haley. Betty was so anxious to know how Miss Haley liked the blouse.

That evening as Betty paused in the entrance of the church to take off her rubbers, a whirlwind, in the shape of Louise Meyer, came through the door and flung her arms about Betty's shoulders.

"Oh, Betty, you're the dearest!" she said.

Betty gasped, for Louise was wearing the blouse that Betty had made for Miss Haley! But Betty knew instantly what had happened. Everett had got the boxes mixed!

There were tears in Louise's eyes, but her lips were smiling happily. "You don't know how much this blouse means to me," she said softly. "I hadn't intended to come tonight, or to go to any of the holiday entertainments that the girls and boys are giving this week because I had nothing to wear but my school clothes. But now," she smiled, starry-eyed, "I can go to all of them! It looks real nice with this skirt, doesn't it?"

Betty flung an arm around Louise Meyer's waist. "You look darling!" she said. And she meant it. But she must find Angela. Angela was the only one there that would know that the blouse was not meant for Louise. She found Angela and explained things to her in a whisper.

"And you aren't ever going to tell Miss Haley?" asked Angela wonderingly.

Betty shook her head. "It wouldn't be quite fair to Louise. Besides, the blouse means everything to Louise, where it would only be one present among many for Miss Haley. Oh, I'm glad, awfully glad, that Everett got those boxes mixed!"

"Yes, I believe you really are!" answered Angela.

And Betty smiled happily.—Kind Words.

A Santa Claus Helper.

Little four-year-old Charlie was curled up in his mother's arms. It was Christmas Eve night. "Muvver," said Charlie, "I wantta big red fire engine, a blue wagon, a yellow kiddie car, an Irish Mail, and just wots of fings such as mawbles, balls, and can'y."

"Muvver" looked at her little son affectionately, but, then she said, "Why, Charlie, if Santa brings you all of these wonderful toys how will he manage to have any left for little blind Tommy and his little sister."

"Why, Santa is sure to have plenty, anyway, they don't want anfing 'cept something to eat and wear, and I can't help it 'cause I'm sleepy."

"Well, baby, I am very sorry you are so selfish, but come and we will go to bed before Santa Claus gets here," and without any further conversation she carried the sleepy child to his little bed.

Santa Claus arrived a short while after, and soon a little fir tree was erected in the center of the Wallace parlor. When Norah came in to serve Santa Claus a "snack", she declared it to be the loveliest room she ever saw, and it certainly was, for a red fire engine, a yellow kiddie car, a blue wagon, and an Irish Mail were distributed about the room, and stacked under the tree were many daintily-wrapped packages.

Probably one of the first persons, besides Santa Claus, to be up Christmas morning was Charlie Wallace.

After riding all over the lower floor of the house, from parlor to kitchen, Charlie left, for two reasons, the main one being that he had nearly knocked the Irish cook down, and this was a very good reason, and besides this he wanted to see what all of his friends had received from Santa Claus.

If any one was near the foot of the hill early Christmas morning, they would have seen one well-dressed little boy talking to a ragged little girl and a little blind boy. A few minutes later the happy shouts of three children could be heard by two mothers, the one on top of the hill, and the tired mother at the foot of the hill.

When Charlie reached home he sat around the house gazing at all of his new possessions. Finally he got up and with a firm little step went to his mother.

"Muvver," he said, "Tommy and Laura did not get a single toy. I am so sorry I'se stingy, and took all Santa Claus had left. May I give Tommy and Laura my red fire truck?"

The mother looked at her son fondly, for she realized what a struggle it had been for him to give up his dearest possession. A few hours later a big car rolled up before the house at the foot of the hill. Four persons entered the house, and for an hour three explanations were made. Tommy was told by Mr. Wallace and Dr. Lester how he was to receive his sight. Laura was told by Tommy how it happened that Santa Claus left the fire truck at the wrong place, and Mrs. Wallace offered an explanation of it all to Mrs. Russell.

When an hour later the same big car drove off a happy, contented boy sank back into the seat, and said, "My mother, it sure is fun to be a Santa Claus helper."—Selected.

A Christmas Dream.

Maria Lee Goodwin, Jr., age 11.

"Good-night, mother," called Emily as Mother started downstairs.

"Good-night," Mother called back; "Go to sleep now, so when Santa Claus comes and looks in the window, he will find you asleep and will come on down the chimney."

Emily turned over in bed. How different everything looked! It seemed as though everything was snow and ice. She found herself being carried along through the air very swiftly. She saw in a distance a beautiful castle made of ice and snow with beautiful icicles hanging from the window sills and from the roof. The beautiful full moon shone upon it, making it all the more beautiful. She found herself coming down by the door. Her curiosity was great—what could this mean? It was cold, for she had no coat on. She knocked on the door. A tall young man opened the door and said in a kind voice:

"Come in, little girl; what can I do for you? " Just then Santa Claus came into the room.

"Why, here you are, Emily," he said, in a jolly voice. "I will start on my trip in a few minutes."

Just then Mrs. Claus came into the room.

"Why, here you are dear, I was beginning to be afraid you would be too late to go with Santa Claus. But he has just gotten his toys packed and he wants you to help him drive the reindeer, for he is getting old and so every year he picks out the child who has been the best the whole year and you have been the best this last year, so he chose you," she continued.

"Where is my coat, do you know?" he asked Mrs. Santa.

"Why, I put it by your pack in the toy room," she answered.

"Would you like to see the toy room?" she asked Emily.

"W—why I would love to," she answered, "if it would be no trouble to you."

Mrs. Santa led the way. The shelves were nearly bare, for the toys were in Santa's big pack. In little chairs all around were tired elves who had helped Santa all year long to make the toys.

"Come here, Emily," called Santa; "here is a coat of Mrs. Claus' you can wear. Come, Emily, let's be off."

They started off in the reindeer sleigh, but just then Emily heard some one calling. She jumped up, rubbed her eyes. It was Christmas morning.

She called, "Yes, mother, just a minute, I'll be there. I had a trip with Santa last night and a very nice dream it was," she said.

IN ITALY.

Ella M. Sollenberger.

On Christmas Eve, unnumbered bells
Sound over city, hill and plain,
And countless knees are bent before
The little Jesus, born again.

Yes, born again in hearts of men—
Here imaged on His bed of hay—
And as the tidings glad ring out,
The ones who love Him come to pray.

When Santa Claus Forgot.

Betty rubbed her eyes and sat straight up in bed. It was Christmas morning, and, strangely enough, the first thing her eyes fell upon was a carefully arranged box of toys on the foot of her bed.

Why hadn't Santa Claus put them in her stocking? A glance at the bulging stocking at the fireplace answered that. Bewildered, she jumped out of bed, calling her mother and making ready for a closer examination of the toys.

By the time her mother came into the room Betty had found the note pinned to the dress of a lovely doll in the box on the bed.

"Read it, mother; read it, mother!" Betty begged as she danced excitedly to her stocking.

The serious look on her mother's face stopped her before she could take her stocking down. In answer to the little girl's questioning look, mother read this note:

Dear Little Betty: When I stopped at little Dorothy's house I forgot to leave these toys for her. Won't you please take them to her for me and tell her that I did not mean to make the mistake?

Hurriedly, Santa Claus.

Betty forgot all about her stocking. "Help me dress, mother," she begged. "Dorothy will be so disappointed if she wakes up and does not find her dolly. Don't you remember that she wanted one just like this?"

Mother remembered, for she had heard the little girls talking about things they wanted for Christmas, and she was almost as eager for little Dorothy's Christmas to be a happy one as she was to have her own little Betty happy. "I'll write Dorothy's mother a note while you finish dressing, dear," she said, and in a moment both the note and the little girl were ready.

Dorothy's mother, a young, sad-looking woman in black, met Betty at the door, but Betty was so eager to get to her little friend that she had no time to explain her visit. She thrust the two notes into the surprised woman's hands and rushed into the room where she found Dorothy playing with the few things Santa Claus had left her, trying her best to look happy and not show her mother her disappointment.

When Dorothy's mother came in she found two very happy little girls. Betty secretly wondered why her eyes looked so bright and why she held her mother's note so tightly in her hand. But she only smiled at the children and said: "You little girls remind me, Betty, of a Christmas long ago when your mother spent the night with me and Santa Claus put all of her toys in my stocking."

Suddenly Betty remembered that she had not seen her own toys, so she jumped up and ran home as fast as her little legs would carry her.—Mary French Caldwell, in Christian Advocate.

CHRISTMAS LAND.

Oh, Christmas Land is not so far,
It's just across the hall,
Within the living room
Where holly decks the wall.
Right in the middle stands a tree
With crimson tinsel gay,
And strange and wondrous is the fruit
It bears on Christmas day.

An apple and an orange grow
Upon the same green bough,
A wagon and a rocking horse,
A sled and spotted cow;
And nuts and sparkling sugar plums,
And drums and skates and horns,
And dolls with flaxen tresses drop
Like pearls on windy morns.

But only little boys and girls
That always mind at school
And know their daily lessons well,
And try to keep each rule,
And say their prayers every night,
Can hope to join the band
Of happy children 'round the tree
That grows in Christmas Land.
—Minna Irving, in Kansas City Star.

He chose this way, it may have been,
That those poor mothers everywhere
Whose babies in the world's great inn
Find scanty cradle-room and fare,
As did the Babe of Bethlehem,
May find somewhere to comfort them.
—May Riley Smith.

Life looks rosy for him

Health worth more than fortune

THE baby to be envied is the one who is born with an inheritance of perfect health, to begin with. And who's lucky enough to have a mother who knows how to build up this fortune.

"Perhaps I'm old-fashioned," she'll say to the doctor who pronounces her child physically 100% at a baby show, "but this health certificate means more to me than all the stock certificates in the world. If my baby grows up strong and well, I'm willing to leave it to him to make a career and fortune for himself.

"Already I'm teaching him the value of regular habits. Regular sleep, regular meals, regular functions. He's never once been off schedule, not even when he was cutting teeth or traveling to the country. I make sure of that by giving him Nujol regularly."

Nujol works so easily and naturally that it won't upset a baby under any conditions. It keeps everything functioning properly. It not only prevents any excess of body poisons (we all have them) from forming but aids in their removal. It is safe and sure. Nujol was perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 26 Broadway, New York.

Heir to millions

Just try Nujol for your baby. Give it to him regularly for the next three months. See if it doesn't make things much easier for both of you. Certainly it could do no harm — for Nujol contains no drugs or medicine. Your druggist carries it. Be sure you get the genuine. Sold only in sealed packages.

A DESCRIPTION OF JESUS

Written by Publius Lentulius

President of Judea, in the Reign of Tiberius Caesar, to that Monarch in Rome.

Under the above title a tiny booklet appeared in 1913, and was speedily snowed under by war literature. It had this preface:

"The following was taken from a manuscript now in the possession of Lord Kelley, and in his library, and was copied from an original letter of Publius Lentullus at Rome. It being the custom of Roman governors to advertise, the people and Senate of such material things as happened in their provinces, in the days of Tiberius Caesar, Publius, President of Judea, wrote the following epistle to the Senate concerning the Christ":

Then comes a description of the personal appearance of our Saviour, which is so respectful and so beautiful that we feel sure it will interest readers:

"There lives at this time in Judea a man of singular virtue whose name is Jesus Christ, whom the barbarians esteem as a prophet, but His followers love and adore Him as the offspring of the Immortal God. He calls back the dead from the graves and heals all sorts of diseases with a word or touch. He is a tall man, well shaped and of an amiable and reverend aspect; His hair of a color that can hardly be matched, falling into graceful curls, waving about and very agreeably couching upon His shoulders; parted on the crown of His head, running as a stream to the front after the fashion of the Nazarites; His forehead high, large and imposing; his cheeks without spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a lovely red; his nose and mouth formed with exquisite symmetry; His beard, and of a color suitable to His hair, reaching below His chin and parted in the middle like a fork; His eyes bright blue, clear and serene, look innocent, dignified, manly and mature. In proportion of body most perfect and captivating; His arms and hands delectable to behold.

"He rebuked with majesty, counsels with mildness, His whole address whether in word or deed, being eloquent and grave. No man has seen Him laugh, yet His manners are exceedingly pleasant; but He has wept frequently in the presence of men. He is temperate, modest and wise. A man for His extraordinary beauty and divine perfection, surpassing the children of men."

This note is appended so that readers may verify it if they desire:

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part: "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes: "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes. "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work."

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past."

A profesor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiona touches me deeply."

ports were made by the chairman of the sub-committees on the Diocesan-wide Evangelistic Campaign, and Dr. Larkin Glazebrook, of the National Commission on Evangelism, spoke on his work.

On Sunday, December 9, a memorial service for the late Rev. Dr. Peregrine Wroth, was held in the Church of the Messiah. The Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector, was the preacher. Dr. Wroth was rector of this church for over fifty years and was active in its work until just a short time before his death.

Maryland suffered from three removals the first of December. The Rev. Dr. H. P. Almon Abbott left Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, to become rector of St. Chrysostom's Church, Chicago; the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown left the Church of St. Michael's and All Angels', Baltimore, to become rector of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, and the Rev. Francis F. Lynch left St. John's Church, Havre de Grace, to become assistant to the Rev. Dr. Brown at St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo.

NEW JERSEY.

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. W. Knight, D. D., Coadjutor.

225 Years of Evangelical Service for Our Lord.

November 25 to 27, Old St. Michael's Parish, Trenton, N. J., celebrated the two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of its founding by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in the year 1703. Originally located in what was then called the district of Hopewell, the church building was erected near the western boundary of the present city, where an old graveyard, still owned by the parish, is located. The present building dates from about 1749, its situation on North Warren Street placing it in the midst of the Revolutionary battle in 1776. Colonel Rawle, the Hessian commander, placed his cannon in the graveyard, instead of at the junction of Princeton and Pennington Avenue, so that Washington was given greater facility in overcoming the British forces by his surprise attack. Although forced to close during the years 1776 until 1783, by the exigencies of war, the parish was revived and has continued up to the present day.

On Sunday morning, November 27, Bishop Nathaniel Seymour Thomas, late of Wyoming, delivered an able and scholarly historical sermon. That same evening, an historical service was held, the addresses being given by the Rev. Hamilton Schuyler, Litt. D., rector of Trinity Church, Trenton, and Professor William Starr Myers, of Princeton University, the latter a member of the vestry of St. Michael's. Bishop Matthews was present and pronounced the benediction.

On Tuesday evening a parish dinner was held at the Hotel Stirling, at which Hon. Newton A. K. Bugbee, Comptroller of the State of New Jersey, and senior warden of the parish, was toastmaster. Addresses were made by Hon. A. Harry Moore, Governor of New Jersey, Bishop-Coadjutor Albion W. Knight, and the Rev. Samuel Steinmetz, rector of the parish.

St. Michael's has shown marked progress in recent years under the able and consecrated efforts of its rector, Mr. Steinmetz, who has put new life into all branches of its activities. A "down town" parish, it has had to meet all the problems of its situation, but has taken advantage of its opportunities, and its communicant list of about eight hundred, includes people of all types and all kinds of interests. Throughout all its long history the parish has remained steadfast in its advocacy of Protestant, evangelical and "low church" policies and belief, which is one of the secrets of its present remarkable vigor and healthfulness. It is one of the outstanding churches in the city of Trenton, and has every prospect of continued usefulness and prosperity. It is a worthy and loyal representative of the best of American life and religion.

W. S. M.

Balance Due.

This diocese told the National Council to expect from it for the year 1928, $60,000. Receipts to December 1, 1928, are recorded as $49,142.58. This leaves a balance due of $10,857.42.

Personal Notes

The Rev. A. J. Wilder, formerly rector of St. Alban's, Highland Park, Mich., has joined the staff of the National Cathedral in Washington, D. C. Mr. Wilder came to Michigan from the Diocese of Marquette in 1920.

The Rev. Francis A. Gray, assistant at Old Trinity Church, Philadelphia, has accepted a call to the St. John's Church, Kingsville, Md. Mr. Gray, in addition to his new charge, also will have charge of Trinity Mission at Long Green, Md. The change will be effective January 1.

The Rev. George S. McKinley, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wissahickon, Pa., has resigned as rector of that parish to become rector of St. Mark's Church, Honeybrook, Chester County, Pa., with oversight of St. John's Church at Compass, the change to be effective December 31.

Mr. Frederic M. P. Pearse, of Metuchen, N. J., has been elected Secretary of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of New Jersey, in place of Canon Lewis, whose resignation takes effect December 10, 1928.

The Rev. Moultrie Guerry, of Hagood, S. C., who was elected Chaplain in November to succeed the Rev. Raimundo deOvies, has accepted the election. He will assume his duties as Chaplain at the beginning of the Epiphany Term, January 3, 1929. At the time his decision was made Mr. Guerry had before him a call as Student-Chaplain at another university and also a call to a strategic parish. Being by birth and eduaction a "Sewanee man", he could not but respond to the claims of his Alma Mater.

C. L MARSILLIOT

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
Exchange Building
MEMPHIS, TENN.

My Dear Friends:

The fact of the success of our petition to the General Convention of the Church, asking it to vote down the resolution to do away with the Articles of Religion, is fresh in your mind.

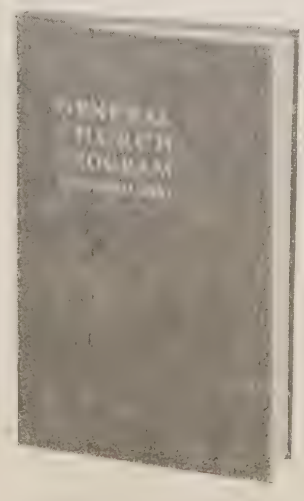
During the General Convention three meetings were held by Protestant Episcopalians, gathered at the Convention, for the purpose of considering what was to be done to check the disruption being spread in the Church by the "Anglo-Catholic," or Romanizing Party. At these meetings addresses were made by able laymen, representing practically every section of the country. All agreed that the contest is really just beginning, and that, unless Protestant Episcopalians organize promptly for the defense of the Constitution, doctrine and worship of the Church, control of it will soon pass into the hands of the "Anglo-Catholics," inevitably followed by either a split or gradual disintegration.

The correctness of that conclusion is demonstrated by the announcement of "Anglo-Catholic" Clergy, in their Church papers, that they decline to be bound by the legislation of any Convention in which the laity have the veto power. That announcement by the "Anglo-Catholic" Clergy raises the flag of anarchy and rebellion in the Church, just as the same party has done in the English Church, which is now on the verge of disruption. It is either organize NOW and make it plain that the Romanizing program will not be tolerated in this Church or surrender.

It was determined at these meetings to form a National organization. The name of the National Church League, with seven thousand members, of which Professor E. E. Sperry, of Syracuse University, is President, was changed to "The Protestant Episcopal Church League," and this already existing organization is to be expanded.

Letters are daily reaching me from every section offering to affiliate with the League, and it is evident that the time has arrived when the people in the pews feel that a responsibility rests upon them to take action NOW.

The thirty-four thousand (34,000) signatures to the petition are being copied, and as soon as this is completed a circular letter, stating the purposes of the organization, will be forwarded to every signer, with request that he or she become a member of the League. To cover the cost of copying the signatures, printing the circular letter, envelopes, postage and clerical work, a fund of $2,500.00 will be necessary, and contributions to this fund are now being received. Any help that you can give in raising this fund will be used solely for the purpose above indicated. The Executive Committee of the League, consisting of busy men, is giving freely of its time and effort to the cause.



Remittances, payable to Rev. Alexander G. Cummins, Treasurer, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., may be forwarded to him or to me.

You are too well aware of the danger facing the Church to require any further statement of the situation.

Faithfully yours,
C. L. MARSILLIOT.

The GENERAL CHURCH PROGRAM

This is the title of a book published by the National Council of the Episcopal Church. It is not a catchy title. It is not calculated to aid book store sales. It is simply a label for a book that is packed with information that every Churchman needs.

In terse phrase, condensed style, compact form, it brings a vivid picture of what this Church is doing, and where, and how and what it all costs.

It will be read first, because it is intrinsically interesting and readable; then it will be studied because of its down-to-date facts about fields far and near; finally it will become a valued reference book, to be used for the answering of questions and disposing of difficulties as they arise from time to time.

At Washington a clergyman said: "It's the World Almanac of the Church." It is that, and more.

First issued at General Convention. Revised following the Convention. Figures throughout the book are those adopted officially by the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies.

A PRAYER FOR THE UNITY OF GOD'S PEOPLE.

O God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, our only Saviour, the Prince of Peace; Give us grace seriously to lay to heart the great dangers we are in by our unhappy divisions. Take away all hatred and prejudice, and whatsoever else may hinder us from godly union and concord; that as there is but one Body and one Spirit, and one hope of our calling, one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of us all, so we may be all of one heart and of one soul, united in one holy bond of truth and peace, of faith and charity, and may with one mind and one mouth glorify Thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

This is the sum which must be collected in December by the Dioceses for the work of the General Church in order to balance the budget.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For the maintenance of the work of the General Church in 1928, General Convention approved a Budget of | | $4,212,370 |
| General Convention told the National Council to adjust appropriations yearly to meet expected income. In February, 1928, the National Council reduced appropriations under this "Pay-as-You-Go" Plan by the sum of | | 237,924 |
| This left net appropriations at | | 3,974,446 |
| The National Council estimated that it would be able to save during the year on these appropriations because of vacancies in the staff and other savings, the sum of | | 250,000 |
| This leaves the estimated expenses of the National Council for the year 1928 at | | 3,724,446 |
| Toward these expenses the Council will have from interest on its endowment funds and from the United Thank Offering of the women of the Church an amount estimated at | $702,370 | |
| The Council appropriated to meet the 1928 expenses the surplus of income from 1926 | 62,990 | |
| The Council appropriated to meet the 1928 expenses from unused Contingent Fund of 1926 and 1927 | 80,000 | |
| The Council expects from gifts not applicable to quota and from other sources the sum of | 75,000 | |
| This gives a total of income other than gifts on the quotas of | | 920,360 |
| The Council therefore needs from the Dioceses to meet its estimated expenditures | | 2,804,086 |
| When making reductions in appropriations in February, 1928, the Council provided for an estimated surplus for the year of | | 5,275 |
| There is thus needed from the Dioceses to balance the Budget for 1928 | | $2,809,361 |

Note: This is the exact amount which the Dioceses told the Council it might expect to receive during the year.

| The Dioceses have paid to December 1st | 2,003,578 |

The Christmas spirit and its manifestation in action can be ours only when we follow the order and practice the message of the angel song: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good will." To do this is to realize the gracious provision of the Divine love for ourselves and others in a widening sweep that will eventually embrace the whole human race.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Prayer is the intensest activity of which the spirit of man is capable.

"Common sense and religion make a combination hard to beat!"

If one is to have flowers in the garden of his soul he must do his own digging and planting.—Rev. Wm. Porkess, D. D.

The beautiful thing about life is that no matter how lowly our place, it is in the King's sight.—Margaret E. Sangster.

The Christian life, supported and sustained by love, is a joyous life—divinely and unfailingly joyous. And it has a curious alchemy of its own. It gives "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness".—Dean Gresham.

Be Thou the shade on my right hand,
When in my strength I stand alone;
And when in night I lose the land,
Be Thou my Star, my guiding One.

When the year of life is ending,
When the Watchnight hour has come,
May our souls to heaven ascending,
Find the New Year's welcome home!
—L. Shorey.

Words fail us when we begin to describe God's goodness to us. How could we put into words what the promises of Christ have meant to us? What a note of confidence has been put in our lives ever since we appropriated them! Are our lives as serene as theirs should be to whom God's Word has been pledged?—B. T. Bailey.

Love has done the grandest things the world has ever known, and is still doing them. Where judgment may be generous, love is lavish; where judgment is cautious in conclusions, love is heroic.—Dr. Peter Forsyth.

Teach Thou, and we shall know indeed
The truth divine that maketh free;
And knowing, we may sow the seed
That blossoms thro' eternity.
—Richard Watson Gilder.

Even blessings that have been promised have to be waited for. Our time of desiring a promised blessing is not always God's time of giving it. Yet it will come just when it is best for our good and God's glory. Therefore, the inspired reminder comes to us: "Ye have need of patience, that, having done the will of God, ye may receive the promise." —Henry Clay Trumbull.

Behold the Lamb! In Bethlehem's manger lowly,
His heavenly might and majesty put by.
The royal herald of His Advent holy
Was joyous angels' song from out the sky.
What brings this Holy One to dwell among us?
(This One whom angels worship—the Divine)
Whose need hath called Him to His Incarnation?
O brethren of all lands, 'twas yours and mine.
—Clara Armbruster.

1929

All we know of the year to begin next Tuesday is of certain large and regular operations of nature, decreed and established by the Creator. We know to the fraction of a minute when the sun will appear and disappear each day of the three hundred and sixty-five, when the gleam of the pale, lovely crescent of the new moon will shine in the darkness of the great dome above us and the broad, beautiful light of the full moon will come; the times for high tide and low tide everywhere on this planet. Sun and moon and stars and this earth of our's hold serenely to their courses, swing to their appointed orbits,

"Forever singing as they shine
The hand that made us is Divine", unchanging. We know very vaguely of the origin and moving causes of what we call "disturbances", the hurricanes and storms, cyclones, tidal waves, floods, valcanoes earthquakes, that may come unforeseen and unheralded and make havoc. Whence and how they come are beyond our present knowledge. We may not know whether, nor where, nor when, they will come in this year before us. Cold and delayed, or excessively hot springs, chilly or blistering summers, winters too warm for health, or bitter and unduly protracted, come upon us, bring weal or woe, wealth or ruin. We cannot surely foresee nor calculate. Always it has been so. Disasters befall the best, as in the time of Job, benefits are gathered by the best and the worst, rain is sent on the just and the unjust. The fool complacently congratulates himself on his stuffed barns, the diligent and sagacious find their anxious labor and thought brought to naught by drought or tempest.

The soul lifted among the stars, trusting always to the loving intercession of the Saviour and the guidance and mercy of Jehovah, is sure of nothing but its redemption and its destination. It knows. It knows as the last glimpse of light fades from the eyes and sense that there will be resurrection and a sun of beautiful and endless light and peace and undisturbed happiness to rise after the shadow and darkness and pangs of death. It cannot foresee, even for one hour of any of the twenty-four of the oncoming days of this new year what joy or sorrow, success or failure, disaster or blessing, may be near. The best we can do in our daily work and affairs is to act and think on precedents and the probabilities based on them. That is the highest and the only sagacity we have for our work and business. We cannot know results of our most valiant labor or careful planning. Unforeseen disturbances from unknown and unsuspected sources may sweep away our most faithfully built foundations, blight our dearest hopes. Some of us will know that bitterness in the coming year, just as to some of us will come blessings and helps unlooked for, and we may see given to the unworthy prosperity and power. These are the vicissitudes, the mysteries, the happenings, of our life here, inexplicable to our mortal understanding and philosophies as are the causes of the storms that overwhelm communities and destroy strong ships, the earthquakes that wreck massive and splendid buildings and the volcanoes and lava streams that devastate smiling and prosperous regions. But the eternal promises of God abide. Surely as the sun will rise and set tomorrow and the moon at her appointed time show her crescent and her glorious full effulgence, so will God reward with a crown of light those who are faithful. This we know at the beginning of the year as some of us will find it gloriously true between now and January, 1930.

To those who are faithful, not to those who are successful. For those who are faithful and win and for those who in the strife and complexities and myysterious orderings of our life here lose in the struggle for place and prominence and earthly eminence the same crowns of glory and everlasting rewards await, just beyond.

This coming year promises now to be one of the greatest and most fruitful of all the years since the beginning. None of us may know what any hour or day of it may bring to us individually or as communities. We can but hope and calculate on the precedents, the probabilities and the possibilities. We surely know that if fervently and reverently we do what we see to be our duty here, from hour to hour, from day to day, we will earn and receive bountiful and undying recompense. It promises to be a fruitful and memorable year in the history of mankind. It may bring us establishment of world-wide peace and good will. It may bring to our country a glory and beauty never before granted to any country—dominance in power and strength applied to promote security and well-being for the masses of all peoples. It may bring swift progress toward Christian unity. In it a great evangelizing crusade by our own Church, demanding the zealous cooperation and personal labor of every member, may be organized and led on to glorious results surpassing all precedent. What of joy or sorrow, triumph or defeat, success or failure, may come to us as individuals and communities is uncertain, often as remote from our control and direction as the course and velocity of the wind, changes of temperature, variations of rainfall. These are obedient to laws and purposes of which we know little or nothing. Whether they help or hurt us, whether the blight that impoverishes one district or country or person enriches others, is beyond us. The really great and lasting things are sure—regeneration, purification, the uplifting of our souls if we honestly strive and pray, eternal life and happiness by the sacrifice of the Saviour, devoutly trusted, are promises of the Almighty and Eternal God, certain as the movements of the planets in the firmament. These promises we will have with us surely.

For promotion of the vast hopes for mankind and the extension of God's Kingdom the new year seems to promise each of us can do something, as Church people and as citizens, striving always to give to the common cause our very best thought and most generous help, trusting and praying for blessing on each earnest effort, however small and feeble it may appear to our perceptions. We may know no more of what large and far-reaching good our work will do than we may know the source of all the good or harm that comes to us.

In retrospection of the year gone let us gather from our sorrows the sweet fruit of brave resignation, from failures and disappointments lessons and stimulation for the future, from our triumphs, successes and blessings humility and gratitude and solemn determination to try to be more worthy of them. Let us go, then, into the new year cleansing and strengthening our hearts and with aspiring and serene souls, prepared to meet valiantly whatever of ill and to accept gratefully whatever of good the passing days may bring. Let us begin it understanding that we may not assure ourselves, even by utmost and most careful endeavor, prosperity and comfort and exemption from disaster and distress here, but knowing that if we be faithful from hour to hour and day to day, we will have done our parts and assured attainment of ultimate rewards of which no vicissitude of earthly affairs can deprive us. In all the changes and chances of this mortal life our hearts may surely there be fixed where alone true joy is found. And if we be faithful, God surely will bless us every one.

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA

Alfred B. Williams

THE NINTH CONVENTION.

The ninth General Convention was in New York, May 20, 1817. Bishop Seabury was dead, but seven bishops, all then in the country, attended. North Carolina proved compliance with ecclesiastical requirements, the Church there giving distinct signs of new life, and was admitted to representation. South Carolina submitted a proposal for establishment of a general theological seminary. It was negatived by the lay and clerical delegates, apparently because a movement for such an institution already had begun in New York. A committee to consider the subject and report at the next Convention was appointed, consisting of six members of the House of Clerical and Lay Delegates and two bishops. At this Convention the first definite appeal to the Church for missionary work in the new Western States and territories and on the fast widening frontiers was made. The bishops issued a pastoral letter urging abstinence from certain worldly amusements, including gaming, sports involving cruelty to animals—presumably cock-fighting and dog-fighting, both then popular—and attendance at licentious plays at theatres. Changes in canons, unimportant now, were considered and completed.

THE TENTH CONVENTION.

The tenth General Convention was in St. James' Church, Philadelphia, May 16 to 24, 1824. Eight of the nine bishops were present. Bishop Moore, of Virginia, preached the opening sermon. Bishop White presided in the House of Bishops and the Rev. Dr. Richard Wilmer, of Virginia, in the lower House. The District of Maine was received as member of the ecclesiastical union. The most important subject considered was establishment of a theological seminary. It was decided that the seminary should be established at New Haven and that those who had subscribed money for it with understanding that it should be in New York be relieved from obligation to pay. A constitution for a society for domestic and foreign missions, with headquarters in Philadelphia, was presented, amended and sanctioned, but "in the haste of adjournment", Bishop White records, several material errors were made, requiring postponement of the organization to the next Convention. Resolutions were adopted for gathering and preserving all journals and records of previous Conventions obtainable.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted By Rev. Frank Cox

The Uniqueness of Evangelism.

EVANGELISM is different from every other movement in the Church, in that it cannot be learned out of a book but must be perfected in actual practice. All else may deal with the outward largely, but Evangelism can never be divorced from the inner life of our people. There is a simplicity about it that is deceptive. The aim of course is to bring men to Christ, and the ease with which the words can be said cause some to forget the real problems connected with it.

We have become so accustomed to send out literature on every subject under the sun that we are in danger of making this movement a work of literature alone and may take it all out in leaflets. We heard a clergyman the other day tell of a mission that had been held in his parish. He said that over sixty people had signed decision cards, but that not one was to be found in church a few weeks later. He asked if there were not some literature on the subject that would assist in such a case. The leader of the conference had been so accustomed to this way of dealing with things that he immediately suggested several pamphlets that they had on hand. We are not here criticising individuals, but are pointing out the blinding effect of conventional methods. The trouble was not with the supply of literature. Tons of it would not have remedied the defect in that case. One book alone—the New Testament—contained all that was needed. A shepherd that needs a book of directions to find a stray sheep, particularly when that sheep has already given some indication that it would like to come home needs far more than literature can supply. His need can be expressed in one word—conversion.

In each case failure in Evangelism can be traced back to the same cause. A correct diagnosis is of prime importance in any disease. When a parish does not evangelize the need is for conversion, either in minister or in people and often in both. So to bring men to Christ we need Christ. Nothing will take His place, not learning, or astuteness, or personal popularity, without Christ you cannot touch men. That is so elemental that many cannot see it. That is because they do not believe that Christ, not an idea about Christ, not the teaching of Christ, but that Christ Himself in Person can be present in your life. They may believe that a faint aroma of His life clings to the buildings in which we worship, or that something of His influence will still be exerted over lives that come in contact with His teaching, but they are too atheistic to believe that Christ Himself dwells in the heart of the convert.

Christ does not dwell in the unyielded heart, and that is the explanation of their atheism. It is also the explanation of the failure to evangelize. Before we can hope to have real Evangelism, we must blast out some of the stumps that stand in the way. To be concrete—if a choir is rent by factions, that choir cannot lead men to Christ by its singing. If a Christian cherishes hatred or resentment, then his life will be powerless. If a clergyman envies the positions of another cleric, and desires a place that will bring him selfish advantage, he cannot lead any one to Christ. These examples give only hints of what the problem of Evangelism includes. The difficulties are great but we must learn that Christ is sufficient. He can meet the personal need, as the worker, defeated and discouraged comes to Him for help. "If the Son shall make you free, you shall be free indeed." He is enough for the needs of the parish and of the world. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." Failure in Evangelism is failure to lift up Christ. Success comes to those who "put on Christ".

BELIEF IN THE RESURRECTION AND FUTURE LIFE AS FOUND IN THE OLD TESTAMENT

By B. A. M. Schapiro

Managing Director, Hebrew-Christian Publication Society,

405 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

GREAT religious bodies in the United States have recorded strong declarations and earnest pleas for Christian unity. All sincere Christians pray that this may come. A forward step even more gigantic toward fulfillment of the proclaimed purposes and promises of God and His Holy and Loving Son will be taken when, sooner or later, all Christian churches are awakened to the indisputable facts of the present and of ancient history and unite in cordial, persistent invitation to the Jews, now numbering more than four millions in this country, to enter the fold of the Good Shepherd, assured of wholehearted welcome as honored and loved brethren. There is joy in Heaven over one penitent sinner. The soul of the zealous Christian must thrill with awed exultation at thought of the hosannas resounding and reverberating through the firmament if the chosen and loved people of God were flocking by the million to worship the Son of God whom they have so long rejected and neglected.

If the Jews are to be taught and induced to respect and then to accept and finally to love Christianity, Christians must learn to respect and understand and accept the Jews.

All candid and clear-minded Christians concede that they owe a duty to the Jews, realize that if the intense spiritual life, the powerful intelligence, the noble loyalties and the virile instincts of the Jews were glorified and inspired and purified by faith in Christ as the Messiah and fidelity to His teachings the happiness and the value to humanity of the race would be immeasurably multiplied. Yet, prejudices born of errors and errors born of prejudices, maintain old barriers. The Jew is denied his rightful place in history, his just title to the world's gratitude, recognition of the truth that he kept intact and strong the foundation principles on which the faith and work and glorious hope of the Messiah are established. To those foundations the Jew has held through centuries of vicissitudes and changing dominances and deities and of nations. The obstructing errors and prejudices, growths and inheritances from long successions of generations, must be corrected and removed, one by one, with patient, diligent presentation of evidence to refute what is false and establish what is true, "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, there a little"; so we may convince and arouse.

One widely held, deeply implanted error, lingering vaguely in many Christian minds is that the Old Testament, with its chronicle, history and picture of the Jews, gives little or no support, to our faith in the immortality of the soul and the resurrection, the supremely comforting, uplifting, ennobling assurance of eternal life and bliss in a life to come after the stilling of the heart within the body. Even from pulpits we hear, and in Gentile Christian books on theology read, that the Old Testament Scriptures give us no promises, no warnings or decrees of punishment, but those applying in this world, ignore the future state after physical dissolution and say nothing of the resurrection. This impression that the Old Testament contains no mention of the blessed hope of future life has become general and manifestations of it are startling and depressing to those who strive to know the Holy Bible as it is and to absorb its meanings.

Some years ago a congress of the Episcopal Church, sitting in the Synod House at Cathedral Heights, New York, debated seriously a proposition that the first lesson, from the Old Testament, be omitted from the regular Sunday service. It was urged that the early history of the Jewish people, with its successive intensities of interest, its throngs of admonitions and guiding instances, its warning tragedies, inspiring narratives, glorious poetry and wonderful style and language—making the basis for the best of all English literature—be banished from Christian churches, withheld from the hearing of Christian congregations. The majority of this congress was not willing to take that long backward step toward darkness, but favored abbreviation of the Old Testament reading. Bishop Burch, who confirmed me, did me the honor to ask my opinion. And through his influence I was allowed five minutes in which to try to express my thoughts and emotions. Among other reasons against the shortening of the Old Testament lessons, I told them a story:

"A certain negro boy suddenly became sick and his mammy sent for a physician, the physician, after examining and diagnosing the case told his mother, 'It is a case of too much watermelon'. 'No, no,' replied his mother, 'it is too little of boy'."

The almost endless array of facts and quotations from the sacred records which would secure a quick verdict of "not guilty" from any jury before which the Jews of old might be on trial for disbelief in the resurrection and the future life could not be introduced in five minutes. I can offer but part of it here. The subject has lived in my mind very actively and prominently and I feel that it is a duty to ask attention to the truth that the thoughtful, being reminded of it, may be brought to see clearly the spiritual kinship of Christian and Jew.

The word "resurrection" is not in the Old Testament. The meaning and promise of it are found there constantly. Certainly St. Peter knew whereof he spoke when he quoted from the sixteenth psalm of David, patriarch and prophet, a vivid passage as meaning promise of the resurrection. Nowhere in the Old Testament is physical death spoken of as extinction or the end. The sweet, wooing word "sleep" is used to tell of the going from this life—"sleep", with its joyous implication of waking presently refreshed, or to the light of a new day. In many respects the phraseologies of the Old and New Testaments differ widely, but regarding what we call death and existence after it they are much alike and their significances are exactly the same. Our Lord and His disciples tell us of death as sleep and of waking from it.

We are told, in the Old Testament, of David and Solomon and other kings and leaders of Israel, when they died, that they slept with their fathers. The prophet Daniel, speaking of the dead, describes them as "they sleep in the dust of the earth". In the New Testament, Christ, telling His disciples of the death of Lazarus, said: "Lazarus sleepeth." St. Paul speaks of the dead Christians as those who "sleep in Jesus". In both Old and New Testaments the resurrection is described as waking from sleep. Daniel says "they that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake".

David, in his prayer psalm, the seventeenth, immediately following that from which St. Peter quoted, and of which more shall be said herein, tells his confident and grateful faith in his own resurrection, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in the likeness". Christ, on His way to raise Lazarus, said: "I go that I may awake him."

This uniformity of language proves beyond possible doubt uniformity of faith and doctrine regarding the resurrection and the future life. Patriarchs and prophets and kings of the old dispensation went to sleep with their fathers holding the same hope that is gloriously confirmed in the Gospel. Jacob, approaching death, said: "I shall sleep with my fathers." Abraham and Moses, we are told, slept and were gathered to their fathers. Obviously, this could not mean proximity of the bodies. Abraham left the land of his fathers and went to Canaan and was buried in the cave of Machpelah. Jacob was buried there also, apparently because of repugnance to have his body rest in Egypt; and Moses was commanded to go up into the mount and die there and be "gathered unto thy people", very far from the burial place of his ancestors, in a sepulchre which no man knoweth.

St. Paul, in the eleventh chapter of the epistle to the Hebrews, reviews, briefly, the story of the faith of the race, led from place to place, but sure always that the promises of Jehovah meant far more than temporal blessings or prosperity and were for a home and life after the wandering should have ceased and the last earthly sleep. By faith, St. Paul wrote, Abraham and Isaac and Jacob looked for a city "whose builder and maker is God". All Jews, except the Sadducees, who in more than a thousand years had won but small following, believed there would be general resurrection of the dead at the coming of the Messiah. Is it not time now for them to share the Christian faith that the resurrection and the second coming of the Messiah are to be at a time and in ways hidden from us for the mysterious purposes of an All-Wise and All-Merciful Creator?

The fact that the Sadducees are described particularly as believing not in the resurrection of the dead is incidental but conclusive evidence that they were a sect apart, differing in belief from the mass of the Jewish people. These Sadducees were exact types of an element familiar to us now, the self-established intellectuals, professionally superior persons, looking down with scorn on the common herd, seeking distinction by being peculiar. They had cloudy codes, doctrines and theories of their own. The Pharisees, trusting for salvation on compliance with the most minute requirements of moral and canonical law while omitting the weightier matters of mercy, judgment and faith, yet inherited from their forefathers and clung to the belief in the resurrection and future life.

Sadducees, Pharisees and bigoted, vain-glorious high priests, jealous of all that threatened their influence, inflated and blinded by vanity and belief in their own importance and infallibility, held coldly aloof from all that did not fit with their narrow philosophies and small prejudices, were cynically distrustful of and instinctively hostile to every endeavor to enlighten them and persuade them that all wisdom and virtue were not concentrated in themselves. They used their official and social power and influence to turn the masses of the Jews against Christ. It is a fearful thought that in this day some of our teachers and leaders, obeying like unworthy impulse, may be turning the masses of followers of Christ against the Jews. I happened once to be with a Bible class of adults, intelligent men and women, some of them college graduates, studying "The Greeks seeking Christ". The explanation given by the teacher was "The Greeks sought to take Jesus away with them to their own country because their people were more capable of appreciating His exalted spiritual teaching".

Such teaching is strangely audacious defiance and disregard of sacred and profane history which should be familiar to all. It was at Thessalonica, not at Jerusalem, that Paul's preaching of the resurrection was mocked at. It was at Jerusalem, not in Greece, that on the day of Pentecost devout and loving and faithfully loyal, spiritually-minded Jews, gathered "out of every nation under Heaven" to their Holy City to observe the Passover, were baptized to the number of three thousand. Nowhere is there record of viler or more hideously indecent orgies than those attending Greek worship of degraded deities. Four centuries before Christ Socrates was driven to his death for preaching doctrines of human elevation, far less revolutionary and spiritual than those of Christ. And Plato could command no following for his ideal Republic. Perhaps it was the belief in the resurrection and the future life—not of sensual enjoyments nor in companionship of the infernal gods—that gave the Jews, with all their faults and awful sins, a richer spiritual life than Greece or Rome. The Saviour was put to death by Jewish and Roman hands, the Roman part in the crime being cold-blooded, mercenary, lacking even the poor excuse of passion and resentment of disturbance of old beliefs and habits of thought. James and Stephen were slain by Jews, the others of the apostles, except John, murdered by Herod, killed remorselessly by Gentiles, Christians fed to the wild beasts in Roman amphitheatres for the amusement of shouting throngs, thousands of other Christians slaughtered with all the agony perverted ingenuity could devise.

Surely it is carelessness so dangerous and reprehensible as to be criminal to be exaggerating the old sins of the Jews while magnifying their heathen contemporaries and to attempt to deny the race that gave us the Saviour the spiritual insight and fidelity to faith that held it true to belief in the resurrection and eternal life.

The further the question of Jewish allegiance to belief in the resurrection is followed the more the evidence accumulates and strengthens. Christ, answering the trick enquiry of the Sadducees, evidently prearranged carefully with purpose to entrap and bewilder—just as our intellectuals of the present strive to confuse believers—quoted the direct promise and declaration of God to Moses, as told in the third chapter of Exodus—"I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob," adding, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living"—of the living where?

In the sixteenth psalm, already alluded to as quoted by St. Peter on the day of Pentecost, David says: "My flesh shall rest in hope. For thou will not leave my soul in Hell; neither wilt thou allow thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt show the path of life; in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore."

In the forty-ninth psalm, the instability of worldly riches and grandeur and the folly of dependence on them are told and then the psalmist exultantly sings of his own blessed hope—"But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for He shall receive me."

Isaiah, twenty-fifth chapter, in an outpouring of prayer and ecstatic praise of the abundant and tender Mercy and dreadful Power of God, declares: "He will swallow up death in victory." The original reads: "He shall utterly destroy death forever." Hosea, thirteenth chapter, says God will ransom His people "from the power of the grave", continuing, speaking the voice of the Almighty, "I will redeem them from death: oh, death, I will be thy plague; oh grave, I will be thy destruction".

Isaiah 26:19 wwe again find that one of the greatest of the Prophets believed in the Resurrection: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."

The faith of David was expressed not only in the psalms. In the twelfth chapter of Samuel we are told that when a tenderly loved, favorite child of the king died, the king, having fasted and prayed in vain, ceased from weeping when the fact of death was told him and told his servants: "Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."

The assurance of resurrection is expressed all through the Book of Job. In the fourteenth chapter he says: "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come. Thou shall call and I will answer thee; thou will have desire to the work of thine hands." The question is not indicative of doubt, but is an implied declaration of joyful admiration like that of Solomon in First Kings, chapter eight, "But will God indeed dwell on the earth?"

Finally—Every member of the Episcopal Church over whose body the solemnly beautiful services of the Church are said, goes to his grave from recital of the ever comforting, inspiring, triumphant proclamation of the faith of the ancient Jewish patriarch, Job, distinct as words can be made, telling of his knowledge of the resurrection:

"I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and although after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; Whom I shall see for myself, and not another."

"God Hath Visited His People"

William Olney.

He did, in Egypt, when its bondage sore
His people bore;
And set them free,
Drowning their tyrants in th' o'erwhelming sea.
He came again in the bare wilderness,
And hungry Israel did with Manna bless.
Again, in cloud, He filled the Temple Courts,
Where none but the anointed priest resorts.
He visited His people in His Son—
The gracious words, and mighty wonders done.
At Pentecost His own He visited
With fiery tongues crowned each disciple's head.
Again He visited His people, when
To preach the Word, He raised up faithful men.
When Error stole the true Faith from our Nation,
God visited His Church with Reformation.
Again, in darkest hour,
Our God has come with His Revival power.
O Thou Whose work is Sovereign,
Come Thou and reign
Within Thy Church with Grace Divine,
And, from Her Centre, shine
In beams of Saving Mercy, through the World,
That Doubt, and Darkness, from their seats be hurled.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. E. A. Robertson, of Chelsea, S. C.:

> "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. 3:18).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

ROBERT E. LEE

By the Late John W. Daniel, LL. D.

1863—Chancellorsville.

WITH the dawn of spring in 1863, a replenished army with a fresh commander, "Fighting Joe Hooker", renews the onset by way of Chancellorsville, and finds Lee with two divisions of Longstreet's corps absent in Southeast Virginia. But slender as are his numbers, Lee is ever aggressive; and while Hooker, with "the finest army on the planet", as he styled it, is confronting Lee near Chancellorsville, and Early is holding Sedgwick at bay at Fredericksburg, Jackson, who, under Lee's directions, has stealthily marched around him, comes thundering in his rear, and alas! for "Fighting Joe", he can only illustrate his pugnacious soubriquet by the consoling reflection that "He who fights and runs away,

May live to fight another day", for Chancellorsville shines high on the list of Confederate victories, and indeed, was one of the grandest victories that ever blazoned the annals of war.

The Fall of Stonewall Jackson.

But alas! too, for the victor—on May 2, in the culminating act of the drama, Jackson himself had fallen, and never more is the "foot calvary" to see again along the smoking lines that calm, stern face; never to hear again that crisp, fierce order, "Give them the bayonet!" which so often heralded the triumphant charge; never is the Southern land to be thrilled again with his familiar bulletin—"God blessed our arms with victory." At the age of thirty-nine—at a time of life when the powers of manhood are ordinarily scarce full-orbed, he has touched the zenith, and filled the world with his fame; and he went forth two years before from this quiet town, scarce known beyond it, comes back upon the soldier's bier, renowned, revered, and mourned in every clime where the heart quickens in sympathy for surpassing valor, united with transcendent genius and honor without a stain. There he sleeps, in yon green grave, and as in life he fought, so in death he rests with Lee.

Winchester and Gettysburg.

But not long can the soldier pause to weep. We fire our salute over the ashes of our heroic dead; and again the bugles sound "boots and saddles" and the long roll is beating. Less than a month has passed, and again the Army of Northern Virginia is in motion, and while Hooker is groping around to ascertain the whereabouts of his adversary, the next scene unfolds. General Early has planned and executed a flank march around Winchester, worthy of Stonewall Jackson, the men of his division are mounting the parapets on June 14, and capturing Milroy's guns. General Edward Johnston's division is pursuing Milroy's fugitives down the Valley pike. General Rodes has captured Martinsburg, with one hundred prisoners and five cannons; Ewell's corps is master of the Valley, and by June 24, the Army of Northern Virginia is in Pennsylvania, while for the third time the Army of the Potomac is glad if it can interpose to prevent the fall of Washington, and a sixth commander has come to its head—General George C. Meade.

Then follows the boldest and grandest assault of modern war—the charge upon the Federal centre entrenched on the heights of Gettysburg—a charge that well-nigh ended the war with "a clap of thunder", and was so characterized by brave design and dauntless execution that friend and foe alike burst into irrepressible praise of the great commander who directed and of the valorous men who made it. It failed. But Lee, unshaken, rallies the broken lines, and the next morning stands in steady array, flaunting his banners defiantly, and challenging renewal of the strife. "It is all my fault," he says. Not so thought his men. We saw him standing by the roadside with his bridle rein over his arm, on the second day afterwards, as the army was withdrawing. Pickett's division filed past him; every General of the Brigade had fallen, and every field-officer of its regiment; a few tattered battle-flags and a few hundred men were all that was left of the magnificent body of 5,000 strong, who had made the famous charge. He stood with uncovered head, as if he reviewed a conquering host, and with the conqueror's look upon him. With proud step the men marched by, and as they raised their hats and cheered him there was the tenderness of devoted love, mingled with the fire of battle, in their eyes.

Returning to Virginia in martial trim and undismayed, and followed by Meade with that slow and gingerly step which is self-explaining, we next behold our General displaying that rare self-poise and confidence which bespeaks ever a great quality—firmness of mind in war. In September, while he confronts Meade along the Rapidan, he detaches the entire corps of Longstreet, and ere Meade is aware of this weakening of his opponent's forces, Longstreet is nine hundred miles away, striking a terrible blow at Chickamauga.

The year 1863 passes by without other significant event in the story of the Army of Northern Virginia. Meade indeed, once in November, deployed his lines along Mine Run in seeming overtures of battle, but quickly concluded that "discretion was the better part of valor", he marched back across the Rappahannock, content with his observations.

1864—Wilderness, Spotsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Lynchburg.

But as the May blossoms in 1864, we hear once more the wonted strain of spring, "tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching", and Grant (who had succeeded Meade), crossing the Rappahannock with 141,000 men, plunges boldly into the Wilderness on May 4, leading the sixth crusade for the reduction of Richmond. But scarce had he disclosed his line of march, than Lee, with 50,000 of his braves, springs upon him and hurls him back, staggering and gory, through the tangled chapparal of the Wilderness, and from the fields of Spotsylvania; and though the redoubtable Grant writes to the Government on May 12: "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer"; when we look over the field of Cold Harbor on June 3, we see there, stretched in swaths and piled in reeking mounds 13,000 of his men—the killed and wounded of his last assault "in the overland campaign". And when Grant ordered his lines to attack again the flinty front of Lee, they stood immobile, in silent protest against the vain attempt, and in silent eulogy of their sturdy foe. One summer month had been summer-time enough for Grant along that impervious line; and there at Cold Harbor practically closed the sixth expedition aimed directly at the Confederate Capital—McDowell, McClellan, Pope, Burnside, Hooker and now Grant—all being disastrously repulsed by the Army of Northern Virginia, and all but the first receiving their repulse by the army led by Lee. But Grant in some sort, veiled his reverses by immediately abandoning attack on the north side of the James, which he crossed in the middle of June, attempting to capture Petersburg on the south side by a coup de main. But in this, after four days' successive assaults, which ended in vain carnage, he failed again; and almost simultaneously Hunter's invasion through the Valley was intercepted and successfully repelled at Lynchburg by the swift and bold movements of Lee's greatest Lieutenant—the ever-to-be-counted-on Jubal A. Early, who had been dispatched to meet him with a force not half his equal in numbers. And when midsummer came, Grant was glad to shelter his drooping banners behind entrenchments; Hunter was flying to the mountains of West Virginia, and detachments were hurrying from the Army of the Potomac to save Washington, which was trembling at the sound of Early's guns. In that wonderful campaign of Lee from the Wilderness to Petersburg, Grant had lost not less than 70,000 men in reaching a point which he might have gained by river approaches without the loss of one. Every man in the Army of Northern Virginia had more than stricken down a foeman; and final demonstration had been given to the fact that in field fight, Lee could not be matched in generalship, and that the Army of Northern Virginia was invincible. This fact the hard sense of Grant recognized; and though no commander who felt himself and his men to be the equals of their adversaries in manoeuvre and combat would ever come down to such conclusion, it is creditable to Grant's plain, matter-of-fact way of looking at things, that he looked at them just as they were. And so he resorted to sap and mine and pick and spade to do the work which strategy and valor had so often essayed in vain. For nine months the armies lay before the muzzles of each other's guns—bumping, as it were, against each other—Grant deliberately counting that he who had the most heads could butt the longest. Thus Lee stood with less than 40,000 men covering a line of thirty miles, while Grant, with more than three times that number, over and over again at Ream's Station, at the Crater, at Hatcher's Run and other points, battered the armor from which every blow recoiled. So Lee stood with a half-fed and half-clothed soldiery, composed largely of stripling youth and failing age, beating back his three-fold foe, freshly recruited for every fresh assault, and generously provided with the richest stores and most approved arms and munitions of war.

Time forbids that I prolong the story; and this imperfect sketch is but a dim outline of that grand historic picture in which Robert Lee will ever stand as the foremost figure, challenging and enchanting the reverence and admiration of mankind—the faint suggestion of that magnificent career which has made for him a place on the heights as high as warrior's sword has ever carved.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

1 SAMUEL.

Purpose.

THE PURPOSE for which 1 Samuel was written for us is to teach us how the Lord as High Priest, Prophet and King would lead not only us, as members of His Church, but Israel also into the enjoyment of God's blessings in Christ (Heb. 2:10-18).

This book reveals the causes of failure on the part of God's people, then and now, to realize the help and blessing of God, and to be made a blessing (Heb. 4:9, 10).

1. Chs. 1-2. There will never be failure on the part of our High Priest, because of who He is, what He has done, and is doing for us. He so delighted in the Father's will for us that He was willing to become a child like Samuel, in and through whom the Father could be revealed unto us (Heb. 7:25-28; Phil. 2:5-8; John 14:8-11; 2 Cor. 4:6).

The people of God are led into the enjoyment of our blessings in Christ, as the believer priests associated with Christ are faithful in the priestly ministry of prayer in behalf of one another (1 Peter 2:5, 9; Rev. 1:5, 6; Eph. 6:18; 2 Cor. 1:11; Rom. 8:26, 27; 15:30-32). Corruption in the priesthood of believers hinders the prayer life and results in defeat and sin on the part of God's people (1 John 3:21, 22; Ps. 68:18).

2. Chs. 3-4. God can reveal His will to those who have the mind of babes, like Christ, and through them He can make His pleasure known to His people, whose sins must be judged and put away before His blessings can be enjoyed (Matt. 11:25; Phil. 4:8-48; 1 John 1: 7-9).

3. Chs. 5-6. Even though God withholds the manifestation of His presence in blessing upon His children, because of their sins, yet His hand is seen in the righteous judgments that come upon the wicked, the enemies of God (Rom. 2:6-9; John 3:16).

4. Chs. 7-8. In spite of our Lord's faithfulness in teaching us to know God's will, as Samuel did unto Israel, many believers are determined to follow their own will or to have some leader, other than Christ, to guide them according to the mind of the flesh, in the ways of the world (Ps. 32:8; Heb. 13:5, 6, 8; Isa. 58:11; Rom. 12:1, 2; Jer. 17:5-8; 2 Tim. 4:3).

5. Chs. 9-15. Man's choice of a king instead of Christ, God's King, will be consummated in the choice of the Antichrist, Satan's king, of whom Saul was a type (2 Thess. 2:3-8; Rev. 13:1-8; Dan. 11:36; Ps. 2:6, 7).

Every choice of ours contrary to the will of God results in failure to enjoy His help and blessing (Amos 3:3; Rom. 1:10; 8:13).

6. Chs. 16-30. Though anointed of God and victor over Satan in the wilderness, Christ as David's Son and Lord learned obedience by the things which He suffered, and being made perfect, He became the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him (Heb. 5:8, 9).

As kings to rule with Christ in His coming kingdom, we are learning obedience in the school of persecution and suffering, in order that we may be kings after God's own heart (Rev. 1:6; Phil. 1:29; Heb. 12:6-11; 2 Tim. 2:12; 3:12; Rom. 8:17; 2 Cor. 4:17, 18).

7. Ch. 31. The shameful defeat of Saul and his sons is but a faint picture of the doom of the Antichrist and his followers (Rev. 19:20; 2 Thess. 2:8; Dan. 8:25; Ps. 1:5).

Shameful defeat is the sure portion of all who, like Saul, try to serve the Lord in their own way instead of God's way (Prov. 16:25; 1 Cor. 3:13-15).

SUNDAY AFTER CHRISTMAS

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

> Almighty God, who hast given us Thine only begotten Son, to take our nature upon Him, and as at this time to be born of a pure virgin; Grant that we, being regenerate, and made Thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by Thy Holy Spirit; through the same our Lord Jesus Christ, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the same Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

THE work of the triune God in our salvation is fully acknowledged here; the Incarnation of the Son, our adoption by God, our regeneration as His children by our Father's grace, and our daily renewal by the Holy Spirit. The first ascription to God the Father sets forth the great mystery of the Holy Incarnation.

The Incarnation is indeed a mystery, the mystery of mysteries, hopeless of solution by us finite beings. It is more fully described in the Nicene and Athanasian Creeds than in the Apostles'; but they bring us no better understanding of it. "Conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary," gives us as much insight into the mystery as the other Creeds, which multiply words, but not ideas, e. g., the "Quicunque vult": "Whosoever will be saved must believe rightly the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ. For the right faith is, that we believe and confess, that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and man, God of the substance of the Father; begotten before the worlds; and man of the substance of His mother, born in the world, perfect God and perfect man, of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting; equal to the Father as touching His Godhead, and inferior to the Father, as touching His manhood . . ."

"God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son" (St. John 3:16). This is all the explanation we can hope to get of the Holy Incarnation. Infinite love caused it, which we can no more grasp than infinity itself. Having this act of God in mind we can better appreciate the force of St. Paul's exaltation of charity (1 Cor. 13:13): "And now abideth these three, faith, hope, charity; but the greatest of these is charity."

THE Epistle for the Sunday after Christmas Day is Gal. 4:1-7. It dwells on our adoption as Sons of God, no longer bond-servants under law. There is no promise sweeter than this: "Because ye are sons, God hath sent the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying: Abba, Father."

No prayer in the Old Testament is addressed, "Father". We must wait till we get to Matt. 6:9, to be taught to use that sweet name; to address God not only as "Father", but as "Our Father". The Fatherhood of God! It is very difficult to take it in fully; but when fully realized it is the consummation and crown of the Christian pilgrimage. It could not be realized so fully by the Old Testament saints as by us under Christ's teaching. Himself, constantly approaching God as His Father, and teaching us so to regard Him in prayer, we learn to accept Him, and draw near to Him, in a way not open to those of the Old Testament dispensation, not even to such as Abraham and Moses; to Abraham, of whom Isaiah, speaking for God to Israel (Isaiah 41:8) says: "But thou, Israel, art the seed of Abraham, my friend; to Moses, to whom the Lord spake, 'face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend' "

(Ex. 33:11). But a friend, however near and dear, is far from being a father. The love of Damon and Pythias, of Orestes and Pylades, of David and Jonathan, fall far below the love that appeals so strongly to us in the parable of the Prodigal Son. If we would feel the full force of "Father" in the mouth of the Prodigal, we must substitute "Friend" for it. "Friend, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy friend." Such is our nearness to God, the Father, through Christ, in comparison with that of the Old Testament dispensation through the law and Levitic ritual. "Thanks be to God for His unspeakable gift" (2 Cor. 9:15). Jesus' recognition of His people as brethren, also shows their relation to God as their Father. Not only so, but He claims those who do the will of His Father in heaven as brother, and sister, and mother (Matt. 12:50); and after His Resurrection, in that mysterious bodily form, so wonderful, so transfigured, He yet claims such as brethren, sons of His Father; for He tells the women who "held Him by the feet, and worshipped Him", "Go, tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me" (Matt. 28:10); and again to Mary Magdalene, at the sepulchre (John 20:17): "Say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father, to my God and your God."

THE Gospel for this Sunday after Christmas is Matt. 1:18-25, his account of the Incarnation, and Birth of Jesus. Matthew and Luke give us all that we know of these. This miracle of the Virgin Birth of Jesus is to be distinguished from all the others connected with His Advent and ministry, by being the most difficult to prove, yet it is the most important of all, except His Resurrection; for if Jesus was not the Son of God, what becomes of the Atonement? The Son of God alone could accomplish the great work of redemption of fallen man by a "sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction, for the sins of the whole world." Of proofs of the true Sonship of Jesus far the best is St. Luke 2:41-52, where Jesus testifies Himself who is His Father, clearly disowning Joseph as such: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" He could not have said it more plainly, nor more delicately, telling the truth in the way most tender of His foster father's feelings, yet showing Himself fully conscious of His true relation to God the Father; and though Joseph and Mary did not, and could not then, "understand the saying which He spake unto them", His mother at least, if not Joseph, must have realized in due time that her son was indeed the God, her Saviour, in whom she rejoiced in the "Magnificat".

JESUS: SEVEN QUESTIONS—SON OF MAN OR SON OF GOD? WAS HE SINLESS? DID HE WORK MIRACLES? HAD HE POWER TO FORGIVE SINS? IS BELIEF IN HIM NECESSARY? DID HE RISE FROM THE DEAD? DID HE DIE FOR US? By Dr. J. Warschauer. Cloth. Pp. 302. Price, $2.50. The Pilgrim Press, Boston, Mass.

A book of more than ordinary import, calculated to attract the intellectual and doubt-plagued questioner. To the simple-minded, implicitly restful believer it could become a poisonous virus. Yet, every preacher would do well to digest it, since it sheds much light upon the position of those who espouse a departure from "the fettering shackles of an effete past". The author, skilled in scholarship, logically clear in deducting from the premises he assumes, displays a commendably reverent attitude towards the problems he meets in this treatise. On the title page we note the quotation from Dr. Burritt, "Christianity stands or falls, lives or dies with the personality of Jesus Christ . . . Its innermost doctrine is incarnate in the person of its Founder".

But we wonder if the issues raised may not be found lacking in vital influence. To show so laboriously that the Apostle John (if, as is questioned, he were the author of the Gospel that bears his name) did not presume to write history, but the rather to present a spiritual ideality; that the story of the raising of Lazarus and other events conspicuous in this New Testament book, did not actually occur, is to confound us. What is gained by the process? The author thinks much profit is secured.

The postulate of former days, that any Biblical book cannot be accepted until its authenticity is established, seems now to be tottering. The axiom, that no book of the Bible can be permitted unless its credibility be admitted, has been undermined and must fall into the fragments. The process comes perilously near to the ultra attitude of some who would suggest that we need not even believe that Jesus ever lived; that we have inspiration in the contemplation of an ideality in Christ which satisfies the spiritual longings of mankind in all grades of life as well as nationality. Annie Besant and Mary Baker Eddy can do that for us. If the scholars rob us of the historicity of St. John's Gospel, though they may accede to the fact of the Synoptics, we are bereft of a precious heritage, which no rationalistic compensation can restore. We cannot believe that the Holy Spirit to whom the entire sphere of inspiration is committed would suffer us to accept for centuries a book that concludes with the positive statement, "This is the disciple which testifieth of these things and wrote these things; and we know that his testimony is true", only to learn at this late date the utter emptiness of his soulful contention. If these words do not indicate history, then we have no basis for determining any ground of acceptance of historical testimony. Did our Lord connote this very entanglement in His prayer to His Father, "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes" (Matt. 11:25-27)? May there not be danger in a scholastic rope walking which has nothing but a balancing pole of intellectual poise.

Our author comes to the conclusion that Jesus was the Son of God in uniqueness, without the necessity of the Virgin Birth, "Jesus entered the world in the normal way". He casts off the ancient doctrine that in the physical body of our Lord resided two natures, Deity and humanity. He thinks He could not have been sinless, in the acceptance of the term by the historic Church, since, "In the last analysis, it is only the possibility of sin, even in Jesus, which constitutes the possibility of sinlessness". Yet, he reverently allows that Jesus did not sin. Miracles are in his judgment explainable on the ground of the susceptibility of the miracle-seeking age in which He lived. He claims that "they are not essential to the greatness of our Lord". We are thankful that he allows the power of our Lord in His earth-life to forgive sins. Though he protests that there cannot be two classes of humanity, the saved and the unsaved. The rather, "We see innumerable units struggling with more or less success, to realize their dreams of the best and most desirable ends". We thank Dr. Warschauer, that he demands unqualified faith in Jesus. And he cordially accepts the reality of the resurrection as the only basis of New Testament witness.

In the treatment of the problem of our Lord's dying for us, the many-sided aspects of the theological controversy are discussed. But one most important feature is absent. He would allow with many of his compeers that St. Paul cannot be an invention. This admitted, we dare not range ourselves in the ranks of those who regard that apostle as shackled by the Jewish superstition of the existence of antagonistic spiritual powers. It is in this very fact that he, as well as others in the New Testament, urge the essence of the power of the Cross to redeem mankind. From Weymouth's version, let us regard Colossians 2:15, "And the hostile princes and rulers He shook off from Himself, and boldly displayed them as His conquests, when by the Cross He triumphed over them". From Heb. 2:15, we have a similar testimony, "That through death He might render powerless him that had the power of death". In a word, we must protest that the essential dynamics of Calvary are bound up in our Lord's meeting us, as our Blood-Brother, the recognized Enemy and redeeming us by that potential act to the God whose will He came to do, in this as well as the other incidents of His dedicated life and mission. It is the slurring over of this event, in its particular relation to the divine intention, that is, the weakness of all this scholarly search for a new presentation of the old Gospel. Modernism has no patience with those who believe there is a superintending force of evil governing a world of spiritual darkness and rebellion. But the simple folk who dare not deny what has been "written for our learning", stand well in the prospect of the Judgment Seat, when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed. They at least will be saved the humiliation of the disapproval of God, who will scrutinize with penetrating insight and analysis this complacent disavowal of what He has so plainly revealed.

But as we close this notable book, rendered so, not alone because of its subject matter, but by the author's downright sincerity, and by his devoted loyalty to our Lord as he understands Him, we regard with gratitude his closing words, "We reaffirm emphatically that He is indeed the Son of God, the very Image of His substance, God manifest in the flesh; that He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin; we believe that no tale of wonder told concerning Him can do more than shadow forth His true and incomparable grandeur; that He has power to forgive sins; that we are saved by belief in Him; that the grave could not hold Him, but that He manifested Himself to His own again; and that He set the crown upon His earthly mission by dying for us".

ERROR.

Mr. Editor:

I beg space in your correspondence column for the correction of an error in the Church Annual for 1929.

My name should not appear in the list of "non-parochial clergy" as on page 256, but should appear as one of the staff of Grace Parish, Albany, New York, on page 254.

The facts are these. At a meeting of the Vestry held November 5, 1928, my rectorship of Grace Parish, which had continued for twenty-nine years and seven months, was terminated by the acceptance of my resignation. At the same meeting the Rev. Walter F. Hayward, Jr., was elected to the rectorship, and at an adjourned meeting on November 12 he accepted his election, and thereupon I was elected to be associate rector and I have accepted.

The present rector, the Rev. Walter F. Hayward, Jr., had served Grace Parish as associate rector since 1926; and he and I have now changed places; while I continue on the active list and officially attached to Grace Parish.

Mr. Editor:

I think The Southern Churchman is gradually working itself into the hearts of our Church people.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely your,

"ANGLO-CATHOLICS."

Mr. Editor:

There was recently held in New York City a "Catholic Congress", composed of bishops, clergy (including orders of Monks) and laity, who are engaged in the effort to introduce into the Church the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament, the doctrine of the Real Presence, Auricular Confession, Worship of Images and Relics, Invocation of Saints, etc., all contrary to the Articles of Religion, which Articles the "Anglo-Catholic" Party attempted to have scrapped in the General Convention, without success.

During that "Catholic Congress" circulars were distributed reading as follows:

"The Living Rosary of Our Lady and St. Dominic."

Queen of the Most Holy Rosary, Pray for us.

A sodality of Anglo-Catholics, founded in October, 1905, having for their object furtherance of devotion to Our Blessed Lady by means of the Holy Rosary. It is so called because of its organization, by which fifteen persons associate themselves together in groups and the fifteen mysteries of the Rosary are distributed among them, each group undertaking to recite daily the decade assigned. In this manner the entire Rosary is practiced each day by every complete circle of fifteen members.

The sodality exists to encourage the faithful in the recitation of the Rosary and to bring its knowledge and use into the lives of others. There is no devotion that teaches the Incarnation so profoundly as does the Rosary, or which nurtures so perfectly a Catholic tone and mind, besides enabling us to give Our Lady that regular and constant devotion which is due to her as our Queen and Mother.

The mother branch of the sodality is in London, with members throughout the entire world. The Living Rosary has a large membership and has come to enjoy a favorable position among the devotional guilds of the Church of England. The movement is still young in the American Church, but the organization here has already progressed so favorably that the American branch was granted autonomy in October, 1927. American Rosarians are to be found from Coast to Coast, as well as in several foreign mission fields. Wards of the sodality have been established in England, Australia and America.

Rules or Obligations.

1. To say daily the decade of the Rosary as appointed by the Quarterly Intention card.
2. To receive Holy Communion on the Feast of the Most Holy Rosary, October 7, or alternately on the succeeding Sunday.
3. To hear Mass on St. Dominic's Day, August 4.

It is the duty of Rosarians to conform to the practices of the Universal Church, especially with regard to Fasting, Communion and Sacramental Confession; as well as in attendance at Mass on all Sundays of the year and Holy Days of Obligation.

The fee upon joining is $1.50 for lay Rosarians; $1.00 for Priest Rosarians and Seminarians. Thereafter the annual dues are 50 cents a year, payable October 1. When the bi-yearly reports are issued, there is a charge of 25 cents for copy of the report.

The sodality has for distribution Dominican Rosaries with reliquary Crucifix, made and blessed at the Dominican Monastery of Santa Sabina, in Rome. The beads from which these Rosaries are made are taken from the fruit of the plant commonly known as 'Thorn of Christ'. Enclosed in the Cross is a little piece of wood of the orange tree which, pious tradition says, was planted by St. Dominic in the Convent Garden of Santa Sabina. The use of this particular Rosary is not obligatory, but sodalists frequently wish to possess one, and we earnestly recommend its use. The Rosaries are not 'sold', commercially, but an offering of $1.00 is asked to cover our cost of bringing them to this country.

Applications for membership should be sent to the Secretary-General. Upon enrollment the new member receives the manual, copy of report, intention card, medal and ribbon.

Officers of the American Branch:

Rev. Jusserand de Forest, Chaplain-General,
26 St. James Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Miss Virginia Yerger, Secretary-General,
1217 South Fifty-second St., Philadelphia, Pa."

"Rosarians" are told that they are to conform to the "practice of the Universal Church". What do they mean by the "Universal Church"?

Mr. de Forest is listed as a clergyman ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church, sworn to conform to its doctrine, discipline and worship.

In the expression, "Queen of the Holy Rosary, Pray for us", we have concrete evidence that this Society, fostered by the "Anglo-Catholic" party, is teaching prayers to, and worship of, the Virgin Mary.

What is the connection between this "Living Rosary of Our Lady and St. Dominic" and the Roman Catholic Convent of Santa Sabina, in Rome, whereby the Society is able to procure these "Holy Rosaries"?

Are Societies of this kind, secret and otherwise, to be permitted to multiply in the Church? Are Monks and Sisterhoods to be allowed to continue to teach Roman Catholic doctrines in the Church? Is there no remedy for this sort of thing? If the bishops and clergy of this Church are not in accord with this kind of propaganda, why is it that we hear of no steps on their part to put an end to it?

Do the laity of the Church propose to sit supinely by and see this Romanizing process continue until no vestige of the Protestant Episcopal Church is left? The laity have it within their power to stop this whole Romanizing process very quickly if they care enough about the Protestant Episcopal Church and have the courage to do so.

For many years it has been the custom of the General Convention to make an appropriation for the work of the American Bible Society, but at Washington this was omitted, on the ground that the Church was financially unable to continue it.

When we find the "Anglo-Catholic" party collecting a fund of half a million dollars to spread its Romanizing propaganda in the Church; when we find the "Living Church", the leading organ of the "Anglo-Catholic" party, raising a very large endowment fund; when we find money being expended for the purchase of "Reliquary Crucifixes" blessed in a Roman Convent; and when we find the Church saying that it cannot devote a single dollar to aid in the printing and distribution of God's Holy Word, it is time for Protestant Episcopalians to stop and think. Plenty of money for expenditure in the spread of Roman doctrines and ceremonies in the Church, but not a cent for the American Bible Society!

Of course, if Protestant Episcopalians are satisfied with this sort of thing, well and good; but if they are not, there is just one thing to do and that is to organize promptly and make it perfectly plain that nothing of the kind will be longer tolerated in this Church.

Is the Protestant Episcopal Church worth enough to you, Mr. Layman, to preserve it from those who would Romanize it? If it is, NOW is the time to act; not after the control of it has passed into the hands of the "Anglo-Catholics".

Department of Missions.

Twelve of the twenty members of the Department of Missions were present at its meeting on December 11.

The Executive Secretary reported the following matters, among others:

The purchase of a new site for St. Stephen's Chinese Mission, in Manila, the money being provided in part by the Chinese congregation and in part by a legacy of a friend in Pennsylvania.

The election of the Rev. P. Lindel Tsen of the Diocese of Anking to be Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Honan.

The satisfactory operation, without registration, of St. John's University and St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai, and a number of schools in other parts of the missionary district of Shanghai.

The return of St. Paul's Church, Nanking, to the custody of the Chinese pastor and congregation. As soon as the transfer was effected, members of the congregation personally undertook to clean the church which had been seriously defiled during its occupation by the military.

The Porto Rico and Southern Florida Hurricane Emergency Fund has reached a total of $99,000.

In the Domestic Field, authorization was given for the appointment of a chaplain at the Church tuberculosis sanitarium at Tucson, Arizona.

Changes in the mission staff included the appointment of Miss Minnie J. Nixon for North Dakota; Deaconess Dorothea Betz for Western Missouri; Miss Martha Justice for Western North Carolina. Deaconess Margaret Peppers was transferred from the Philippines to the Diocese of Olympia. Arrangements were made for the temporary employment in the field of four young women for Arkansas, New Mexico, Quincy and Spokane.

In the foreign field, preliminary consideration was given to proposals with regard to participation of Boone University in a union institution, to be located in the Wuhan cities known as the Central China University. A committee was appointed to confer with the representatives of other institutions. Meanwhile, the Bishop of Hankow was authorized to continue the experiment approved in 1924, operating Boone University as an affiliated unit in the Central China University.

Rev. W. F. Madeley was appointed Treasurer of the Missionary District of Tohoku.

Upon the request of Bishop Graves and Dr. Pott, Dean W. Z. L. Sung, Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences of St. John's University, was appointed acting vice-president.

Miss Frances E. Jean, of Harrisburg, was appointed for the District of Kyoto, to be stationed at St. Barnabas' Hospital, Osaka.

The Rev. W. H. Bierck, of the Diocese of Albany, was appointed for service among the Igorot people of the Philippine Islands.

The resignations of Miss Sophia Igo from the District of Hankow and Deaconess Theodora L. Paine from the District of Shanghai were accepted. Deaconess Paine retired on account of ill health after twenty-three years of service. When informed of the necessity for her resignation Bishop Graves wrote:

"You have always been most loyal and I do not recollect that in all the years and in the various changes of work and sometimes troublesome circumstances at one station or another you have ever given me the least trouble or anxiety, except that I have sometimes thought that your self-denial was pushed farther than it ought to have been in the interest of your own health."

A suitable retiring allowance was provided for Deaconess Paine.

New England Conference on Christian Unity.

In the opinion of the World Conference on Faith and Order at its sessions in Lausanne, Switzerland, August 3-21, 1927, and in the opinion of its Continuation Committee, it is most desirable that local conferences be held in many centres, under independent auspices, for continuing these studies begun at Lausanne. The object of such discussions is "the clear statement and full consideration of those things in which we (Christians) differ, as well as of those things in which we are at one".

At the request of the Continuation Committee, members of the Lausanne Conference and other persons resident in New England met three times in May, 1928, and again in October to arrange for a New England Conference. Invitations were issued to representatives in six states of the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Methodist, Presbyterian, Reformed, Seventh Day Baptist, Unitarian and Universalist Churches, the Society of Friends, the Church of the New Jerusalem and various united, nondenominational and federated bodies. The membership included bishops, clergymen, missionaries, professors and laymen and women.

The Conference was called to order at 2:30 P. M. on Tuesday, November 20, 1928, in Trinity Parish House, Boston, by the Rev. Edward M. Noyes, D. D., Chairman of the Program Committee.

The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr., of Philadelphia, delivered the opening address in explanation of the object of the Conference.

The Rev. Frederick A. Wilmot, Religious Editor of the Providence Journal, followed with a stereopticon lecture on the subject "What Happened at Lausanne".

In the evening of Tuesday, November 20, a public meeting was held in Trinity Church. The Rt. Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D. D., conducted the devotions and introduced the speakers of the evening, the Rev. Morris H. Turk, D. D., whose subject was, "Approaches to Unity", and the Rev. James L. Barton, D. D., "Unity in the Mission Field".

During the morning of Wednesday, November 21, in accordance with the rules of procedure, the Conference was divided into small round-table groups, each charged with the study of one of the subjects of the program.

As a part of its own calendar, Trinity Church announced a celebration of the Holy Communion at 12:10 P. M., which was attended by many members of the Conference.

During the afternoon two large groups consisting of all members who had been discussing the same subject met simultaneously and drafted each its own report.

In the evening the Conference in full session received those two reports, which after discussion and emandation were unanimously adopted.

On Tuesday evening and again Wednesday noon and Wednesday evening, meals were served for the members of the Conference in a private dining-room at the Hotel Brunswick, near Trinity Parish House. Rooms were provided in the same hotel for some of the round-table groups. The cost of meals to the individual members were reduced by means of gifts secured by a Boston layman. These meals in common were a great advantage, affording opportunities not only for social intercourse, but also for informal discussion of the subjects being studied.

At its final session, the Conference expressed its thanks to all who had cooperated in the arrangements, and voted to request the Program Committee to continue its work and to take steps for the promotion of similar conferences in other centres of New England.

The Two Reports: Report upon the subject What degree of unity in faith is necessary in a reunited church? unanimously adopted by the New England Conference on Christian Unity in full session November 21, 1928.

1. We affirm that our common experience of God through Christ is the basis of our fellowship as Christians.*

2. As Christians we recognize an underlying unity of believers in Jesus Christ.

3. We value the historic confessions of Christianity as witnessing to the realities implicit in Christian experience and faith.

4. In the divisions of the Christian Church we see the zeal of our forbears as well as the divergencies in race and temperament which are part of our historical heritage; but here in America with its fusing of race and tradition we believe Christianity has a rare opportunity to fulfil our Master's prayer that we should all be one.

*Some would add to the above: "and, as touching faith, should be a sufficient basis for a reunited Church."

Report upon the subject What constitutes a valid ministry for a reunited church? unanimously adopted by the New England Conference on Christian Unity in full session November 21, 1928.

We are impressed by the fact that there is not today a ministry recognized by the whole Christian Church nor can there be in a divided church.

The practical question before us, therefore, is not whether one ministry is valid and another invalid, since all our ministries share the limitations of the part of the Church Universal in which they are exercised.

Each step toward the union of existing churches must be accompanied by a step toward a ministry recognized and accepted by the churches uniting.

At present the difficulties in attaining this end are most evident as between Episcopal and non-Episcopal churches.

We recommend that steps be taken toward making the ministries of the several churches effectively valid for all.

1. Within non-Episcopal bodies, we suggest that in the ordination of a minister, the ministers of all the Christian churches of the vicinity be invited to attend and participate, and that, so far as possible, the minister thus ordained be recognized as an accepted minister by all the churches.

2. As between Episcopal and non-Episcopal bodies we commend for serious study the plan of union contemplated by the churches of South India, according to which full mutual recognition of existing ministries is accorded, with the understanding that after the union, the common action of the United Church in ordaining its ministers shall be expressed through Episcopal ordination.

Publications about the World Conference on Faith and Order may be had without charge from the Secretariat, P. O. Box 226, Boston, Mass., U. S. A. All interested in taking the initiative in establishing a local agency are requested to use the above address for printed matter and for names of persons who might collaborate in arranging and conducting such a conference.

The Church Congress.

The Executive Committee of the Church Congress has accepted an invitation from Bishop Page to hold the 1929 Congress in Ann Arbor, Mich. The dates are from Tuesday evening, April 30, through the afternoon of Friday, May 3, 1929.

The program is now in preparation, and a number of speakers have already accepted. It will be published later.

Memorial Service for Bishop LaMothe.

A solemn and beautiful memorial service attended by nearly 1,000 people recently was held in St. Andrew's Cathedral, Honolulu, for Bishop John D. LaMothe, Hawaii, who died in Baltimore, Md., October 25.

Not a seat remained in the church when the service began. Before the altar was grouped a beautiful flower offering symbolizing the absent bier of the late Bishop.

In the audience of the church were assembled Governor Wallace R. Farrington, many of the territorial dignitaries and also the majority of the clergymen of Honolulu. All had gathered to pay their last respects to a man who had served Honolulu in a spiritual way for seven years.

The music of the services was exquisite in its sorrowful beauty, being the "Death March from Saul", Handel; "Song of Sorrow", Balch, and Chopin's "Funeral March".

The lesson was read by Chaplain J. Burt Webster, Schofield Barracks. It was taken from the fifteenth chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians.

The service closed with a short speech by Dean William Ault. Dean Ault, in his speech, told of his seven years of acquaintance with Bishop LaMothe. He said:

"He was a good man. This in itself sums up Bishop LaMothe. This is no place for a sermon, for we have come to pay our respects to him who has been a real man of God and to his friends.

"He was a true counsellor to his people and a real father to his clergy. He was kind to a fault and yet just.

"Bishop LaMothe was one of those men who never did an unkind thing. He was deeply religious. He was one of God's greatest jewels—very rare—he was humble.

"He did not build up the fabric of the Church so much as the spiritual side of it. This is Bishop LaMothe's monument, his spiritual message to us."

An editorial in a Honolulu secular newspaper writes of Bishop LaMothe as follows:

"There is universal grief in Honolulu at the death of Bishop LaMothe. He was one who grew in power and influence with each year. Since his accession to the Bishopric of the Episcopal Missionary District of Honolulu and head of the Episcopal Church of Hawaii in 1921 he has had a pronounced influence for good there. A man of strong human feelings, a sturdy churchman, with a clear head and keen understanding in the necessary business of the Church, he won friends in all walks of life and among all religious convictions.

"Bishop LaMothe was an eloquent preacher. He was noble in bearing, had a wide knowledge of world affairs, broad sympathies, a splendid voice and those gifts of oratory which not only please but convince hearers. During the years he was active in Hawaii he increased the attendance and added many communicants to the Church.

"In civic matters Bishop LaMothe took an active interest. He belonged to a number of clubs and organizations operating for community welfare and he was a constant attendant at all of them. His voice was always raised to further welfare work.

"Now that he is gone, there can be heard on every hand words of appreciation for his acts of kindness and praise for his eminent qualities of mind and heart. Hawaii will long remember Bishop LaMothe, not alone for his eloquence in the pulpit and on the platform, but for the many good works which he originated and helped to support."

Church of England Revised Prayer Book to Be Published.

The Revised Prayer Book for the Church of England, twice rejected by the House of Commons, is to be published in the near future. There is still much controversy on the subject and many feel that the bishops are making a great mistake. Its publication was disapproved of by the House of Commons on the general ground that it brought the Church of England too close to Catholicism, but on the motion of the Bishop of Worcester the Central Board of Finance of the Church of England has authorized its circulation.

It will carry an editor's note, directed and drafted by the House of Bishops, explaining its origin and recent history in the Church Assembly and Parliament, and pointing out that its publication now does not directly or indirectly imply that it could be regarded as authorized for use in churches.

Nevertheless, those Angol-Catholic communions in the Church of England which desire to use the new book may do so.

Vestrymen Elected in Norfolk.

Several congregations of Norfolk held meetings recently for the purpose of electing vestrymen for the year of 1929. At a congregational meeting in St. Peter's Church, Brambleton, the following were elected to the vestry: C. W. Green, John B. Harris, L. W. Bunting, L. Guy, C. G. Brockenbrough, W. C. Hayes, G. T. Hardy, J. Webb, T. W. Thomas, V. B. Ayers, L. C. Burns.

Vestrymen elected at a meeting in Old St. Paul's Church were: William Egleston, Charles V. Cooke, Thomas A. Bain, Louis A. Kline, Dr. E. C. S. Taliaferro, J. Frank George, Calvert R. Dey, H. Clarkson Meredith, S. L. Slover, E. R. Clarke, W. C. Hanckel and Herman A. Allyn.

James Caskie.

Richmond mourns the death of one of her most prominent and beloved churchmen. After several weeks of illness Mr. James Caskie passed on to life eternal on the morning of Wednesday, December 19. Mr. Caskie was for many years vestryman of St. James' Church and at the time of his death he was the senior warden.

He was born in Richmond seventy-five years ago. Just a year ago he and Mrs. Caskie celebrated their golden wedding. He is survived by his wife and several nieces and nephews.

Dr. Bowie Elected Bishop-Coadjutor.

The Rev. Walter Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church of New York City, was elected Bishop-Coarjutor of the Diocese of Pennsylvania at a special convention held in Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, on December 18.

Dr. Bowie led the voting from the first ballot. His nearest rival was Dean Howard Chandler Robbins, of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York. The five other candidates nominated from the floor were the Rev. Dr. Gilbert E. Pember, of St. Michael's Church, Germantown; Dean Francis S. White, of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio, Dr. Allen R. Van. Meter, Executive Secretary of the Diocese; the Rev. Thomas L. Gossling, rector of the Church of the Advocate, this city, and the Rev. Harvey T. Walter, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Bethlehem.

Dr. Bowie's name was placed in nomination by Dr. George C. Foley, of the Philadelphia Divinity School, who is regarded as a modernist.

This convention was the third held for the election of a Bishop-Coadjutor since last spring. The Rev. Dr. Henry K. Sherrill, of Boston, and Bishop Edward M. Cross, of Spokane, Wash., were elected at the previous sessions, but both declined.

Dr. Bowie Undecided on Acceptance. Dr. Bowie, when questioned by the press, said that he had not decided whether he would accept the post.

"In any event, I will do nothing until I have been officially notified by the committee appointed for that purpose," he said.

Identified With the Modernists. The Rev. Walter Russell Bowie, D. D., is a native of Richmond, Va., and was the rector of St .Paul's Church of that city before coming to Grace Church. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D. D., of Massachusetts, as rector at Grace Church.

He received his A. M degree at Harvard in 1905, B. D. in 1908, and in 1915 Richmond College awarded to him his doctor's degree. He was ordained in 1909 and became rector of Emmanuel Church in Greenwood, Va.

Just before he came to New York he defended Dr. Percy Stickney Grant in the minister's controversy with Bishop Manning, and in 1924, in company with several other Episcopal rectors, he endorsed the work of the Rev. Dr. William N. Guthrie, rector of St. Mark's-in-the-Bowerie, after that clergyman had refused to withdraw eurythmic rituals from his services.

Mr. Bowie was also quoted by a New York paper as having followed Carl Reiland in his efforts to minimize the old creeds of the Church, and he is reported to have made some statement to the effect that our great creeds could be looked upon as the poetic expression of religious emotions, indicating a belief that members of the Christian Church are governed by physical excitement rather than deep-seated spiritual belief.

It thus seems to some of us that Dr. Russell Bowie has provided himself with somewhat of a menagerie instead of being content with a conservative menage.

New Rectory.

A new rectory for St. John's Church, Scranton, is about completed. In architecture it conforms to the Spanish architecture of the church building, which was erected a few years ago. When completed St. John's will have a very attractive plant to do an important work in a growing section of Scranton.

The rectory will be a memorial to Mrs. Mary A. Tolman, who left a legacy to the Bishop and Executive Council for some mission in the diocese. Mrs. Tolmon was the wife of the Rev. Marcus A. Tolman, who was for many years the President of the Standing Committee of the diocese.

Alabama Prepares for Crusade.

At a meeting of the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism, held at the Greystone Hotel, Montgomery, on the tenth of December, plans were perfected for conducting the Crusade in the year 1929.

The Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, gave the meeting the inspiration of his presence and counsel. Other members present were: Dr. G. W. Ribble, chairman; Dr. Richard Wilkinson, Montgomery; the Rev. V. C. McMaster, Birmingham; the Rev. E. W. Gamble, Selma; Hon. David W. W. Fuller, Montgomery; Mr. John Ebaugh, Birmingham; Mrs. Albert Wilson, Montgomery, and Mrs. D. E. Wilson, Woodward, present and past presidents of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

At the request of the Bishop, Mrs. D. E. Wilson had prepared a plan correlating the educational program of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Crusade on Evangelism in the diocese. This plan, containing many points of merit, was adopted with but few amendments, for the conduct of the 1929 Crusade.

Among other features it contemplates: a wider use of women leaders for the morning conferences; a careful previous training of both men and women of the diocese on the conduct of such conferences; the holding of at least nine district (group) conferences throughout the diocese, where this training may be secured; the afternoon and evening preceding the Diocesan Council, in January, to be devoted to Evangelism, with Mr. Leon C. Palmer as leader. Mr. Palmer has since consented to take charge of this part of the program. A definite number of shut-ins are to be enlisted as intercessors. Diocesan-wide preparation on a large scale is to be aimed at, not forgetting to give our young people a proper share in this enterprise.

Special emphasis is to be laid on preliminary and follow-up work, as the lack of these has proven to be the weakness of past efforts. The services of the Crusade are to last eight days, beginning on one Sunday and closing the next. These are to be followed by the "Open Confirmation Class" in each parish.

The Ministry of Laymen, by Leon C. Palmer, is specially recommended by the Commission for use in the morning conferences, as the chief emphasis this year is to be laid on lay evangelism.

An Unique Service.

An unique service was held in St. Paul's Church, Wallingford, Conn., on a recent Sunday morning. The rector, the Rev. Donald W. Greene, invited the Berkeley Divinity School to take full charge of the service. He announced to his organist and choir that they would have a Sunday off. He himself enjoyed the unusual privilege of sitting in a pew among his people.

The Dean of Berkeley, the Very Rev. Dr. Ladd, officiated. Professor Cline intoned the service. Professors Hedrick and James were in the chancel. The choir was composed of twelve Berkeley students under the leadership of Mr William Loane, who is in charge of the music of the school. The students sang the Gregorian chants and psalmody unaccompanied as they are accustomed to do in their daily chapel service. Two ten-minute addresses were given by students, Mr. Henry Mattocks of the Senior class and Mr. Donald J. Campbell of the Junior class. The Dean gave the notices and as it happened to be the Sunday before Thanksgiving Day he read the Governor's Proclamation. His twelve-year-old son, John, carried the Cross.

There was a large congregation present. That the service was found helpful is evidenced by the fact that the people have expressed the desire that this Berkeley service be an annual event. The rector appared before the New Haven Clericus recently to tell the members about the service and recommend its repetition in other churches. Berkeley has since received a number of invitations. Bishop Acheson has given his strong endorsement.

Balance Due.

This diocese told the National Council to expect of it for the year, 1928, $130,000. Receipts to December 1, 1928, are recorded as $92,519.48, which leaves a balance due of $37,480.52.

To Elect Suffragan Bishop.

At a meeting of the Executive Council of this diocese, held in Bishopscourt, Harrisburg, on Friday, December 14, Bishop Darlington expressed his desire for a Suffragan Bishop. The Executive Council concurring, a Special Convention to elect a Suffragan will be held in St. Stephen's Church, Harrisburg, on February 5, 1929. The new Suffragan will have jurisdiction over the mission stations of the diocese. At the same meeting, the salaries of missionaries working in the diocese were raised to a minimum of $2,100, with additional allowances for traveling expenses. This has been made possible by grouping into one cure adjacent mission stations.

A testimonial dinner was tendered Deaconess Christmas at Christ Church, Williamsport, on December 5, and a substantial purse was given her from her friends in the parish and city. The rector of the parish, the Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, was toastmaster. Among those represented at the dinner were the diocese, the Woman's Auxiliary, her Parish, the Church School, and the Social Service Bureau of Williamsport. George Harder, former chief of police of Williamsport, represented the civic authorities.

UNBROKEN STREAMS.

F. B. Stone.

The stream of time unbroken flows;
No New Year's pause it ever knows;
As daylight follows after night,
So doth the New Year come to light.

Our spirit-life unbroken flows;
No broken stream it ever knows;
The closing breath but it sets us free
And wafts it to eternity.

So time and life unbroken flow;
The how, the where, our God doth know;
Our times, we know, are in His hand,
And love fulfilleth His command.

A New Year.

A new year has opened, and many and sincere have been the wishes expressed that it may be a happy one. The oft-repeated wish has lurking within it the idea that circumstances may be such as to ensure happiness. But can circumstances, however propitious, do this for us? We think not. As it seems to us, happiness is dependent upon the newness of the year. But years are not really new. They are like those that are past. The same cloud and sunshine are over the same duties and privileges. Similar tasks have to be done, and the round of the common day, with the same old work, taxes both strength and patience. In this sense the year is not new. We must look for the newness elsewhere. The newness can only be found in new men, who put both hands heartily to the work of our common days. The new heavens and the new earth are waiting the coming of the new man. The New Testament is very careless concerning dates and times and seasons, but is supremely careful for the creation of the new man. It urges us to put off the old man, with his deeds, and to put on the new. It speaks of a new creation in Christ Jesus. It tells of a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Righteousness belongs to man, and not creation. So such a new earth can only be secured when men themselves become new. So a new year can only be had by new men, and happiness is contingent upon the newness of man.

This newness may be the experience of each and therefore of all. It consists in the deepening of our spiritual life, or, as we would rather put it, on the deepening of the life of our spirits. Spiritual life is given to us by God, who is Spirit. He gives it as fast as we live it. It cannot be ours any faster from its very nature, which is the expression of the human spirit to the Spirit of God. Life is fellowship. On the Divine side the possibilities of fellowship are limitless; but they can only be realized by us in proportion as we respond to and can enter into fellowship with God. The gift of such life makes new men, and new men have new days and months and years, and of this precious newness of life happiness is a by-product. A Happy New Year may thus be the most idle wish. It may be the most profound of prayers, and will be as it engages prosperity or soul, which is wealth.

The life of the Divine Spirit is beating all around us, seeking entrance for the enrichment and deepening of our lives. There are certain conditions, however, without which He cannot enter. There are certain established avenues of approach to be kept open by us as we seek God through them, and find He is seeking us. The door of human life must be opened from the inside.—Episcopal Recorder.

A Profitable Christmas.

Did you have a profitable Christmas? There is nothing commercial in my measure. Are you satisfied with the way things turned out for you? What did you get? What did you give? Why not take a Christmas inventory? We can honestly agree that "It is more blessed to give than to receive", and still admit that there is blessedness in receiving. But if blessedness means happiness, then you know that it is associated with receiving also; or you have been insincere in your notes and expressions of appreciative acknowledgment.

You got presents from home and friends; some that were wished for and some unexpected; some useful and appropriate and perhaps much needed. Revived memories and warmed affections. Cherished interest and love with them all; and some love, just as real and valued through the beautiful Christmas card. You got cheer, perhaps, in your loneliness; and new courage for difficulties; and comfort in sorrows or sickness.

And you gave in kind. No doubt you added to your friendly exchange of gifts and love, and remembered the needs of those who should never know the person, but should be none the less helped and clothed and fed and cheered by your loving interest in the welfare of the poor.

And you have missed the greatest value of your Christmas inventory, if you have overlooked or slighted the only real significance of the celebration which all your other gifts merely symbolized—the gift of Salvation.—H. Austaph.

A World Full of Overcoming.

It was Helen Keller, was it not, who, in answer to the lament that there is so much suffering and sorrow and misfortune in the world, replied: "Yes, but there is also much overcoming." The overcoming! That is the part which so many people miss. They see the hardship, the pain and sickness, the grief and disappointment; but they fail to see the marvelous heroism with which so many men and women meet and overcome these hard things. Helen Keller herself was a brilliant example of just such overcoming—indeed so brilliant that one hardly thinks of her blindness and deafness and dumbness because she has overcome them all so marvelously and with such grace and sweetness. We do not think of her as deaf and blind, but rather we think of her loveliness, her undaunted spirit, her incredible patience and persistence, her remarkable mastery of her misfortunes and handicaps. And so instead of becoming an example of the world's gloom and woe, she has become a luminous illustration of its overcoming and of the manner in which God can enable one to turn even the most hopeless of situations into beacons of strength and light.

And there is so much more of just such overcoming than most of us ever take time to think—indeed, than most folks ever know anything about. There is not a community which is not being enriched by it. Men and women who have met misfortune and met it bravely, who have suffered intolerable pain or disappointment but suffered it sweetly, who have gone down under crushing burdens but have gone down with a smile on their face and a sympathetic hand held out to those who were worse off than themselves! Homes that through long, long years have sheltered sickness or insanity, and where husband or wife or child or other loved ones have through an interminable length of time ministered with a devotion that is entrancing in its unbroken faithfulness and tenderness! Who has not seen such homes? Who has not been put to shame by such uncomplaining suffering, such loving ministry, such radiant gloom? How almost universal it is that in the very lives and in the very homes where petulance and glowering and complaining would be most justified, there we find most of sunshine and good cheer. It is only in the homes where sickness is of short duration, that folks complain and gall under it most. It is only where there is minor and passing affliction that there is resentment and bitterness, as a rule. Almost invariably in those homes in which sickness is a matter of long, wearing years, and in those individuals to whom misfortune is a life-time task, there is a marvelous amount of overcoming that gives sunlight and cheerfulness and a large measure of genuine happiness.

One of the things most to be regretted about life is that there are so many who do not perceive and appreciate this wonderful and beautiful overcoming that is taking place every day in the common life that is all about them. They are impressed with it in Helen Keller or some other outstanding hero, but they are absolutely blind to the heroic element which is constantly being infused into life by their own friends and neighbors. There is not a community which does not have some one whose life is such that if it were written up by some Dickens or O. Henry, the story would touch to the depths the very men and women who live near it day by day without once perceiving that it has anything peculiarly touching or admirable about it. Thus an incalculable amount of the richest and best part of life is going to waste—going to waste because it is unappreciated and unused by us whose spirits ought to be enriched and purified in its presence. There is scarce a community which does not have at least one home in which for years and years some poor unfortunate cripple or some infinitely more unfortunate mental defective has been shut within its four walls. The pathos of it, the heartache and strain of it, are beyond human language. And yet what marvelous overcoming—overcoming on the part of the loved ones who minister with such faithful tenderness even more than on the part of the afflicted. But how few of us ever realize that these are heroes made out of common clay and before our very eyes? And how rarely ever do we speak a word of admiration and encouragement either to the afflicted or to those who wait upon them, or spend a cheerful hour with them to light them on their hard way? Thus we rob them of the help and strength our presence and friendship could and should give. And we rob ourselves of the spirit and benediction that fall like the refreshing dews of heaven from the lives of those who are overcomers. One of the most illuminating and enheartening studies of Scripture is to trace out how many and varied are the promises which God has made to him who overcometh. It is a compensation which inheres in the here and now as well as in the everlasting future, and it lifts life out of the sordid and the common and puts radiance into it. And no one can understand the world's life, nor be fit for the everyday life that is around about him, until he has learned to perceive and participate in its overcoming. How much glorious overcoming there is!—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

As the Year Ends.

It is characteristic of the clock to mark the seconds of each day with clicks and the hours with strokes upon a bell. Thus time is cut into pieces and a human view of living is presented. For men and women neither easily nor willingly encounter bigness, greateness, continuance, everlastingness. We think of life as so many years; we date experiences; we celebrate anniversaries; we mark the advent of new years.

It would seem that God is always urging us to put pieces together, to trace connection, beginnings, foundations, threads woven into fabrics, acts given relationships to fixed plans and to purposes everlasting. In the past He reveals a pattern, in the future a destiny. The hour is a part of a day, the year of a period. The brick is part of a wall, the grain an item of a harvest. A thought is the basis of a deed, the individual is one of a multitude. True, only with Him is a day as a thousand years and a thousand years as a day. Yet it is not the least of the signs of His contact with us that we are taught by Him to search for the higher, the broader and the deeper meanings of our experiences. Discontent with being small and alone can have an origin that is divine.

Year ends and year beginnings have a meaning other than a calendar gives them. They illustrate a human weakness, by which we chop life into unrelated parts and refuse to see the connections we have with the past and the responsibilities that rest upon us for the future. How can the whole be greater than the parts unless the parts are united to form the whole? How can the Kingdom of God be extended unless its citizens combine to project the powers they each have? How can the Christian Church proclaim universally the message committed to its charge unless its members form themselves into the groups that heralds the testimony, "Believe in Jesus Christ and be saved"?

For The Southern Churchman.

DEAR LORD.

Maude Mumma.

Give us courage that will not quail
Before the tasks of life;
Give us a faith that will prevail
Through every change and strife.

Give us a love that will endure
Though tried by every test;
Give us a trust, in Thee secure,
And then in Heaven—rest.

The Communion of Saints.

To use the words of our Creed, "We believe in the Communion of Saints", and so we believe that we are even now united with those who have left this earth, and that we share with them Divine gifts, and hopes, and prayers; and we believe also in "the Resurrections of the body and the Life Everlasting", and so believe further that we with all those who have departed this life in God's faith and fear will one day have together our "perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul in God's Eternal Kingdom". The pain to the living is that death separates them from those whom they love. Hence the fact which removes the pain or rather makes it endurable, is that truth of our Christian faith—that the dead, though separated from the body of their flesh, are not separated from the Body of Christ, and in consequences that the dead though they are lost to our sight, though as far as our senses are concerned, they have entirely departed from us, are really in the closest union with us through Him into Whose Presence they have gone. We and they remain members in one body; where then is the separation? The union and communion is real and eternal. The dead are with Christ, and Christ is not in the grave. Christ's words to the penitent thief—they are spoken to all those who sleep in Him—Today, He says, not at the last day—as soon as thou leavest earth, not after many days, but, Today thou shalt be with Me in Paradise. With Me in Paradise, in Christ's bosom, not in Abraham's as the Jews thought. Naturally we regard the graves of our dead with a tender interest, we look after them with an affectionate and pious care. But it is unwise, it is unbelieving to identify those who have passed away with those corrupting bodies. No, as Christians, we can think of them in no other way than with Christ in Paradise. (Taken from the Church Kalendar.)

"He Set My Foot Upon a Rock."
(Ps. 40:2.)

I remember at Stonehaven, when I was minister there, I was swimming out in the clear, cool bay, when the water got suddenly choppy, and my strength seemed suddenly to go from me. You that are swimmers know the sensation. Exhausted, the waves flapping on your face in repeated blows as if to stun you, and beat you back to the current that was ready to seize you. No one in sight. Wearily on and on; but you know you are making little or no progress, and the feet and body go deeper in the water. You cannot swim any longer; you have lost the power of prostration and progression, and you are now erect and merely paddling with your hands.

I had almost given up, when suddenly there came to my foot the sensation of solidity amid the waves. Oh, what I felt as I stood there to recover breath, rescued from death! How solid the rock felt! How I thanked God that the rock had just been placed out in the bay for me, and that He had taken my sinking feet and fixed them there. That is the nearest that I can give to the sensation of the soul when Christ lays hold of you, saves you, and sets your feet on the Rock of Ages.—John Robertson.

No Patchwork.

God never repairs. Christ never patches. The Gospel is not here to mend people. Regeneration is not a scheme of moral tinkering and ethical cobbling. What God does, He does new; new heaven, new earth, new body, new heart. "Behold, I make all things new." In the Gospel thus we move into a new world and under a new scheme. The creative days are back again. We step out of a regime of jails and hospitals and reform shops. We get live effects from God. That is the Gospel.

The Gospel is a permanent miracle—God at first hand; that is a miracle. The Gospel thus does not classify with other schemes of amelioration. They are good, but this is not simply better, but different, distinct. It works in a "new" way, and works another way. Compare the chains riveted on the demoniac and the Divine mind working a new creation in the demoniac. It is all there. It is like the difference between the impotent Persian lashing the turbulent sea with chains and the gracious Lord saying to the troubled sea, "Peace, be still!"—C. H. Parkhurst, D. D.

THE HARBOR OF HUSHABY HO.

When the winds wind out with a hi, ho, hum,
At the edge of the Hushaby Sea,
And the Hushaby waves they strum and strum
With a tender melody.

Then soft and soft while the shadows spin
And the poppy sun swings low,
The little toy boats sail in, sail in,
To the Harbor of Hushaby Ho.

Little toy boats that children set
Tossing atop the sea,
Lost and weary and worn and wet
And tired as tired can be—

One by one while the waves they strum
And the day goes down like a sail,
The little toy boats with hi, ho, hum,
Rock home on the Hushaby trail.

And some they limp with a frightful limp,
And some have lost their twine,
And some have never a sail to swimp,
And some are choken with brine;

But safe at last when the shadows spin
And the poppy sun swings low,
The little toy boats sail in, sail in
To the Harbor of Hushaby Ho.

A LITTLE PRAYER.

That I may not in blindness grope,
But that I may with vision clear
Know when to speak a word of hope
Or add a little wholesome cheer.

That tempered winds may softly blow
Where little children, thinly clad,
Sit dreaming, when the flame is low,
Of comforts they have never had.

That through the year which lies ahead
No heart shall ache, no cheek be wet,
For any word that I have said
Or profit I have tried to get.

—S. E. Kiser.

Christmas is Everywhere.

David and Betty Martin with their father and mother were on a fast train racing west across the continent from Boston, to spend Christmas with Grandmother Martin in California. Mr. Martin, when he found he had an unexpected month for holiday in mid-winter, had broached the plan with the enthusiasm of a small boy.

"Let's pack in a flash!" he urged. "Nobody needs new clothes. If we start tomorrow night we'll get to grandmother's the day before Christmas. I'll telegraph that we're coming! I'll even gather up Christmas presents to go around, first thing tomorrow morning. 'Tisn't much of a job to pack, is it?"

Mrs. Martin smiled. "Oh, no! Nothing—to pack for four people at a second's notice. But we'll go!"

"Think of letting the youngsters go out before breakfast to gather roses and oranges for the breakfast-table!" exulted Mr. Martin. "David! Betty! Come here. How would you like to have a battle of rose-leaves on Christmas morning this year instead of a snow ball fight?"

That was the way it happened, and now here they were, the whole family, whirling over the very map that David and Betty had studied in school, and only two more days to grandmother and a summery Christmas in flowery Santa Barbara by the sea. Up through the gorges of the Rocky Mountains, which looked like home in their blankets of snow, down into the warm Western valleys, and all thoughts of blizzards would be left far behind. But that very evening as the children pressed their noses against the cold window-panes they saw the dusk begin to fill with snowflakes, larger and larger, faster and faster, and that very night they suddenly awoke with a feeling that something was wrong. What was it? Why, the train wasn't moving, was standing stock-still right at nowhere! No lighted station outside, no swinging lantern signals, no hurrying of brakesmen's feet on the platform.

"David!" Betty poked her head up into David's upper berth. "You awake, David? Why don't we go? We've stopped ever so long!"

At that, father, fully dressed in the middle of the night, parted the berth curtains, and said, laughing: "Snowed in—that's what we are! A regular western blizzard is howling outside, and the train can't budge. We've been here two hours now and may not get out till daybreak, when the snowplow is expected."

But at daybreak no snowplow appeared, nor yet at dusk. "Worst blizzard in ten years!" the conductor said. "No need to worry. Plenty of food in the dining-car and we are bound to get out soon—"

Next day the sun rose over a glittering world. Tall, snow-blanketed pines lifted their heads to the bluest of blue winter skies. Diamond icicles fringed the car roofs from engine to the rear platform. But hours and hours had gone by, and it was the day before Christmas—and sunny Santa Barbara? It couldn't be reached in time.

"That clump of cabins?" the conductor said to David, who was pointing to a scene that the sheets of blowing snow had hidden. "That's the Golden Mine. Looks like a Christmas card, with the smoke curling out of the chimneys of the snowy houses, doesn't it? No, it isn't far. The men'll be down pretty soon, you'll see. 'Tisn't often they get a chance to talk to any one but themselves. Nice lot they are, too."

Sure enough, in less than half an hour twenty burly young miners snowshoed down the white slope to the train, and David, his cheeks glowing like apples in the cold air, and his eyes glowing like stars at the chance of talking to a real Rocky Mountain miner, attached himself at once to their group in his own friendly way.

Mother smiled as she looked out the window, and even as she watched, David laughed joyously and ran for the car, calling to his new acquaintances over his shoulder: "Just wait; I'll ask!"

"Father!" he cried, drawing him across the car, and an excited conversation in whispers followed.

"No, I didn't ask!" said David. "They suggested it, truly they did. They said they'd like it better'n anything, only they didn't know whether we'd like it."

"We?" from father.

"Yes, everybody on the train, that's what they said, father. Aren't many passengers, you know. Only two in this car besides us. They said they'd drag up the women and children in sleds, yes, truly they did, but they won't drag me! I guess not! I'll drag mother and Betty! Oh, father, say yes!"

"Well," was father's answer, "the conductor does say we can't get out of here for another twenty-four hours."

So it came to pass that an expectant stir spread through the stalled train, and every one was alive with excited preparation. White-capped cooks in the diner cooked all day long, and such appetizing whiffs as blew out of the windows of their kitchen! Passengers, bundled and aglow with the mountain air, filled the baggage car and rummaged through trunks. And at four o'clock, down from the cabins on the mountainside came again the twenty young giants dragging light sleds over the snow.

"Nobody wants to ride but three little tots!" chorused the eager guests to their mountain hosts. "But we have a load for the sleds!" And to the amazement of the young miners, boxes and baskets and all manner of mysterious bundles were piled on the sleds in such array that the loads had to be lashed on. It was a laughing Christmas party that followed the young miners—passengers, train crew, cooks, nobody left out.

And what had the miners been doing all day? The guests soon found out.

"Celebration is in the mess-hall," said Mr. Scott, the manager of the mine, who, like a true host, had waited in his own domain to greet his arriving guests. "You have no idea what a pleasure it is to be able to have a Christmas party!" By a hearty hand shake he greeted each one, and then led the procession to the long, low log cabin which he had called the mess-hall. He flung the door wide, and the chattering guests stood silent in sheer astonishment. A fire of great logs roared in the stone fireplace, the rude mantel was ablaze with a long row of lighted candles, a Christmas tree—agleam with candles, too—filled one end of the long room, and a long table with three little lighted Christmas trees twinkling on it suggested a feast to come.

"Merry Christmas!" piped David.

"Merry Christmas! Merry Christmas! Merry Christmas!" The spell was broken, and in flocked the guests. Such a clatter of merry voices! Such bursts of infectious laughter! Such a mystery of unwrapping parcels and unpacking baskets until it was the turn of the miners to be bewildered at their tree loaded with all shapes and sizes of bundles and their feast augmented by stuffed chickens and cake and pies. The white-capped cooks had been busy to a purpose.

No, there was never anything like it, for hosts or guests, and you'll never know quite how jolly that Christmas Eve was far up on that Rocky Mountain slope unless you were one of the lucky passengers on that snowed-in train.

Hadn't the passengers sought through their trunks to good purpose, too? So it wasn't surprising that a present for everybody, large and small, hung on that glorious Christmas tree. And when, just as everybody at the long, candlelighted table had finished a wonderful Christmas dinner, who should knock sharply on the door three times but Santa Claus himself! Yes, Santa in a coon coat and low-drawn cap, and with a red muffler bundling him to the eyes!

"Merry Christmas!" he shouted. (His voice was surprisingly like the voice of the conductor.) "Not such a big family did I expect to find, but Santa Claus is never taken by surprise. A present and good wishes for everybody!" How the eyes of the three little tots who had ridden on the sleds did shine!

After the very last present had found its owner, the low cabin echoed to the ring of Christmas carols. Of course, everybody knows the same Christmas carols. Every one was so happy that no one knew how late it was getting, till the three little tots, quite against their will, fell fast asleep. In their mother's arms? No, each one was snuggled comfortably in the arms of a young miner. At parting there was a chorus: "We had the best Christmas in all the world!" Who said it? Everybody said it, guests and hosts; and the best of it all was, everybody meant it, to the bottom of their hearts.

That night when mother was tucking David and Betty in their berths in the sleeping-car, the children were too excited chatterboxes.

"Oh, mother," said Betty, "think how we felt just this morning—all disappointed because we couldn't get to grandmother!"

"Don't I wish grandmother could have been here!" said father.

"We'll have another Christmas when we get to Santa Barbara," mother put in. "You'll see. I know grandmother. She won't mind having Christmas two days late when she finds it was necessary."

"Won't she?" Betty went on. "Then we haven't one thing to be sorry about.

It was the nicest Christmas we've ever had, wasn't it? Everybody all together like that."

Mother gave her a sudden kiss, but said nothing.

"I'd like to be a miner when I'm big," said David. "I didn't know miners were so nice. Weren't they strong, mother? I don't know anybody at home that's that way—like outdoors, somehow. And—" a pause followed—"and, mother, isn't it funny, we thought we wouldn't have any Christmas unless we got to Santa Barbara, didn't we? And I think just the way Betty does, that we've had the best Christmas there is, don't you?"

"Indeed we do!" said father and mother in one breath.

Another pause. "Places don't make any difference, do they?" David went on eagerly. "We all felt as Christmasy way off here in the Rocky Mountains as we would if we'd been at home, or in Santa Barbara with grandmother. Why, mother," in a tone of great discovery, "it doesn't matter where we are, does it? Christmas is everywhere!"—Rose Breeks, in Zion's Herald.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS.

There were three little folks, long ago,
Who solemnly sat in a row
  On a December night,
  And attempted to write
For the New Year a good resolution.

"I will not make so much noise,
And be one of the quietest boys,
  Wrote one of the three,
  Whose uproarious glee
Was the cause of no end of confusion.

"I resolve that I never will take More than two or three pieces of cake,"
  Wrote Plump little Peter,
  Whose taste for the sweet
Was a problem of puzzling solution

The other, her paper to fill,
Began with, 'Resolved that I will—"
  But right there she stopped,
  And fast asleep dropped
Ere she came to a single conclusion..

Paddy Bear's New Year Resolution.

There was company at Paddy Bear's home. Auntie Bear and her son, Fuzzy, had come to spend Christmas and New Year's Day with Paddy Bear and his folks in the blue-black cave in the heart of the woods.

Every day, while Mama Bear and Auntie Bear "visited" with each other in the cave, Paddy Bear would take Fuzzy out to play. Fuzzy was bigger than Paddy Bear, and his play was often rough. When they rolled and tumbled around, he would bump into Paddy and hurt him badly. Paddy Bear, though, tried not to mind, and because Fuzzy was his guest, he always would let him choose what to play next.

That is why, on New Year's Day, when Fuzzy said, "Oh, I know what let's do—let's make New Year's Resolutions!" Paddy Bear answered, "All right, although he didn't know what a New Year's resolution was.

He was afraid Fuzzy might make fun of him if he asked about it, but he knew Mama Bear wouldn't tease.

"Wait a minute before we start," he told Fuzzy. "I want to go ask Mama something."

Then he ran into the kitchen of the blue black cave, where Mama bear was making bread.

"Mama," he asked, all out of breath from running, "how do you make a New Year's resolution?"

"Why, said Mama Bear, "If, on New Year's Day, you make up your mind to do something all the rest of the year that will make you a better little bear, or will help make some one else happy, you call that a New Year's resolution."

Paddy Bear thought, for a minute or two; then he ran back to his cousin.

"All right," he called. "I know what my New Year's resolution is going to be."

"What is it?" asked Fuzzy.

"Every day I am going to go down to the spring to get the water, so that Mama Bear won't have so much work to do."

"Humph!" said Fuzzy. "I don't think that's much of a resolution."

"But I am going to do it without grumbling," said Paddy. "That's part of the resolution."

"Well, I can make one a lot better than that!" said Fuzzy. "I am going to exercise every day until I'm so strong that I can push the big rock in front of my house right down the hill!"

"My," said Paddy Bear, "that is a blue black cave, where Mama Bear was fine resolution!" He felt ashamed he hadn't been able to think up something big like that. Just bringing up the water every day seemed like such a little thing to do.

But just the same, every morning, after Fuzzy Bear and his mother had gone home, Paddy would go down to the spring with his two buckets, fill them with water, and carry them back to Mama Bear. At first they seemed very very heavy. He had to stop two or three times, going up the hill to rest. After awhile, though, he could carry them all the way without stopping. You see, although he didn't know it, carrying that water was very good exercise, and he was growing stronger every day.

He would often think of Fuzzy Bear. "My, I wonder if he's grown strong enough yet to push that rock down the hill! I certainly would enjoy watching him do it."

Finally, Mama Bear and Paddy started out to visit Auntie Bear. Paddy could hardly wait until dinner was over and he and Fuzzy could go out to play.

"How's your New Year's resolution?" he asked right away. "Can you push that rock down the hill yet?"

Fuzzy Bear looked sheepish. "I didn't practice more than a day or two," he said. "It was too much work. I guess I could push it, though, if I tried."

He went over to the big rock, and began to push and tug at it, but he couldn't move it even a teency-weency bit. At last he fell back, puffing and grunting.

"It is not such a big rock, though," said Paddy Bear. "I believe I'll try it myself."

So he began pulling and tugging. And, would you believe it? Carrying that water up the hill every day for months had made his arms so strong that pretty soon—puff; pull! push—that rock began to roll down the hill!

"My, but you are strong!" cried Fuzzy, and Mama Bear and Auntie Bear, who had come out to watch, began to clap their paws.

"You see, it was a good New Year's resolution after all," said Mama Bear. "You've not only been helping me; you've been helping yourself, too."

"And you kept your resolution," Auntie Bear added. "It wouldn't have made any difference how good it was, if you hadn't kept on working over it after you had made it."

"Can you make resolutions any time but New Year's Day?" asked Fuzzy. "Because I want to make one right now just like Paddy Bear's, and I am going to keep it just as he did, too."—Child Life.

One New Year's Day.

It was the last night of the old year, and Reynold was going to bed. "I wish I could make some of those things Cousin Lucy and Cousin Esther were making," he said. "They are going to begin in the morning. Cousin Lucy is going to practice her music some and study arithmetic harder and keep her dresses cleaner."

"You mean resolutions?" asked his mother.

"Yes, that's it," said Reynold, "res-o-lu-tions. I want to make some res-o-

Aptness of illustration and directness of dealing make this book sure to appeal to the children themselves and also be of great help to all who work among the younger folk.

Dr. Alexander's power of concentrating on essentials has never been more forcibly shown than in this book. "Jessop's Bag," for instance, only occupies two pages, but it will undoubtedly form the "Talk" of many a speaker and be used greatly by preachers as a desirable illustration.

It is really invidious to pick out one in particular where so many are good. In fact the entire series may be summed up as a collection of gems.

lu-tions; but I don't know what to make."

"Well, let us think," said his mother. "What kind of resolutions would be good for a little boy six years old to make? You don't want to make too many. I believe, if I were you, I would make just one."

"Lucy and Esther make lots of them," said Reynold, "but they are big girls. One resolution would be enough for a little boy, wouldn't it?"

"I think it would," said his mother, "and I think that a whole year is too long a time to make resolutions for. If I were you, I would make one good resolution for one day of the new year—the first day—tomorrow."

"All right," said Reynold, "I will make one for tomorrow. What would you make?"

"It is your resolution," said his mother. "You ought to make it yourself. Anything that you want to determine to do the first day of the year."

Reynold thought awhile, and then he said: "I will mind you all day tomorrow."

"Very well," said his mother; "that is your New Year's resolution; don't forget it in the morning. Go to sleep now."

Then she kissed him good night and went out, and Reynold went to sleep. When he awoke the next morning the first thing he thought of was his New Year's resolution. He wondered if his mother had forgotten. She didn't say anything about it when he went down to breakfast. She didn't tell him to do anything, so he didn't have any chance to keep his resolution, but he never once forgot it until—who do you think came? Why, Great-aunt Prudence brought Reynold a pretty little willow basket full of cake—three kinds—chocolate, cocoanut, and fruit.

Reynold liked cake better than anything else. He was delighted when his aunt said the basket of cake was for him.

Mother gave Reynold a slice of the fruit cake, then she put the basket away in the pantry. A little while after Reynold asked if he might have some more cake.

"No," said his mother, "there will be cake for dinner; you must not eat any more of your cake today."

Reynold was just about to draw his face into a frown, when his mother looked at him so strangely that it made him think of his resolution. Then the funniest-looking smile chased the ugly frown from his face. Mother smiled, too, and nodded and gave him three pats on the shoulder that meant, "Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah."—Exchange.

Raggedy Ann and the New Doll.

"Oh, dear!" sighed poor old Raggedy Ann, in doll language, as she slumped down in the corner of the playroom where Nancy had thrown her the day after Christmas, "I wish Christmas had never come. Then we wouldn't have to stay here all alone, while Nancy plays with her new dolls and others toys."

"No," replied the roly-poly clown, "it isn't fair; but you must remember, Raggedy Ann, we were new last Christmas, and then we stayed down under the wonderful tree for a few weeks, too."

"And didn't we have good times!" cried Teddy Bear, with a weak voice, for his squeaker had been broken long ago.

"I suppose we are ragged and broken and in need of new paint; but if Nancy had taken care of us we wouldn't be in such a state," added Raggedy Ann.

"I suppose it is only natural for her to like the new ones best," went on the clown as he rolled over on his face, and then back again.

"Well, I don't care," said Raggedy Ann. "We are old friends, and she shouldn't desert us."

"Sh! Here she comes," warned Teddy And they all slid back into their places as Nancy entered.

"I don't see why you toys can't stay cleared up," began Nancy. "It hasn't been so very long since I had this playroom looking spick an span." And she propped poor Teddy up in one corner of the window-seat, where one of his ears, which was loose, flopped over in a most ridiculous manner.

"Why, where's Raggedy Ann? Oh, there you are. I'm surprised at you, Raggedy Ann, for sitting there on the floor." And she picked the rag doll up to smooth out the wrinkled gingham dress. How good she felt, and what a contrast to the hard body and silk clothes of the new French doll which had cvome this Christmas.

Nancy looked around at all the old familiar toys and thought of the good times they had had together. She thought, too, that she hadn't been any too kind to them at times. Then she remembered all the new toys downstairs under the Christmas tree, and with a hasty kiss on one of Raggedy Ann's faded cheeks she was out of the room.

Once more seated beneath the big tree with her treasures, Nancy picked up Rose Marie, who had come all the way from Paris, and looked at her for a long time. Then there was Baby Sophronia in the new chair, and Dorothy Jane in the doll-coach, and Sister Sue.. But Raggedy Ann was still upstairs.

Mother said I might send some of my toys to the Children's Home, Rose Marie," said Nancy slowly. "I thought it would be Raggedy Ann, but—"

And Nancy thought of the long, dark nights when poor mother had been so sick and Raggedy Ann had gone to bed with her and had been such a comfort.

"Oh, I can't give up my Raggedy Ann even for you, Rose Marie!" she cried. "You're beautiful, and I love you, but I love my dear old rag dolly best; so there! Besides," she went on, "I know the children at the home will love you, and they might not understand about Raggedy Ann. I guess, Rose Marie, they'll 'preciate you more, and I can 'preciate Raggedy Ann."—Our Little Ones.

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part: "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes: "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo.de War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes. "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work."

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past."

A profesor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiona touches me deeply."

The Charm of Winter.

To some people autumn and the early approach of twilight give feelings of sadness and gloom. They can not enjoy the beauty and sweetness and charm of cold winter to come. The rattle of coal into the neighbor's chute, the smell of preserves and pickles that loads the air and the chirp of the fall insects make the spirits sink. But to others the thought of long comfortable evenings by the fire, the concerts and lectures that winter brings, the bracing atmosphere after the languid hot summer and the wonderful sights and sounds of the dying year act like a tonic. Truly, "What is one man's meat is another man's poison", as regards seasons. Some are, like the race horse, at their best when the heat seems to scorch the earth, and they joyfully turn to baseball, strenuous water sports, hard work and pleasures that require exercise, while others find their greatest mental and physical joy in breasting a wind storm in November and feeling the tang of hard snow pellets on the cheek. One never-to-be-forgotten winter we had a brief vacation in the South, and I shall never forget the delight with which I faced a snow storm at home after that beautiful period of hot weather in Florida. It was the most glorious thing I could imagine, and nothing of the rest and calm of the summer could equal the thrill of the cold. And how delightful it is that we are not all cut over the same pattern in our likes and dislikes! The weather has such a variety in our zone that few people long for the monotony of polar snows or tropic heat. —Presbyterian Banner.

BUILDING FUND

ST. THOMAS MISSION CHURCH

SANFORD, N. C.

Our present church building is undesirably located in a mill section. It is a small, unattractive building, and we cannot grow until we move. We are endeavoring to build a new edifice in the residential section of the city, and now have the walls about six feet above the ground. As we have only about 18 or 20 communicants, it is absolutely necessary for us to secure help from our friends, in order to construct a building, that will be worthy of the name of our dear old church.

W. W. ROBARDS, Treasurer.

RAIN IN THE NIGHT.

I saw God wash the world last night
With His sweet showers on high;
And then, when morning came, I saw
Him hang it out to dry.

He washed each tiny blade of grass,
And every trembling tree;
He flung His showers against the hills,
And swept the billowy sea.

I saw God wash the world last night;
Ah, would He had washed me
As clean of all my dust and dirt
As that old white birch tree!

—Selected.

"Each year has brought us some sunny hours,
With a wealth of song and a crown of flowers,
We hail the new that has come to view,
Work comes with it and pleasures, too;
And even though it may bring some pain,
Each passing year is a thing of gain,

Frank W. Sterrett, was the ordinant. The Archdeacon of the diocese preached the sermon. The Rev. S. F. Custard, of Grace Church, Allentown, read the Litany. Dean D. Wilmot Gateson, of the Pro-Cathedral, presented the ordinand. The Rev. Harry G. Mershon, of Holy Apostles' Church, Saint Clair, read the Epistle, and the Rev. Gordon T. Jones, of St. John's Church, E. Mauch Chunk was the Gospeler. The Bishop celebrated.

The Rev. Mr. Trumbore is serving the missions at Canton and Troy.

In St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, on the Third Sunday in Advent, December 16, 1928, Bishop McElwain advanced the Rev. William J. Spicer to the priesthood. The Rev. A. E. Knickerbocker was presenter, the Bishop preached the sermon, and the Rev. J. W. Prosser united in the laying on of hands.

The Rev. Mr. Spicer continues as assistant at St. Paul's, Minneapolis, and in charge of St. James' Church, Minneapolis.

Nothing is too great to be sought in prayer. Nothing is too small to be weighed in the secret councils of the closet, and nothing is too little for its final arbitrament. As care comes from every source, so prayer goes to every source.—E. M. Bounds.

THE AMBASSADOR.

He held the lamp each Sabbath day
So low that none could miss the way,
And yet so high to bring in sight
That picture fair of Christ, the Light,
That, gazing up, the lamp between,
The hand that held it was not seen.

He held the pitcher, stooping low,
To lips of little ones below,
Then raised it to the weary saint,
And bade him drink when sick and faint.
They drank; the pitcher then between,
The hand that held it was not seen.

He blew the trumpet, soft and clear,
That trembling sinners need not fear,
And then with louder note and bold,
To storm the walls of Satan's hold;
The trumpet coming thus between,
The hand that held it was not seen.

And when our Captain says, "Well done!
Thou good and faithful servant come!
Lay down the pitcher and the lamp;
Lay down the trumpet; leave the camp,"
Thy weary hands will then be seen
Clasped in His pierc'd ones; naught between.

—Anon.

STAR O THE EAST.

Star of the East, that long ago
Brought wise men on their way
Where, angels singing to and fro,
The Child of Bethlehem lay—
Above that Syrian hill afar
Thou shinest out tonight, O Star!

Star of the East, the night were drear
But for the tender grace
That with Thy glory comes to cheer
Earth's loneliest, darkest place; or by that charity we see
Where there is hope for all and me.

Star of the East! show us the way
In wisdom undefiled
To seek that manger out and lay
Our gifts before the Child—
To bring our hearts and offer them
Unto our King in Bethlehem!

—Eugene Field.

A Prayer for Chrismas.

O Lord Jesus Christ, who tookest upon Thee to deliver man, and in whom alone is the world's salvation: Mercifully behold the earth in disquietude and the peoples in perplexity and fear; Rise, O Thou Son of Righteousness, with healing in Thy wings, and grant us deliverance and peace; who art with the Father and the Holy Ghost, God blessed forever. Amen.—From W. F. Faber.

C. L MARSILLIOT

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
Exchange Building
MEMPHIS, TENN.

My Dear Friends:

The fact of the success of our petition to the General Convention of the Church, asking it to vote down the resolution to do away with the Articles of Religion, is fresh in your mind.

During the General Convention three meetings were held by Protestant Episcopalians, gathered at the Convention, for the purpose of considering what was to be done to check the disruption being spread in the Church by the "Anglo-Catholic," or Romanizing Party. At these meetings addresses were made by able laymen, representing practically every section of the country. All agreed that the contest is really just beginning, and that, unless Protestant Episcopalians organize promptly for the defense of the Constitution, doctrine and worship of the Church, control of it will soon pass into the hands of the "Anglo-Catholics," inevitably followed by either a split or gradual disintegration.

The correctness of that conclusion is demonstrated by the announcement of "Anglo-Catholic" Clergy, in their Church papers, that they decline to be bound by the legislation of any Convention in which the laity have the veto power. That announcement by the "Anglo-Catholic" Clergy raises the flag of anarchy and rebellion in the Church, just as the same party has done in the English Church, which is now on the verge of disruption. It is either organize NOW and make it plain that the Romanizing program will not be tolerated in this Church or surrender.

It was determined at these meetings to form a National organization. The name of the National Church League, with seven thousand members, of which Professor E. E. Sperry, of Syracuse University, is President, was changed to "The Protestant Episcopal Church League," and this already existing organization is to be expanded.

Letters are daily reaching me from every section offering to affiliate with the League, and it is evident that the time has arrived when the people in the pews feel that a responsibility rests upon them to take action NOW.

The thirty-four thousand (34,000) signatures to the petition are being copied, and as soon as this is completed a circular letter, stating the purposes of the organization, will be forwarded to every signer, with request that he or she become a member of the League. To cover the cost of copying the signatures, printing the circular letter, envelopes, postage and clerical work, a fund of $2,500.00 will be necessary, and contributions to this fund are now being received. Any help that you can give in raising this fund will be used solely for the purpose above indicated. The Executive Committee of the League, consisting of busy men, is giving freely of its time and effort to the cause.

Remittances, payable to Rev. Alexander G. Cummins, Treasurer, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., may be forwarded to him or to me.

You are too well aware of the danger facing the Church to require any further statement of the situation.

Faithfully yours,
C. L. MARSILLIOT.
